Mr. MANN. And very likely Congress would have readily consented; but, not having that trustful faith in Congress which all officials ought to have, the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution or some one else, instead of asking the consent of Congress, asked and obtained an opinion that the consent of Congress was not required and that we had nothing to do with it. I do not know whether the same thing is true of the Agricultural grounds or not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is a provision in the sundry civil act approved August 24, 1912, as follows:

Hereafter there shall not be erected on any reservation, park, or public grounds of the United States within the District of Columbia any building or structure without express authority of Congress.

Mr. MANN. I understand, that is what I say, the law officer of the Government has held that the Smithsonian grounds did not come within that prohibition, and yet they ask us to pay the expense of maintaining them as public grounds. Let the Smithsonian Institution wake up and either fish or cut bait. If they have the jurisdiction, let them raise the money as they can.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We have absolute control over the grounds.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether we have or not. I think the Attorney General's office decided that we did not have. Of course, we always have sufficient jurisdiction over any grounds to appropriate money for their care and maintenance.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We have too much jurisdiction in that direction. I have not seen the decision to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. MANN. The question has arisen and been disposed of since this bill was reported.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I know at different times the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution discussed the fact that Mr. Frear intended to donate his very valuable collection to the Smithsonian Institution, and intended to make provision to construct a building to house the collection. The belief was that Congress would very gladly donate a place for the erection of the building.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of getting further information relative to the Mall. I notice that on the ground formerly occupied by the old Sixth Street Station, the building which was removed a few years ago by President Roosevelt, there are certain kinds of playgrounds there.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Public tennis courts.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What authority have the people who use them to have the courts established there?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Those are public tennis courts, provided by the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds under the authority which he has.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman is aware that after that station was removed there was quite an embankment upon the grounds, which was put there by the railroad company under an agreement, an old law, when the buildings were erected by permission of the United States Government on these grounds, and my understanding has always been, though I have not examined the law closely, that those grounds were to be restored to their original condition at some subsequent time. They certainly have not been restored. There is an embankment there five or six hundred feet long and several feet high, which constitutes an embarrassment, or, rather, places the grounds in a very awkward situation. I think the grounds should be restored to their original condition when the buildings were put there by the railroad company.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is a matter of administration. I know that possibly those things would be more efficiently attended to if I were doing it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does the gentleman know of any law by which that station was removed, or what became of it, or what authority existed at the time for its removal?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It was removed by order of the President. That was a very notable incident in the history of the Republic. The President of the United States by Executive order directed that that public building should be demolished, although no law giving him any authority to do so existed.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Should not the embankments about there at the same time also have been removed, so as to restore the grounds to their original condition?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I can not enter into that question.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I was trying to extort an opinion from the gentleman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is a matter of what the executive officers should do. All I can do is to keep them from getting too much money, without finding fault because they do not expend it. I am not familiar with that matter, I will say to the gentleman from Texas, and do not know whether the railroad company is under obligation to remove that embankment or not. The tennis courts which are now occupying the site of the old station have been placed there out of an appropriation carried in this bill by the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds and as a part of a movement to utilize certain of the public reservations for recreation purposes, and it was deemed that that would be a use that would be desirable.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the subject of pensions.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For care and maintenance of Potomac Park, $15,000.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question. Why is this particular appropriation in line 21 for the care and maintenance of Potomac Park carried in the sundry civil appropriation bill instead of the District appropriation bill?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The appropriations for the care of all of the public parks in the District of Columbia are carried in this bill because they are under the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds. The property belongs to the United States.

Mr. BENNET. There are certain parks, such as Dupont Circle and McPherson Square, that I have in mind, and I would like to know if there is any distinction as to them and if it is the fact that they do not belong to the United States while this park does?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They all belong to the United States, and they are all in this bill.

Mr. BENNET. But such parks as I have named, Dupont Circle and McPherson Square, do not belong to the United States?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They do belong to the United States, and they are carried in this bill. Some of the smaller ones are not named specifically, but there is a general appropriation. Lafayette Park and Garfield Park are named.

Mr. BENNET. Take Rock Creek Park. Is it because that is not owned by the Government that it is in the District bill?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The title to Rock Creek Park is also in the United States, but it is carried in the District bill.

Mr. BENNET. Is there any particular reason?

Mr. FITZGERALD. We carry in this bill the parks that are under the control and jurisdiction of the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. BENNET. Is that governed by some statute?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is a statute which designates what part of the parking system is under the control of that officer.

Mr. BENNET. I simply was struck by the fact that apparently all of this is in the District of Columbia, and that there was a District of Columbia appropriation bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is all under the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds, who is an Army engineer, and who has control. The policing of them is carried in the legislative bill. Of course, the cost of them is borne one-half by the District and one-half by the United States.

Mr. BENNET. So that the fact that they are put in the sundry civil appropriation bill does not relieve the District of paying for one-half of the cost?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not at all. There is a special provision that requires that expense to be borne half and half.

The Clerk read as follows:

For care and improvement of the portion of Potomac Park east of the railroad embankment, $15,000.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, page 77, line 2, the figures "$15,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$40,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Amend, on page 77, line 2, by striking out "$15,000" and inserting "$40,000."

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Chairman, the only purpose of this amendment is to accelerate the work of the improvement of Potomac Park east of the railroad embankment. I understand that $25,000 additional can be very profitably used this year. I do not care to discuss the amendment, but will ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULBERT. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman inform the committee what is the extent of the park that is east of the railroad embankment which will be affected by this improvement?

Mr. HULBERT. Well, that would be entirely in the discretion of the engineer.

Mr. STAFFORD. No; I am inquiring as to the extent of the area of Potomac Park that is east of the railroad embankment.

Mr. HULBERT. All of East Potomac Park is that portion which is east of the railroad embankment.

Mr. STAFFORD. I thought that was already improved, and that the area south was that which needed most improvement.

Mr. HULBERT. Well, of course, as you go east on East Potomac Park along the driveway there is a good deal of the park that has not been improved. The retaining wall has been practically constructed all the way along. The greensward is in a much better condition toward the railroad embankment than to the east end of this park. Toward that end the trees, shrubbery, and grass and, in some places, the weeds have grown wild, and I suppose it is for that part of the park that this $15,000 was appropriated. I understand, however, that the work has not been progressing as rapidly as it was desired it should, and that the purpose in view, of accelerating the improvements because ultimately, I take it, the entire provision, as recommended by the War Department in House Document 1038, is going to be adopted and that an additional $25,000 will be no great burden on the Government, and it will enable the performance of an amount of work for that particular park that can be expeditiously and economically done during the coming year.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the $25,000 additional permit the dredging of the contemplated lagoons or the erection of the stadium and the other improvements contemplated for this park?

Mr. HULBERT. I do not know; it would be in the discretion of the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. STAFFORD. I thought as the gentleman has taken this interest in the matter he would have some definite information as to what work was contemplated by the additional appropriation.

Mr. HULBERT. This $25,000 would be expended by Col. Harts in the exercise of his discretion.

Mr. STAFFORD. It would not go very far toward excavating the contemplated lagoons or the building of the proposed stadium?

Mr. HULBERT. Not a great ways, but it would be encouraging. I wish the circumstances of our finances were such that a substantial appropriation could be made and made directly applicable to the beginning of the erection of the stadium proper.

Mr. STAFFORD. When we are voting $20,000,000 for an armor-plate plant and $20,000,000 for a nitrate plant and $20,000,000 or $30,000,000 for shipbuilding, does not the gentleman think we could proceed with this much-needed improvement by increasing that amount?

Mr. HULBERT. I not only think so, but I will point out to the gentleman, if I may, that these needed improvements combine essential elements that you do not find in anything else that has come before the House. In the first place, the improvement of East Potomac Park not only gives Federal recognition to athletics, which we have been the one great country to neglect to date—not only gives great stimulus to the upbuilding of the American youth by encouraging him in athletic competition, but if you will provide us with the means we have been asking for at East Potomac Park by 1920——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HULBERT. I ask unanimous consent for an extension of five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HULBERT. If you will give us the improvements which we ask for, as a delegate to the Amateur Athletic Union of the United States of America, metropolitan district, I feel sure that we will be successful in bringing to this country at that time the Olympic games, which are not being held this year because they were appointed to be held in Berlin and, of course, it is realized that it is impossible to hold them there or anywhere else this year as there would be so few competitors from the few neutral nations that it would not be worth while to hold those games, and if we were to bring the next great Olympiad here in 1920 we would be performing a great aid to humanity, because you would bring here at the close of the war—and we hope the great European conflict will be over by that time—the representatives of every nation now engaged in the war which is raging over there, and certainly nothing could be more commendable than such an effort at that time. It would assist in reuniting the bonds of international fraternity which have been so torn asunder in this bloody conflict. [Applause.]

Mr. BENNET. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. HULBERT. I will.

Mr. BENNET. Does not my colleague hope that at least some part of this $25,000 will be expended by Col. Hart in advancing the building of that stadium?

Mr. HULBERT. I hope so.

Mr. BENNET. Then I am for the amendment.

Mr. HULBERT. I thank the gentleman. I wish more of my colleagues would evidence the same spirit and vote for it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will not be adopted. If it is adopted, not a penny can be expended on account of a stadium. This bill carries $5,000 more than is provided for the current year. This money is for the purpose of setting out trees and furnishing flower beds, and so forth, to East Potomac Park. East Potomac Park has been the special care of the Committee on Appropriations, which originated and developed and built it up. However desirable it may be to build a stadium for public games, there are many other more essential things to be done before that is commenced. This is not the time for its consideration. After careful thought the committee recommended what would be a liberal sum of money for the purpose for which it can be used. It is not suggested even by the man in charge of this work that $40,000 be appropriated.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman inform the committee what improvements will be covered by the $15,000 here appropriated?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Setting out trees and planting a part of the park east of the embankment, and nothing else.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will it get rid of the weeds and underbrush that covers most of the park at the south?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is a reason for it. It can not be done in one year. It could not be done wisely and economically by being done at once.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman does not contend that they could not get rid of the weeds in one year?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The first thing done was to extend the road around that portion of the park. Then the trees have been set out, and then plans have to be promulgated as to how the balance should be laid out. We treat these parks very liberally and very generously, and it would be a great mistake to try to force the development of this park in a manner that would not be best for the ultimate improvement of it. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Cox). The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HULBERT].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 24, noes 20.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HULBERT and Mr. FITZGERALD took their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 39, noes 33.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. Evidently there is not a quorum present, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Adair	Foss, Ill.	Kincheloe	Pou
Austin	Freeman	Kinkaid	Powers

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Cox, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having under consideration the bill (H. R. 15836) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes, finding itself without a quorum, he caused the roll to be called, when 290 Members, a quorum, answered to their names, and he reported the names of the absentees to be entered in the Journal, under the rule.

The SPEAKER. A quorum being present, the committee will resume its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HULBERT].

Mr. BENNET. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment again.

Page 77, line 2, strike out "$15,000" and insert "$40,000."

Mr. BENNET. I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the point of order that debate is not in order. The committee is dividing.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee is dividing. Debate is not in order.

Mr. MANN. There was no vote at all, because there was no quorum, and the Chair held that there was no vote. Debate is not closed until the negative vote is taken. Now, while we went through the motions of taking a vote, that was all set aside, for the reason that there was no quorum present. Debate has not been closed on this amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It has been closed. The committee divided, and then a demand was made for tellers. The debate had already been ended.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Chairman, we are involved in a case——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is inclined to think that debate has been exhausted.

Mr. MANN. The Chair is very much in error, then.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the Chair is correct.

Mr. MANN. Debate was exhausted, except on a motion to strike out the last word.

Mr. FITZGERALD. All debate is exhausted. We were dividing on the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Debate is in order, under parliamentary rules, after the affirmative vote is taken.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There was both an affirmative and a negative vote.

Mr. MANN. Oh, but that was all set aside, because there was no quorum present. That is the reason we are taking the vote over again. The whole proceeding was set aside, because the point of no quorum present was made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], which set aside the vote and vacated it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York insist on his point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do insist on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The present occupant of the chair may be in error, but he sustains the point of order.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit a request. This amendment is predicated on the theory of sportsmanship, and I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I object to any debate.

Mr. HULBERT. I am rising for the purpose of asking unanimous consent. I ask unanimous consent that I may have one minute, for the purpose of making a statement applicable to the amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlemen from New York will take their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 99, noes 101.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

To continue construction of necessary retaining walls in Meridian Hill Park, and grading incident thereto, $25,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This is an item of $25,000 to continue the construction of retaining walls for Meridian Hill Park. If there is a useless expenditure of money going on in Washington anywhere it is in the construction of that fence, uglier than a mud fence, on Sixteenth Street, as a retaining wall for Meridian Hill Park. But I suppose that, the House having just refused to make an appropriation of $25,000 for the improvement of a park where it would have been of great service, will proceed to spend $25,000 to erect what one might properly call a mud fence along on Sixteenth Street, where every dollar put into it adds to the ugliness of it. It does not do any good. The stone wall is of no value. You might just as well put a pig in a parlor as to put this retaining wall on Sixteenth Street.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to see that we have an addition to the art commission in the person of the gentleman from Illinois. The gentleman from Illinois is no more pleased with the Meridian Hill Park wall than the art commission is with some other work that the committee has inaugurated. Most of us think the building of that wall along the high embankment of Meridian Hill Park is a very great improvement. The only other thing that could have been done would have been to have cut the hill down some 20 or 25 feet at the highest point, which would have involved some expensive terracing. I am not sufficiently versed in that sort of thing so that I would want to make a decision as between the terracing and the wall, but I think when the wall is completed, and the other work for the development of the park, it will make a very handsome improvement, and I think when it is all completed the gentleman from Illinois himself will feel better about it than he does now.

Mr. MANN. I hope so. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman know how high the wall projects above the level of the ground at the north end?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not know that I do.

Mr. MANN. I did not suppose the gentleman had seen it. If he had, he would agree with me.

Mr. MONDELL. I have seen it. Does the gentleman know how high it is?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. How high?

Mr. MANN. About 3 feet.

Mr. MONDELL. Above the ground?

Mr. MANN. Above the level of the ground.

Mr. MONDELL. At the upper end of the park?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. It is higher than that, and I am willing to agree with the gentleman that up at the upper end of the park, the last 200 feet, after they get onto the top of the hill, there is ground for a difference of opinion as to whether that wall ought to have been built, but the gentleman was criticizing the entire wall.

Mr. MANN. And this appropriation is for that purpose. I did criticize the entire wall because it is so ugly.

Mr. MONDELL. They might have it painted.

Mr. MANN. Any kind of paint would improve it, but that is not the way to construct a wall.

Mr. SIMS. I want to ask the gentleman from Wyoming one question. The gentleman will remember that when Congress was induced to buy that hill to make a park, one of the arguments was that Rock Creek Park was too low and to far from heaven, and this was the highest point about Washington, and therefore nearer heaven than any other point in Washington, and it was bought because it was so high. I hope no gentleman will want to grade it down, because that would destroy the very foundation of the argument for its purchase.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. RIORDAN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 13670. An act amending an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes," relating to the authorization of fleet submarines;

H. R. 15007. An act to authorize the board of commissioners of Lake County, Ind., to construct a bridge across the Grand Calumet River, in the State of Indiana;

H. R. 15006. An act to authorize the board of commissioners of Lake County, Ind., to construct a bridge across the Grand Calumet River, in the State of Indiana;

H. R. 13669. An act to authorize the county of Wabash, in the State of Indiana, to construct a bridge across the Wabash River, at the city of Wabash, Ind.;

H. R. 7613. An act to authorize the Terral Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Red River, near Terral, Jefferson County, Okla.;

H. R. 393. An act to authorize an exchange of lands with the State of North Dakota for promotion of experiments in dry-land agriculture, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 11286. An act for the issuance of a patent for certain Government land to Benjamin F. Robinson and John Dows.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to bills of the following titles:

S. 1840. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a court of private land claims and to provide for the settlement of private land claims in certain States and Territories," approved March 3, 1891, and the acts amendatory thereto, approved February 21, 1893, June 27, 1898, and February 26, 1909; and

S. 733. An act providing for patents to homesteads on the ceded portion of the Wind River Reservation in Wyoming.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to return to the House of Representatives, in compliance with its request, the bill (H. R. 15282) authorizing the health officer of the District of Columbia to issue a permit for the removal of the remains of the late Charles H. Bingham from Congressional Cemetery, District of Columbia, to Lock Haven, Pa.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 13383) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917," disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. OVERMAN, Mr. LEA of Tennessee, and Mr. JONES as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

For improving the site of the old high-service reservoir, at the southeast corner of Wisconsin Avenue and R Street NW., which is made a part of the park system of the District of Columbia, under the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, $5,000.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. I want to know why this particular piece of ground should be made a part of the park system.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is an abandoned reservoir located in the northern part of the Georgetown section. With an expenditure of $5,000 it can be made a very attractive park. Provision is made to include it in the park system so as to put it under the care of the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. BENNET. Are there any buildings on the place?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; there is an old reservoir, very high, in the center, with quite a considerable lot of land around it. If improved, it will be a desirable place for the residents adjacent to this land.

Mr. BENNET. Will it make a real breathing place for the people?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; and there are no small parks in that section.

Mr. BENNET. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

One half of the foregoing sums under "Buildings and grounds in and around Washington" shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia and the other half from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. While the amendment offered to page 77, line 2, to increase the appropriation for Potomac Park east of the railroad embankment failed of passage, I desire to congratulate the committee on the fact that they have by the provision at the top of page 78, appropriating $50,000 for a field house, recognized the necessity for undertaking the general plan of improvement recommended by the War Department in House Document 1038 and provided for in H. R. 14905. In that connection I desire to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. HULBERT. The matter referred to is as follows:

AMATEUR ATHLETIC UNION OF THE UNITED STATES,
OFFICE OF SECRETARY-TREASURER,
New York, May 8, 1916.

To those interested in recreation and outdoor sports:

The Amateur Athletic Union of the United States desires your cooperation in a movement for a national recreation ground and stadium in East Potomac Park, Washington, D. C., the preliminary plans for which have been prepared by the War Department under the direction of Col. William W. Harts, United States Army. The Hulbert bill, of which a facsimile is shown on fourth page, provides for the construction of a national playground, with facilities for all pastimes, including a stadium. It will be a credit to our country and provide a place for holding national championships in all sports.

The accompanying diagram and detailed description shows how comprehensive is the plan for which an appropriation of $1,545,397 is recommended. You are earnestly requested to indorse this plan, and write or telegraph to your Congressman and Senator immediately, urging a favorable vote upon it.

Yours, very truly,

GEO. J. TURNER, President.
FREDERICK W. RUBIEN,
Secretary-Treasurer.

P. S.—A hearing on this bill will be held at Washington, D. C., before the congressional Committee on Appropriations, of which Congressman FITZGERALD of Brooklyn is chairman, on May 12, at 2 p. m.

A bill (H. R. 14905) for the improvement of East Potomac Park as a public recreation ground.

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $1,545,397 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to be made available as requested and to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War for the improvement of East Potomac Park as a public recreation ground, in accordance with the comprehensive plan approved by the War Department and set forth in House Document No. 1038, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session.

Transportation: Extension of the city car lines into the ground, with loops at the stadium and the boat harbor, near the field house. Stadium loop will be used on large occasions only. Ferries at the boat harbor and at stadium communicate with South Washington.

Stadium: The center portion has concrete seats for 6,000 persons, the two wings temporary wooden seats for 8,000 more.

On large occasions circus seats can be placed around the open end on the stadium to further increase the seating capacity.

The back slopes on the stadium are covered with trees, which furnish shade to the seats when the sun is low.

A one-third-of-a-mile running track with a 220-yard straightaway is partly inclosed by the stadium.

Bathing pools: Two sand-beach bathing pools of 1½ acres each, with locker houses accommodating 500 bathers at one time.

Wading pool: Between the bathing pools and near a 2-acre grove having swings, etc. Accommodation is thus provided for a large number of children.

Football: Two fields adjoin the stadium; they can be used for minor sports also.

Baseball: Thirteen fields are so arranged that most of them are provided with shade for the spectators; the backstops are made removable.

Parade ground: Sixty acres in extent and overlooked by the stadium.

Boat harbor: For the safe accommodation of canoes and other small craft, most of which would be kept in the four boathouses upon its banks; the one on the left would be a renting boathouse.

A channel connects with the Potomac River; it keeps the boathouse fresh and separates the quiet from the noisy sports.

Field house: Opposite the boat harbor and overlooking the golf course; it is provided with baths, lockers, and toilets, and has luncheon facilities and ample porches.

Croquet and Roque: Ten croquet and three roque courts located between the field house and the boat channel; spectators' seats are located between the courts.

Basket ball: Four courts between the field house and the tennis courts.

Tennis courts: Thirty-one courts located at the southernly side of the field house and boat harbor. They are inclosed by wire cages and provided with seats for spectators.

Croquet: There is a permanent field located near the river end of the boating channel.

Golf: One hundred acres, comprising an 18-hole course and a 9-hole course.

Straightaway for horses: One-half mile long and located on the Potomac side of the golf course.

Soft driving road: One and a half miles, between the boat channel and Lookout Point.

Park drives: Three and a half miles of border and cross drives.

Automobile parking: Parking spaces for 500 automobiles, located as follows: Between the railroad and the stadium, adjoining the football field, wading pool, boathouses, tennis courts, straightaway for horses, and at Lookout Point.

Horse shelter: Near the automobile park at Lookout Point.

Lookout Point: The southernmost point of the recreation grounds; provided with boat landings and shaded seats.

Picnic grounds: In the many groves about the grounds.

THE HULBERT STADIUM BILL.

[Extract from hearings before subcommittee of House Committee on Appropriations, consisting of Messrs. JOHN J. FITZGERALD (chairman), SWAGAR SHERLEY, WILLIAM P. BORLAND, FREDERICK H. GILLETT, and FRANK W. MONDELL, in charge of sundry civil appropriation bill for 1917, on the subject of H. R. 14905, a bill for the improvement of East Potomac Park, Washington, D. C., as a public recreation ground, May 12, 1916.]

STADIUM IN EAST POTOMAC PARK.

STATEMENT OF HON. MURRAY HULBERT, A REPRESENTATIVE IN CONGRESS FROM THE STATE OF NEW YORK.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen, you are here, I understand, upon the improvement of Potomac Park east of the railroad embankment. Do you wish to make a statement?

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Chairman, this is a hearing on H. R. 14905, and I want to thank the chairman and the gentlemen of the committee for their consideration in having thus early given us a hearing upon the matter. Having the privilege of discussing the subject when the matter comes up on the floor, I do not desire to trespass upon the time of the gentlemen who have, at considerable inconvenience, come here from Baltimore, New York, and other cities, and unless the committee desires to hear Col. Harts, I shall content myself with simply introducing the gentlemen who have been good enough to appear here in support of this measure.

STATEMENT OF MR. GEORGE J. TURNER, PRESIDENT AMATEUR ATHLETIC UNION OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. Chairman, I only have a very few words to say. It gives me great pleasure to appear before your committee in behalf of Congressman HULBERT'S stadium bill, and I sincerely hope you can see your way clear to recommend the passage of this measure. The erection of this stadium will be of great interest to all athletes and all lovers of athletic sports in the United States. Gentlemen, I shall not take up any more of your time because I know there are a number of gentlemen present who would like to speak a good word for this bill, and I want to thank you for the privilege of appearing before your committee.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Chairman, may I now introduce Mr. Justice Weeks, of the New York Supreme Court?

STATEMENT OF HON. BARTOW S. WEEKS, OF NEW YORK.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I have some difficulty in determining exactly what I should say to your committee in favor of a measure which it would seem to me must so naturally appeal to all of you without anything being said in its favor. In the first place, it is manifestly a most proper and suitable development of a property here in Washington, in the Capital of the Nation, along lines which are modern and very important and necessary at the present time; a development of the recreation feature, an opportunity for the children and youth of large cities to have the green fields and the fresh air, and in that respect it presents a live issue—if I may so describe it—that appeals to everyone in the United States, especially those who live in the crowded cities where they have not those opportunities, and equally to those who come from the districts where they have the green fields easier of access and who appreciate how much those in the cities lose because of the fact that that privilege is denied them so frequently. But this represents more than that. It represents an effort—and it is especially on that behalf that I am speaking here as one of the American Olympic committee, and as representing the Amateur Athletic Union of the United States—to develop along the lines of athletic improvement an opportunity for the United States in the future, possibly in 1920, to open its arms to a friendly contest in connection with the Olympiad of 1920.

As you are all familiar, undoubtedly, some years ago there was a revival of the old Olympic games under the auspices of the international Olympic committee, and those games have been held, and another one was to have been held in Berlin in 1916, this year. Of course, that Olympiad now can not be held; but in 1920 another one should be held, and where is there a more fitting place to hold it than in the Capital of the United States of America? There speaks the language of our great Nation. It will afford an opportunity for the warring nations to meet in friendly rivalry in a neutral country, and there we can have a stadium, if this park is developed, that would be an incentive to all the nations of the world, and from that point of view I think it is especially important. Of course, the development may not all be made at once, but this gives a starting point or a center to which the efforts of those who are interested in the Olympic games can be directed.

Now, you may not all be familiar with the scope of the Amateur Athletic Union and with its influence. We have in the American Athletic Union nearly 20,000 young men registered and recorded as amateur athletes, spread over the entire United States. Our membership includes about 550 clubs with a total membership of certainly over one-half a million men. The investments of these various clubs mount up into the millions of dollars, and all of that is the development of a competitive desire in the improvement of the physical manhood. It all tends to the general improvement of the man in the belief that thereby you generally improve his citizenship. And so, speaking for them as well as for the Olympic committee and in the interest of the great field of recreation development that has spread and is spreading through this country, we urge upon you, especially, that you give the most favorable consideration to the opportunity afforded here in the Capital of the United States for the development of this playground.

The CHAIRMAN. Judge, has any municipality such a stadium?

Mr. WEEKS. None; such stadiums as we have are all college stadiums. The nearest approach to a municipal stadium is the Lewisohn Stadium in connection with the College of the City of New York; and, unfortunately, up to the present time that stadium has not been opened for general purposes. It is still restricted to the use of the college students except on special occasions, such as the Shakespeare tercentenary, when a permit was granted for it to be used. I am pleased to say that I understand an effort is going to be made to open that stadium during the summer months when the college is not actually in session, so that advantage may be taken of it.

The CHAIRMAN. How many spectators will that stadium accommodate?

Mr. WEEKS. I think not more than fifteen or twenty thousand.

Mr. HULBERT. Ten thousand comfortably.

Mr. WEEKS. But there is no municipal stadium. Many of the large cities have their playgrounds; they have their bathing beaches, and all that; but there is not yet any municipal stadium, and it seems to me most eminently fitting that the opportunity here afforded for a national stadium, one that could be used for all purposes of that kind, should not be lost.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you any knowledge of the attendance at these Olympiads?

Mr. WEEKS. I think the attendance at Stockholm on some days was over 40,000, and the attendance at Shepherds Bush in 1908 was 60,000.

Mr. GILLETT. At what season of the year do they come?

Mr. WEEKS. They come generally in July.

Mr. GILLETT. It would never do to have it in Washington in July.

Mr. WEEKS. Undoubtedly in early July they could be held with perfect propriety here. This picture shows the opening of the first Olympic games in Athens in 1896 and shows the rebuilding of the stadium there.

Mr. MONDELL. Foreign countries have municipal stadiums quite extensively?

Mr. WEEKS. Yes; for instance, the one at Stockholm is a municipally built stadium, and likewise the one at Athens. The one at Athens was presented to the Government by a Greek, but the other countries not only have built these stadiums for the Olympic games, but they have fostered and developed the contestants for the games. Other countries, for years before the Olympic games were held, have employed instructors to develop their teams and to present their competitors in the best possible shape, and the men who have competed from other countries have been sent to those games by the countries themselves. In the United States we have always had to finance our own athletic teams, and even where we had certain Army officers who went on our riding teams and some of our fencing teams, we even had difficulty in getting anything more than the barest transportation paid for their horses. The United States has been very, very far behind in any effort of liberality toward enterprises of this kind in the past; but, in spite of all that, we have, as you know, maintained the athletic supremacy of the United States against the world in every branch of sport where we had anything like a fair chance; and, undoubtedly, if a stadium could be built here, if not at the present time, in the development of this scheme, I believe it would be a distinct step in advance for the Nation in the development of the young men, and a distinct step in advance for the Nation in placing itself so that it can open its arms to the other nations of the world in 1920.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Chairman, may I now present Mr. Gustavus T. Kirby, the chairman of the advisory committee of the Intercollegiate Athletic Association of the United States?

STATEMENT OF MR. GUSTAVUS T. KIRBY.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the question was asked Judge Weeks as to the time when Olympic games might be held, and if it were possible to hold them here in Washington. As one who for more than 20 years past has had a great deal to do with the athletics of the American universities I think I can speak correctly when I say that the main reason the Olympic games at Athens, Paris, London, and Stockholm were held in July, and not earlier than that date, was because of the impossibility of our college athletes finishing their college courses and getting there on time; and it was due to the recognition on the part of the countries of the world, not only of the desirability but of the necessity for the success of the games, of American representation, which would include not only those out of college but those in college, that the date was set as late as July. Now, if the games were ever held in this country there is no reason at all why the foreign contestants should not be able to come here in June, because their semesters are entirely different from those of our American universities and colleges, so that the climatic conditions of Washington, as we all are aware, being rather heated later in July, would not have any real bearing on the situation, because those games could readily be held in June.

Relative to stadiums, the stadium in Stockholm was planned to seat between 40,000 and 50,000; the one in London at Shepards Bush seated well over 70,000; the one which was erected in Berlin for the Olympic games projected to be held in 1916, if I remember correctly, was designed to seat over 100,000, was it not, Mr. Wendell?

Mr. WENDELL. Not so large as that. I was there at the opening of it, and I would say not more than 50,000.

Mr. KIRBY. There is a one-third of a mile track, Mr. Wendell, and I am pretty sure the figures were well over 75,000 and close to 100,000; but, so far as the necessity of large stands of that kind are concerned, it is only looking into the future. I take it that what we have before us now is a plan which is subject to those possibilities, perhaps.

The hope of those appearing before your committee is that those possibilities will be speedily realized, but we can quite well understand that in a large project of this kind one must make haste slowly. The first thing, of course, is to get the ground reserved for this special purpose. That, I take it, is what the bill does, among other things. Therefore it is altogether proper that one's attention should be called to similar projects in other cities and what they have accomplished and what they have failed to accomplish. For example, a live issue in the city of New York at the present time—and I speak feelingly, because I am one of the recreation commissioners of the city of New York—is the Riverside Drive. Now, if it had not been for the foresight of the citizens of the upper west side of the city of New York there never would have been any Riverside Drive. That section was practically reserved for a park. But if those citizens with civic pride and foresight had only looked into the future or planned a little more wisely than they did the present turmoil which is going on and this present plan for the expenditure of millions of dollars would have been unnecessary, because then they could have done what you gentlemen have opportunity to do to-day, not only to plan for the section to be set aside, but plan for the definite use of that section.

Here you have what, to those of us who have spent years in work of this kind, is believed to be a splendid layout. I speak not merely as a man closely in touch with athletics, but as one who helped, with others, to organize the National Playground Association of America, and one who has traveled far and near over this country seeing playgrounds, finding out their necessity, and studying the best means of laying them out, and I can say to you, being somewhat of an expert in those matters, that this layout is a splendid one, largely for the reason that it takes care of all ages and it takes care of all kinds of sports, those that you can enter into without having to go down into your pockets to buy implements, and not only those which people with more money can take part in. So no one can complain; on the other hand, everyone can be satisfied. Then again, in this plan, you should remember that a field, no matter how well laid out it is, is practically useless unless you have proper supervision. The playground is actually a menace unless it is properly supervised. So, in making your definite plans to use this, do not stop when you approve of the general layout, but plan for the supervision of the various bits of athletic and play activities which are to be in the various parts of this proposed stadium.

You have here baseball diamonds; you have got to have some one look after them. You have here a playground for the kiddies, and you should have some one there who knows how to direct their play, see that they do not hurt each other, and get the best out of that which is there. You have here opportunities for boating, and there is nothing more necessary than to have supervision over that, otherwise you will have dangers and accidents and consequent damage suits against the District of Columbia, whose city you are here to guard.

If I may speak from the standpoint of the college athlete, I say to you that there is a great demand for an athletic field of this kind for Olympic games and for games of the Amateur Athletic Union, which takes care of thousands of athletes not in the colleges. I can assure you that the Intercollegiate Athletic Association will be only too delighted to be able to hold its games elsewhere than at the two places open to it—the stadium on Soldiers' Field at Harvard and the athletic field of the University of Pennsylvania, Franklin Field, Philadelphia. Give us a field here that is worth while, and I can assure you they will be delighted to bring to Washington the big intercollegiate championships to be held the last Friday and Saturday in May of each year, the oldest organization of its kind in this country. Then, there is the bigger and even more important part, the part which affects the citizens of Washington, from the little boys and girls to the older men and women, the furnishing of an opportunity to have wholesome and well-directed play. It seems to me that Washington not only owes this duty to its citizens, but it owes this duty to the entire United States, because this city, above every other city in this country, is where people come and where you could furnish an object lesson in this work, it being one of the most progressive and popular subjects to-day.

I thank you very much for the courtesy of this hearing.

Mr. HULBERT. The next gentleman I am going to call on is not only the first American but the first athlete ever to have won the 100-yard, 220-yard, and 440-yard intercollegiate championship, Mr. Everet J. Wendell.

STATEMENT OF MR. EVERET JANSEN WENDELL.

Mr. WENDELL. Mr. FITZGERALD and gentlemen of the committee, I am very highly honored in being allowed to say a word on this occasion. I shall confine my remarks principally to the international Olympic games, as the other points have been touched on so successfully by Judge Weeks and Mr. Kirby. I am one of the three international Olympic commissioners from America. I have not had a chance—only having gotten to town late last night—to confer with my two associates, Prof. William M. Sloane and Mr. Allison V. Armour; but we have had many conversations on the subject and I think I can fairly say that I voice their opinion as well as my own when I say that if the Olympic meeting should be held in America there is nothing that would be nearer to the hearts of all of us than to have it held in Washington. All of us have a great deal of pride in having visiting men from other countries see the representative side of our country.

When the Olympic games have been held in Europe in the past they have been held in the capital, and each meeting has been graced by the presence of the King or Emperor, or whatever the particular royal designation happened to be, and should those games ever be held in America we would want them graced by the presence of our President, and we would want them to have the representative legislators of our Union there. We should want the games held under those dignified auspices. I can not say positively what the chances are as to the Olympiad of 1920. We had arranged to have the Olympiad held in Berlin within the next two months. For two years the committee has not been able to meet, owing to the sad conditions on the other side, but so far as our records are concerned the Olympiad is to be held in Berlin, although, of course, it will not be held there. As to 1920 I can not say positively, and can not tell anything about the meeting here in that year until the committee is called together on the other side and when conditions there make it possible for them to be called together. But intimations have been made that it would be agreeable to some of those on the other side to have the Olympiad held here in our country; that it might be difficult to find a place where the warring nations and their representatives could be gotten together so soon after the war as 1920 on the other side under conditions agreeable to all of them. Should it eventuate that the Olympic meeting of 1920 could be held in this country, it would be the very thing to have it held in Washington.

However, I think, gentlemen, it might be necessary, perhaps, for you to have a little preliminary enthusiasm and instead of having it come as an entirely new idea perhaps it might be well for you to make your arrangements for it. If this admirable bill and plan should go through, I think it would lay the foundation for a much more successful meeting if it should ever be held in America. The plan for a stadium, as drawn upon this plan, is not ideal for the purposes of international games. I have had an exceedingly pleasant talk with Col. Harts, and he assures me that in such an event the plan could be so extended or the plans could be so changed temporarily as to provide for a satisfactory stadium, and that additional seats could be provided outside of the 6,000 seats which are provided for in this plan, and that a temporary arrangement could be made for a stadium of any shape starting from that basis. So I think there would be no difficulty in that direction. If you realized how tremendously the American athlete is admired on the other side, if you realized how all the other nations looked up to us here as representing athletics, you would appreciate very keenly the importance of this thing.

When arrangements were made to hold the international games in Berlin, every one of the nations that wanted to compete sent over to America for an athletic trainer. There was one in Germany, there is still one in Sweden, and they wanted one in France. In fact, I do not think a single nation that intends to go in earnestly for possible success in the Olympic games would ever think of being without an American trainer, and I hope with all my heart that the word will go forth into all of those nations of the world that in this representative city of our Nation the legislators are deeply interested in the subject, and that they want to have the thing properly done; that they want to have it properly presented to the world. I hope word will go forth, and go forth soon, that arrangements are on foot to have these perfectly wonderful athletic grounds so splendidly laid out, and that plans are on foot to improve civilization in the greatest country in the world.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the next speaker whom I desire to address you is a man who has labored arduously in the cause of athletics. He was the president of the New York Athletic Club; he is now the president of the American Olympic games committee, and it was largely through his liberality that the United States was able to send a team over to Stockholm, which captured first prize and won this enduring fame which has just been referred to by the last speaker. I now introduce Col. Robert M. Thompson.

STATEMENT OF COL. ROBERT M. THOMPSON.

Col. THOMPSON. Mr. FITZGERALD and gentlemen of the committee, I know that you must, in your congressional minds, be considering this question: Upon what national ground you are justified in making an appropriation for this purpose. So far as you represent the Washington part, that is all right; but for the greater and national part you may ask why. I will tell you why. On our Olympic team going to Stockholm we had representatives from every State from Maine to San Francisco and north of the Mason and Dixon line. Curiously enough, there was not an athlete on that team from south of the Mason and Dixon line, except some Army officers who went over on the riding team. But that will never happen again, I do not believe.

Now, that shows this movement is national in its scope; that it has a tremendous effect upon the well-being and athletic development of the young I know, and if any of you gentlemen have taken an interest in athletics you will know it, too. You will know that our team was believed to be the product of a trained gladiatorial team, prepared by years of preparation. When I explained, as I did, to the representatives of the different governments that nobody knew who was to compose the team until 48 hours before we sailed for Stockholm they would not believe me. But our team was selected by the process of elimination, having tryouts in various centers and a final tryout in New York, and the winners over the winners were the people who went, and it was because of the great clientele back of the great number of young men who for years had been training themselves and improving their physique that we got the team we did get. There are few people in America who appreciate how we did stand. You probably read in the papers that a good many of the Americans were placed one, two, and three. They had three flagstaffs there in that stadium. When the flag in the center went up it represented No. 1; on the right hand there was a flag drawn up which represented No. 2; and on the left hand a flag drawn up which represented No. 3; and I can tell you our American hearts were stirred when three American flags went up time after time. But what our people do not appreciate is that if the three men who won those races had dropped out the three American flags would have gone up just the same.

In the Marathon race we did not win. A South African came in and won it, because they did not run according to orders, while our men ran true to orders. We had 10 to start and all of them finished, but when they came in the South African fell across the line, while our people ran across and could have gone on running. The leader of the English national committee said to me that the shape in which our men finished was one of the most startling things to him. Very few of us stop to think what it means to prepare for Olympic teams. It means years of making the best of one's physique; it means living a sober, chaste, and active life, and that is the example you will be setting the young men of the country by the establishment of such a place as is here provided. The expenditure seems to be a great item; but, after all, what is it? It will send ahead the whole of the United States; and think what it means to our young men. Believe me, it is serious and it is important.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, may I present Mr. Anthony J. Barrett, the chairman of the athletic committee of the Irish-American Athletic Club, of New York, which has participated in every set of Olympic games and won a greater number of points than any other athletic club which competed?

STATEMENT OF MR. ANTHONY J. BARRETT.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the advisability of building a national playground has been so conclusively demonstrated by the preceding speakers that it would be mere surplusage for me to add anything to what they have said in that respect, and I will confine my remarks to the peculiar appropriateness of having the playground in the location selected by Col. Harts. I think it is peculiarly appropriate that the national playground should be in the shadow of the National Capitol and on the historic banks of the Potomac. It seems to me that a playground situated in that particular locality will do more to instill in the minds of the young men coming from all over the country—from Texas, from Oregon, Maine, and California—a spirit of broad Americanism than anything else and instill in their minds an appreciation of the greatness of the country and the need for an intense national feeling. We need playgrounds where the different elements of our population can meet frequently, know each other's characteristics, and by that means form a great American people.

You would not have so many heterogeneous elements if those various elements had an opportunity to know each other better, and no place could be more appropriate for the meeting of the different elements that compose our population than a national playground under the shadow of the National Capitol, where they know there could be no antagonism, but only the rivalry to excel. It seems to me that as statesmen you are interested not only in the present moment but in posterity, in future generations of Americans. The American young men who, four or five hundred years from now, may travel from any part of the country to meet his competitors in the national stadium at Washington, can look back on a long series of national championship meetings held here and can feel a pride in realizing that he knows the great national champions of America, men who compete not for money, not for sordid gain, but for something idealistic, pure athletism. There is nothing which approximates more closely lofty patriotism than competition in athletic sports. I will take the liberty of bringing to your attention the fact that people from all over the country, in every hamlet, every log cabin, every village and town, are keenly interested in the affairs of Washington. In their morning papers they turn to the Washington news to see what is developing in the National Capital. It is rather nice for those people to read about the statesmanlike acts of their national representatives, to read of the combats of the intellectual giants who congregate here, inspired by lofty patriotism, and how nice it would be if, in the same columns, they could read about the athletic triumphs of the men who compete here in a national stadium.

I think, gentlemen, for these and many other reasons, which appeal strongly to your keener intelligence, that you will see the advisability of making an effort to have an appropriation made for this national stadium.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I would not want to close this hearing without introducing to you the president of the Metropolitan Association of the Amateur Athletic Union of New York and secretary-treasurer of the Amateur Athletic Union of the United States, Mr. Frederick W. Rubien.

STATEMENT OF MR. FREDERICK W. RUBIEN.

Mr. RUBIEN. Mr. Chairman, there is not anything that I have to say other than to call attention to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 8, in which an interview given to a New York newspaper man was published in the extension of the remarks of the Hon. CHARLES P. COADY. That covers my views on the matters under discussion.

(Said interview was entitled "Why American athletes lead—System, thoroughness, and unflagging effort chief causes, says F. W. Rubien—Advance ever under way—Sports far more general over here than in other lands and boys better trained—Favors national stadium—A. A. U. heartily favors project for great field at Washington, where 1920 Olympics may be staged," and will be found printed in full on page 8618, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

I would like to read a letter from the mayor of Chicago, William Hale Thompson, who is one of the delegates at large of the Amateur Athletic Union. He says:

"I am writing to say that I appreciate the appointment as a member of a committee to be present at the hearing on the bill introduced in Congress providing for the erection of a stadium in Washington, and I regret that it will not be possible for me to be present and participate in the hearings that will be held Friday, May 12, upon the subject.

"Realizing the importance of encouraging a healthful recreation, some 16 years ago while a member of the city council, I was instrumental in the passage of an ordinance creating a children's playground, which was the beginning of the great system now in operation in this city.

"I congratulate you on having interested Congress to consider the building of a stadium for the encouragement of athletics, which, I believe, our Federal Government has been rather slow in recognizing."

I have received hundreds of letters from all over the country praising us for our stand in this matter and hoping that the efforts of the Amateur Athletic Union will be successful. I might call attention to the fact that every member of this delegation is an amateur; there is not a professional instructor present or anyone interested in athletics in any way who receives pay for his work. We are all giving our time and labor to develop the American youth, and we feel that something ought to be done by the Federal Government to erect a model playground and stadium in the city of Washington.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Chairman, if I may have your permission and that of the committee, I would like to ask a question of Col. Thompson. I want to ask him how many nations participated in the Olympic games at Stockholm?

Col. THOMPSON. My recollection is that there were 39 nations represented by athletes at the games. Now, gentlemen, remember that in 1920 the United States will be the only first-class Nation where it will be possible for these nations that are now at war to come together. It would be a good thing if we could bring these nations together here, have them meet under our auspices and bring about the same state of mind that prevailed after the Stockholm games, when America had more influence than any other nation in the world. At the congress held in Paris in 1914, just before the war broke out, anything the United States asked for was granted, but anything that any other nation asked for was attacked and defeated.

Mr. EAGAN. Was that an athletic congress?

Col. THOMPSON. Yes, sir. It was a congress called for the purpose of passing rules which would have governed these 1916 games at Berlin. We were the leaders; they accepted our athletic leadership in every way. Now, if we get them over here in 1920 we will have the greatest chance in the world of renewing friendships and extending our influence. It is an important factor. There is no question but that those games had a great deal to do with the international relationship that now exists. It was the meeting not of your politicians, not of your diplomats, not of your armies and your navies, but of the people, young men representing, as they did, every walk in life, meeting the same type of people, making acquaintances and sending word back to their homes as to just what the people were. The result of that meeting unquestionably was to advance our influence in every way.

Mr. EAGAN. If these Olympic games were held here, is it likely that they would attract a great many athletes from the Latin American countries?

Col. THOMPSON. Yes, sir; they would unquestionably come. You have no idea how many of the countries were represented. There were representatives from the Orient, from Japan, from Siam, from China; there were representatives from Chile, from Argentina, and from Brazil; there were representatives from every European country, and in the Olympic games all of the countries represented were known as nations. For instance, Finland, although politically a part of Russia, was considered as a distinct nation; Bohemia, although a part of Austria, was treated as a nation. South Africa, New Zealand, Australia, and Canada stood individually; they did not come as a part of Great Britain.

Mr. EAGAN. Is it not true that men who compete in these contests are drawn from that class of the population in their respective countries that in subsequent years achieve prominence in the political and commercial affairs of their respective nations?

Col. THOMPSON. That is very largely true; yes. Speaking for the United States, 90 per cent of them were college graduates or undergraduates. For instance, the Kaiser's son was one of Germany's representatives on one of the teams. From France came men distinguished in every walk in life, and from every nation came distinguished men. I think it is true that about one-half of the membership of the international committee have passed away, having been killed in this war.

Mr. WENDELL. Not so many as that.

Col. THOMPSON. Well, it seems to me I am getting the names of so many who have been killed that it would appear to be that many who have been killed in that war.

Mr. KIRBY. The contests in the Olympic games are not limited to field and track events; there are other branches, such as riding, fencing, etc. In the competitions they have the very finest exponents of the military side, and also the very finest exponents of fencing and horse riding and the other gentleman sports of the other side, as they might be termed. They are all active participants in the Olympic games.

Col. THOMPSON. When we marched into the stadium on the opening day our men appeared to great advantage. They were taken in charge on board ship, and on the last four days before getting to Finland Col. Foltz, of the Army, who was there with a riding team, trained them in marching, so that when they marched in they had such a military bearing and marched together so well that the Europeans were convinced they were a military body. But it was simply the adaptability of the young men; it was their intelligence; they threw themselves into it so heartily that such an appearance was made possible.

After we came back a French athletic paper said, "You may talk about American training, you may talk about their trainers, you may talk about this or that, but until you can inspire your men with the same patriotic feeling that those young men showed you can not compete with them." Those athletes locked themselves up in their rooms each night and kept away from the temptations all around them; they kept away from the things which all young men like to do; they came back to the ship and went quietly to bed and, day after day and week after week, lived an exemplary life until the games were finished, and all because they were there representing the United States and not representing themselves.

Therefore, for its effect upon the national spirit and as an aid toward the preparation of the young men of the country to take care of their bodies, it is a big inducement to have this stadium in Washington. New York or any of the other great cities is not the best place for them to go, but it is much better that they should come here and learn the lessons of patriotism under the shadow of the Capitol.

Mr. GILLETT. Is not your main reason for wanting it located at Washington the fact that Washington would be the most appropriate place for holding the next Olympiad, and the fact that they would not consider having it in this country in 1920 without it?

Col. THOMPSON. No, sir; I would not put it that way. I think it should be regarded in this way. I doubt whether it would be contingent upon that; yet the event has come to be regarded as so important a matter that all the other nations send it to their capitals.

Mr. MONDELL. But the fact that it was to be held here might be a controlling factor in the decision of whether it would come to the United States?

Col. THOMPSON. I think that might be a controlling factor, that they were inviting them to the capital of the country.

Mr. EAGAN. Do you think that Washington, being so far removed from the great centers of population, would be at a disadvantage?

Col. THOMPSON. No, sir; on the contrary, I think that Washington is just large enough for it. Take, for instance, the city of Stockholm. The city made itself a part of the celebration, and everybody, from the King down to the lowest and commonest porter, was celebrating the Olympiad.

Mr. EAGAN. It is the custom to have the Olympian games at the capital of the nation in which they are held?

Col. THOMPSON. That is true of every country except this. We had it at the beginning at the St. Louis Exposition. We had it at St. Louis, but it was not a very successful affair. It has been held at Paris, France; London, England; Stockholm, Sweden; and at Athens. Therefore, if it came here again, I should personally feel, whether you build a stadium or not, we should have the Olympiad to take place in Washington, in any event.

Now, one thing more, and perhaps I might speak on this from my own point of view, because of my interest in Annapolis and West Point. Those great games between those two national universities are now held in New York and Philadelphia, and they are made the occasion for a great public outbreak. This is the place for those games. They would not have gladiatorial contests here, but they would come here for those games, and that alone is reason enough for putting up that stadium.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Chairman, I am mindful of the fact that we were to suspend at 3 o'clock. Something was said by one of the previous speakers with reference to the fact that there was no city owned stadium. Although the far West is not represented here to-day, at least, in the personality of any representative, it nevertheless is representative in the fact, if my information is correct, that it has by precept and example done in the city of Tacoma, Wash., what we are trying to do here in the city of Washington to-day. I would like to ask Mr. Kirby whether that is correct.

Mr. KIRBY. It is correct that the city of Tacoma, Wash., took advantage of a good location to erect on what was vacant land of practically no value the most beautiful athletic field and stadium in the world. It has a natural slope, with the seats rising up on each side of the hill—the stadium having a seating capacity of some 40,000 people—looking out toward Puget Sound. The city makes use of that stadium in the best possible way. There it has not only athletic meets but there it has its large civic gatherings; there it has its big musical entertainments, both by instruments and by choruses of thousands of voices; there it has great meetings and demonstrations, and there one can speak and be heard by over 20,000 people. Now, that is the way that city took advantage of just such an opportunity as is before the city of Washington to-day.

Mr. EAGAN. Are the stadiums at Berlin and Paris municipally owned?

Mr. KIRBY. The one at Stockholm is, also the one at Berlin. The one at Shepherds Bush, London, was quasi-private property, started in connection with an exposition, as was ours at St. Louis. The one at Stockholm, the one at Berlin, and the newly erected stadium between St. Petersburg, or Petrograd, and Peterhof, Russia, are city owned, and I think the city owns the one at Paris.

Mr. EAGAN. Have the national Governments of those countries done anything toward providing stadiums?

Mr. KIRBY. Yes, sir; the one at Berlin, if I am correctly informed, was constructed entirely under the Imperial Government.

Col. THOMPSON. It was built entirely at the expense of the Imperial Government.

Mr. KIRBY. As showing the warm bond of friendship formed at Stockholm, it might be of interest to say that on the entrance gate of the Stockholm stadium is a large plaque, designed by Dr. Tate McKenzie, of the University of Pennsylvania, and presented to the Government of Sweden by the American Olympiad committee, and accepted by that Government as a friendly act on the part of the United States.

Mr. HULBERT. There are a number of other gentlemen here whom, with the kind permission of the committee, I would be glad to introduce. I want to correct one impression by saying that in addition to the stadium at Tacoma, Wash., there is a city-owned stadium in the congressional district which I have the honor to represent. The Lewisohn Stadium, which has been referred to, is owned by the city of New York, and we are going to make an arrangement through Mr. Lewisohn and the mayor of the city of New York to open it during the summer months after the City College closes for the use of the people of the city.

The CHAIRMAN. It belongs to the City College?

Mr. HULBERT. It belongs to the city of New York. The City College is a city institution.

The CHAIRMAN. It was not built by the city, was it?

Mr. HULBERT. It was erected by Adolph Lewisohn upon public property and presented to City College and is maintained by the city of New York. The gift was made by Mr. Lewisohn with the understanding that it would be thrown open to the public.

I would like to have noted the presence of Mr. George Minor, president of the Harlem Athletic League, which embraces some 12 athletic clubs, all in my congressional district; Mr. P. J. Conway, president of the Irish-American Athletic Club; and Mr. Latrobe Cogswell, of Baltimore, president of the South Atlantic Association of the A. A. U. There are also a number of my colleagues present, some of whom may desire to speak on the subject.

The CHAIRMAN. They can be heard at some other time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Executive Mansion: For ordinary care, repair, and refurnishing of Executive Mansion, and for purchase, maintenance, and driving of horses and vehicles for official purposes, to be expended by contract or otherwise, as the President may determine, $35,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Has it been decided that this language "driving of horses and vehicles" authorizes automobiles? It seems peculiar language to cover automobiles.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is for transportation for the occupants of the White House.

Mr. MANN. I understand; I am not complaining about that; but the language is "driving of horses and vehicles."

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is the language that has been carried for years, and under it automobiles have been obtained for the White House.

Mr. MANN. I am aware of that. I ask if it has been decided that this covers automobiles. I suppose it went into the bill in this form at the time our Democratic friends were declining to purchase an automobile for the Speaker, and wanted to conceal the fact and put it in under the form of "driving of horses and vehicles."

Mr. FITZGERALD. It has been in here for a great many years, and motor-propelled vehicles have been purchased under it for eight or nine years.

Mr. MANN. I do not think it has been in this form as long as the gentleman thinks. It used to be "horses and vehicles." In other words, we still appropriate guilelessly for horses and carriages because we were afraid on that side of the House to say automobiles.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is not reading it carefully; this is for the purchase, maintenance, and driving of horses and vehicles.

Mr. MANN. I have read it carefully; I have read it in the House seven or eight times in the last five minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is for the purchase, maintenance, and driving of horses and vehicles, and that is the common expression.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can not find it in any appropriation bill, and he has reported quite a number. He offered an amendment this morning for automobiles, but not in this language, and there is no other place where we appropriate for automobiles in that language. No one who has any respect for the English language would put it in that way.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is for automobiles; and if anybody objects to automobiles, let him do so.

The Clerk read as follows:

For hospital, including the same objects specified under this head for the Central Branch, $52,000.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. I notice that the proviso has been omitted that has heretofore been carried in the bill in this item.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It was omitted for the reason that heretofore the proviso carried in this item was that oil should not be used if it cost more than coal. There has been an unprecedented increase in the cost of oil, and it is believed that very likely it will cost several thousand dollars more in the next fiscal year to use oil than it will to use coal. In order to use coal, however, it is necessary to install, at a considerable expense, a plant that will be required to handle the coal most economically, and that would cost $90,000. The committee determined not to include the proviso on account of the exceptional conditions, but wait until the next session and see whether the prospects are that oil is going to be so much greater in price. Figuring the price of oil at 3.7 cents, which is high compared to what it has been, it is estimated that with oil it will cost $68,000; with coal, stoker fired, $55,000; and coal, hand fired, $64,000. In order to have coal stoker fired it would necessitate installing an apparatus that would cost $90,780, and to have coal handled by hand would involve an expenditure of $26,265. It seemed to the committee that conditions were abnormal just at present and that it would be unwise to appropriate for a change under the existing conditions. If the proviso is inserted in the bill and this year the price of oil continues, it would be impossible to purchase the oil, and unless $90,000 were appropriated to install the apparatus to permit the burning of coal it would be impossible to utilize coal, so that the home would be in the unfortunate position of being unable to obtain any kind of fuel in order to heat and maintain it.

Mr. ANTHONY. Has the gentleman noticed the statement of Col. Wadsworth, the Inspector General, on page 476 of the hearings, where he makes the unequivocal statement that if he is compelled to use the most economical fuel this year, unquestionably they would have to use coal?

Mr. FITZGERALD. He made that statement, but that necessitates the expenditure of $90,000 for the apparatus. If oil is to continue in the future at about the same level of cost that it has been in the recent past, then undoubtedly it will be more economical to use coal, and I have no doubt that the proper thing to do would be to provide——

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I have a little information for the chairman of the committee. Has the chairman been informed that the Standard Oil Co. itself, which makes this fuel oil at the Sugar Creek Refinery, has ceased the use of the fuel oil at its plant and instead buys coal for its own fuel?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I am not sufficiently in touch with the Standard Oil Co. to be furnished with that information so quickly.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will say that I am in touch with them, and that I heard that statement made on the floor the other day, and yesterday telegraphed the Standard Oil Co. and received a reply that it was true, that in the plant where they make this fuel oil for the Leavenworth home they themselves burn coal for fuel, and yet this bill puts the Government in the attitude of paying freight on that fuel oil, transporting it to a distance, and using it for fuel.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the situation is just as I have explained it, that it has been more economical to burn oil, and that if the provision that has been in the bill for several years is incorporated this year and oil maintains the same level of price that it has in the recent past, under the provision it would be impossible to purchase oil. They could not use coal unless they obtained the apparatus required, which will necessitate an appropriation of $90,000. The committee believed it wiser to permit the expenditure for the next year of about $4,000 more for the purchase of oil than it would be to install the $90,000 worth of apparatus because of the abnormal condition which exists. It is impossible to have a situation there where the plant will be such that you can change from coal to oil as the price fluctuates. What has to be taken into consideration is what is the most economical thing covering a course of years.

If oil is to continue at the high price it has been, and if next year the results show that it would be more desirable and economical to burn coal, even with this investment, I have no doubt that the committee would be glad to provide for the change back to coal. They did burn coal at one time, and it was found it was cheaper to burn oil, and they changed the system. Then comes an unusual situation, and it appears that in the immediate future it will be cheaper to burn coal. The committee thought it wiser to continue the situation as at present until in the course of a few months it will be determined whether this increase of oil is to continue.

Mr. ANTHONY. This controversy, as the gentleman remembers, has been going on for four or five years, and the situation is a good deal as the gentleman says. To make the change will involve a considerable expense for extra equipment. All along I have contended, and I believe, it is an undoubted fact that coal itself is and has been the cheapest fuel under all circumstances, and the question has been with the committee I think in the past that it was not warranted in making this change because of the expenditure necessary to convert the plant back to the facilities for burning coal. My argument is now, I will say to the gentleman, that we have reached the time when it would easily be an economy to the Government to make that change, even if it cost $75,000 to-day for the new steam plant, because there is easily a difference this year of $15,000 between coal and oil.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is a difference of only $4,000.

Mr. ANTHONY. Let me explain to the gentleman why that is so. For some reason in the hearings the first figures the gentleman had from the board of managers have not been put into the hearings, and I believe the board of managers have resorted to a little trickery in attempting to deceive the gentleman's committee.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We have printed everything that has been presented to us.

Mr. ANTHONY. Let me say to the gentleman that I was present in the committee room when the board furnished the first set of figures. Under the first set of figures, based on the questions asked by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], the board stated it showed a difference of $13,000 in favor of coal. Col. Wadsworth admitted it did, and then, on February 12, Col. Wadsworth sent to Leavenworth and got the governor of the institution to make an entirely new statement, which has been furnished to the gentleman's committee, and which has been substituted for the original statement, which puts an altogether different face on the situation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We put into the report what Col. Wadsworth said. It is perhaps clearer in the report than I could quote it to the gentleman, because it involves going over the figures. He says:

> The governor of the Western Branch is a very conservative business man and has put together the figures in very good shape. I would like for this report to go into the record as a part of my statement.

And the Committee on Appropriations has printed in the record that report.

Mr. ANTHONY. If you will read that modified report printed here, you will find absolutely no saving on the face of it. I am borne out by the questions of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], who remarked during the committee hearing, "Your figures show a difference of $13,000 in favor of coal."

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will read what the gentleman is hunting for and can not find, on page 478:

> This shows an annual saving for hand-fired coal of $4,217.50 and by stoker-fired coal $13,505, as against use of oil.

That statement, the gentleman said, was not in the hearings. It is here. We print everything that is furnished us.

Mr. ANTHONY. Nevertheless, the figures of this supplemental report—and it is a supplemental report, because it was gotten up and dated from the time the discussion first started before the committee, and figures are used there that are apparently padded on their face, I will say to the gentleman——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not think so.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think they are, with the intent of deceiving your committee. Let me point to something, for the information of the gentleman. The governor of the home, in his report, says it will take 26,000 tons of coal for the next year. Directly in opposition to that is the report of the United States Bureau of Mines, which the gentleman from New York secured two years ago, which estimates 16,000 tons as being sufficient for that purpose. Now, there is apparently too wide a range of difference in these estimates. So it seems to me the committee is placing reliance upon——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Where does the gentleman read from?

Mr. ANTHONY. I am reading from the supplemental report filed——

Mr. FITZGERALD. What page?

Mr. ANTHONY. Page 477.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for 10 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ANTHONY. The board of managers undoubtedly knew when they came before the Committee on Appropriations this year that they would be unable longer to use fuel oil at the price they will have to pay for it. Last year they paid $1.14 a barrel. This year it has jumped to $1.70 a barrel, which is the very least they could buy it for, and on this basis, I will say to the committee, and the figures are borne out by all the figures that can be made of these two prices, if the Government is to continue burning oil at that institution, there will easily be a difference of $15,000 to $18,000, in my opinion, between the cheapest coal and the price at which you will be able to buy oil.

Now, granting the statement of the gentleman from New York, that it will take $75,000 to $90,000 to change the power plant at that institution, it will still be economy for the Government to make that change. In five years' time the Government would earn the price of that plant.

All experts will agree that oil will never be as cheap as it has been in the last few years. The only way you will get cheap oil again in this country will be through the discovery of new fields. When new fields were opened up a few years ago in Texas and Oklahoma, oil was cheap, and fuel oil, the refuse product, was sold very cheaply, and that was the reason this home went on the oil basis. Now, those days are past. Oil is climbing sky high, and it is absolutely ruinous for any business industry to continue using fuel oil.

I can not find a single business industry in that entire country—none of the great manufacturing plants, none of the big packing plants located in the same city, Kansas City—that now uses oil for fuel. The only place where it is used is at this Government institution at Leavenworth. This institution is located in a coal-mining field. It is a local industry, and, naturally, the spectacle of the Government using this expensive oil causes a great deal of local controversy on that point, and that is the reason why I am interested and why I am bringing the matter to the attention of the House.

Now, I think the proper way for the House to proceed is to put a limitation on this appropriation compelling the board of managers to use the most economical fuel. If it will require the construction of a modern steam plant there, by all means build the new steam plant. Let me say, further, to the gentleman from New York that the Leavenworth home is the only home that has an antiquated steam plant at the present time. Before the committee last year information was brought out that every other old soldiers' home had a modern plant and that the Leavenworth plant is the only antiquated one, and, of course, for that kind of a plant oil may be the most efficient fuel; but the plant itself should be made modern, and I believe that the conditions there justify the expenditure, and that at this time the committee should put a provision in the bill for the cheapest fuel, for oil will never again go back to the old low figures, and if this Government will proceed to make the proper installation the better off the Government will be.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield for an interruption?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will.

Mr. HOWARD. The gentleman makes the statement that crude oil will never be back to the old figures. Now, why should not crude oil recede in price very rapidly after this European condition is over?

Mr. ANTHONY. Let me say to the gentleman I gave the reason; that in my opinion unless new oil fields are opened up you will not get oil back to the old figures which prevailed when the fields of Louisiana, Texas, and Oklahoma were first opened up.

Mr. HOWARD. The statistics of the Bureau of Mines show there were 8,460,000 barrels more of crude oil produced in 1915 than 1914, and it is simply a combination of unrestricted trusts that have gotten together that has made the price of gasoline and crude oil go sky-high.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will say to the gentleman we are up against this condition of prices. We have conditions for a Government establishment——

Mr. RAGSDALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Does not the gentleman know right now there is a great restriction of the amount of oil and gasoline to be furnished, that if we could open up the Tampico oil field and put it on the market——

Mr. ANTHONY. Let me say to the gentleman that the fuel oil from that field would never get into this local market.

Mr. RAGSDALE. If that oil was put into competition it would affect the entire market?

Mr. ANTHONY. That might be. I want to quote to the House the statement of the United States Geological Survey on the relative economy of oil and coal.

Under their investigations they claim that 76 pounds of water can be evaporated by coal for 1 cent; that only 58 pounds of water can be evaporated by oil for 1 cent, comparing the prices for coal and oil that were then prevailing, the $2.10 per ton for coal and the 69 cents per barrel for oil prevailed at the time these figures were made. Now coal is $2.50 a ton and oil is $1.70 a barrel. I hope the House, in view of the present emergency that confronts the Government, admitted, as it is, by the board that with the provision for the most economical fuel it will have to burn coal, will leave this provision in; and then, if economy demands coal there, let the Government practice economy. The institution needs a new power plant. Let us have it, and do away with all this controversy concerning it. I offer this amendment, and I hope the gentleman from New York will accept it.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. FOSTER). The Clerk will report the amendment.

Insert, after the semicolon in line 12, page 91, the following:
"Provided, That no part of this sum shall be used for fuel oil if coal as a fuel can be procured more economically.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I want to say further that I have here a letter from one of the coal companies operating in that field, stating that the soldiers' home authorities have already asked for bids for both oil and coal, so as to be prepared for any action this House may take on that question or of the new conditions which I have shown do exist. It shows that they have asked for 37,000 barrels of fuel oil for the coming year, which at $1.70 per barrel would cost $62,900. It shows that the estimate is 18,000 tons of mine-run coal at $2.50 a ton, which will cost $45,000, a difference in favor of coal of $17,000. Of course there are the circumstances that the gentleman from New York has told the House about. Here is the added expense of using oil. It will possibly require a new plant; and, gentlemen, it is my judgment that it will be economy to equip that plant to use coal, and I hope the House will do it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will not be agreed to. There has been a controversy as to whether coal or oil should be used as fuel in this home. In 1907, because of the excessive cost of coal in this home, the plant was changed to an oil-burning plant. The average cost of oil in the nine years has been $0.0211 a gallon. Recently, because of the abnormal conditions, oil has increased until the price is $0.037 a gallon. The Committee on Appropriations two years ago had an independent investigation made by the Bureau of Mines and by the Quartermaster's Department of the Army, and both of the reports were practically in harmony, and both were to the effect that it was cheaper to continue burning oil at that institution. Both of those reports disclosed the fact that it would require the expenditure of $90,000 to change the existing plant to a coal-burning plant; and if that were done, and oil thereafter increased in price, it would be impossible to use the oil because the plant had been changed to be utilized for coal. Now, in the investigations that were made—and the gentleman from Kansas has not made the matter very clear—it appears that in 1907, the last year that coal was used in that institution, 23,435 short tons were consumed, and to that, on account of increased radiation since installed, should be added 3,327 additional short tons. In the calculation made by the Bureau of Mines and by the officials of the home the amount of coal to be used was fixed at 16,538 long tons. Thirty-one per cent less coal than was actually consumed the last year that coal was used, and the price that the gentleman now speaks of—$2.50 a ton—is 36 cents less than the Bureau of Mines estimated that coal could be obtained for. Now, it seemed to the Committee on Appropriations that, considering the average cost for a period of nine years for oil and coal, the saving has been in favor of oil over the stoker-fired coal $13,000 a year, and from hand-fired coal of $22,000 a year.

Mr. ANTHONY. The gentleman surely does not mean that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do mean it, and I am reading it from the report of a competent and efficient person.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not think the gentleman can show, even by the most biased figures, that there is a saving effected.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I decline to yield further. I did mean it, and I just read it, and I have read it from the statement that was made to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ANTHONY. Where did you get the report? You say there is a saving. Where is it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman will find it on page 478 of the hearings before the committee.

Mr. ANTHONY. That is the annual operating expense and not saving.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will read it again. It says that, substituting the amount, the average price of fuel or fuel oil during the period of nine years while it was down to $2.11 per gallon, 1,650,000 gallons of oil at $0.0211 a gallon would amount to——

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will not.

Mr. ANTHONY. The gentleman from New York interrupted me, and I was very liberal with him.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I decline to yield at present.

Mr. ANTHONY. I was calling the attention of the——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I decline to yield to the gentleman, and I hope his remarks will not be included in what I say.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas understands the rules of the House, the Chair is sure.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I decline to yield to the gentleman at present.

Mr. ANTHONY. All right.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have the same trouble every time this matter comes up. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] does not wish to have the information presented to the committee. I have no interest in this matter except to do what is best for the Government. Two investigations were made in order to satisfy the gentleman from Kansas and the Committee on Appropriations as to what was the proper thing, one investigation by the Bureau of Mines and one by the Quartermaster's Department of the Army. After those reports were submitted the gentleman from Kansas attempted to convince the House that they were both biased against coal. I take it they were acting in the best interests of the Government. Now, this report shows that, taking these figures, figuring on coal at $2.50 a ton instead of $2.86—which the Bureau of Mines said would be the probable price—the cost for oil was $42,415; for coal, stoker-fired, $55,000—and that would require an investment of $90,000; for coal, hand-fired, $64,000. That would require an investment of $26,000.

Now, what would reasonable, sensible men do, in view of the fact that there has been this saving of $13,000 annually for nine years over coal hand fired and $22,000 a year over coal stoker fired? When an unusual situation arises and the price of oil is abnormally high, would it be sensible to expend $90,000 to change the plant so that oil might never be used again and the use of coal in this plant would be compulsory? The committee has done the reasonable thing. Here is an abnormal situation. No one can tell at present whether oil will continue on this high level. Unquestionably it will cost $4,000 more to burn oil next year than it would to use coal stoker fired, but the committee thought it better to permit this expenditure of $4,000 for the next year rather than to spend $90,000 in changing this plant from an oil to a coal plant, thereby making it impossible to ever again utilize oil as a fuel if it cheapens in price. The committee thought it better to wait and ascertain at the next session of Congress whether this abnormal level is to be maintained. The board of managers stated that they favored oil. Col. Wadsworth, the inspector general, said:

> The prices of to-day would suggest that we turn to coal; but if you will take the prices covering a period of nine years you will see that there is a considerable saving in favor of oil, and we hardly feel that we ought to accept to-day's prices for oil as representing a permanent condition and turn to burning oil.

It is an abnormal condition, and that is the view the committee has taken. I am not interested in the question of whether this institution burns coal or oil. It is immaterial to me, but I am interested in having the Government obtain the most economical fuel, and I am not in favor of making this investment for a coal plant when we are apt to be at the mercy of the local coal dealers. Why, we had a coal deposit right on the home grounds, and it has been leased to the people who want to sell the coal to the Government. Instead of retaining that and utilizing it as a fuel in the home, we turned it over to people who are now anxious to have us invest $90,000 in order that they may sell us our own coal, which they would be mining under a lease. If we had been buying that coal, or coal of the locality, for the past nine years at the price of $2.50 a ton, it would have cost us over $200,000, but at the price at which the Bureau of Mines says it can be obtained it would have cost us nearly $400,000 more than we bought the oil for.

I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I think the mistake the committee is making in this instance is that it has allowed itself to be guided by figures which have been furnished to the committee mainly for the purpose of influencing it to allow the board to continue to burn oil. One of the members of the board of managers, in conversation just at the time of the hearing before the gentleman's committee, said to me, "Sure, it is going to cost us more money to use oil instead of coal this year, $15,000 more perhaps; but it is such a clean, nice fuel, let us use it." I contend, gentlemen, that is not the way that the Government of the United States should run its business. It may be nice for these gentlemen to have clean fuel, easy to handle and easy to burn, but the taxpayers of the country demand that the Government shall use economy in the transaction of its business affairs, and one of the things that the people of the country are objecting to now is the way that our governmental expenses are running into billions of dollars, and this one item that comes from the committee impresses itself on my mind as an example of exactly the way billion-dollar sessions of Congress are made. I believe earnestly and honestly that the right thing to do, instead of going by figures that are furnished perhaps for the purpose of misleading the committee, is to take the figures as they exist to-day; and as the chairman of the committee admits that the price of fuel oil has mounted up 30 per cent more than it was last year we should take the situation as it exists and provide a proper limitation on the appropriation.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, we have no means of knowing whether the present price of oil in this Kansas territory is to be maintained or not. If oil continues to be as high as it now is, it will be the part of wisdom to change this plant from an oil-burning to a coal-burning plant. As a matter of fact, the committee considered pretty thoughtfully and carefully the question of making that change this year, but I do not believe we would have been justified in making the change without being more fully assured than at present that the high price of fuel oil is permanent. In my opinion it would not be wise to change from oil to coal in a temporary way. True, without any very great expenditure, we might arrange to burn coal at this plant, but we would not so burn it in a very economical or satisfactory way. When the plant is changed from an oil-burning to a coal-burning plant it should be thoroughly overhauled and remodeled, and the necessary changes made in order to burn the coal economically and satisfactorily.

If oil remains as high as it is now during the coming fiscal year, the long fight which our gallant young friend from Kansas has made will have been won. He is entitled to have won it before now, if earnest and energetic effort should have its reward, for he certainly has been very earnest and energetic in this matter. As a member of the committee I should have been very glad indeed to have seen my way clear to have approved of the change from oil to coal burning that he desires. I am inclined to think that it will be brought about by the logic of events next year, because, whatever our friend from Georgia, who made some remarks upon the subject a few moments ago, may think, the present high price of oil is not, in the opinion of those well informed, the result merely of combination. It may be partly the result of combination, but the result to a much greater extent of the working of the law of supply and demand; of largely increased demand and the decrease of supply compared with the demand. The supply may have increased, but the demand has increased far more. Oil is being shipped out of my State by the trainload to Canada. We had no Canadian market a year or two ago. They would probably take practically all of the Wyoming product if they could get it, if it were not for the fact that some of it is contracted to go elsewhere. With the tremendously increased demand at home and abroad, without an increased production equal to the increased demand, it is inevitable that the price should advance.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is it not true that the decrease in production of the crude oil that produces largely gasoline has had more to do with the increase in the price of gasoline than any other one thing?

Mr. MONDELL. That is probably true. The increase in certain fields in the output of fuel oil does not help the matter any.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That does not increase the oil that produces the gasoline.

Mr. MONDELL. There are certain great oil fields, among them the greatest oil fields in the Union, whose product has no relation to or effect on the price of gasoline.

While I am on this subject I want to call the attention of the committee to one very interesting fact. I particularly want to invite the attention of gentlemen who have been seeking causes for the increased cost of gasoline to one cause which has apparently been overlooked. There has been a great increase in the demand for gasoline. There should have been a great increase in the production of gasoline in order to meet that demand. The Interior Department has been working earnestly and continuously and effectively to prevent an increase in the supply of gasoline in the fields that give the most promise of increased yield. The most hopeful field for gasoline-producing oil in the United States to-day is the State of Wyoming. Our oil territory extends from the extreme northeast to the extreme southwest corner of the State, nearly or quite 400 miles in length and 200 miles in width.

A large part of this oil territory is public land, and within the last three years, as they have learned of the presence of oil in the sands of that territory, prospectors, wildcatters, oil developers from all over the country have flocked to Wyoming. They have taken their chances, gone out great distances from railroads, studied the geological formations, and, having finally come to the conclusion certain localities gave promise of oil, have set up their drills and gone to work. In about every instance where oil has been found in that way the Geological Survey has recommended the withdrawal of the lands and they have been withdrawn from entry. Such a withdrawal operates except as to the solitary quarter section on which the drill was operating or on which an oil discovery had been made. This great and glorious Government has not discovered or developed any oil; its agents have discovered no domes or anticlinals, but have sat around on the fences beside the way stations, under the shadow of the water tanks by the lonely stations on the far-stretched pioneer railway lines, and whenever they have seen a drilling rig go by they have followed it, and whenever they have found or heard of a driller who had actually discovered oil they have proceeded to take the land away from him, except the particular tract upon which he happened to be drilling.

An oil field a long distance from a railroad must have considerable production in order to make it pay to build a pipe line to the railroad. If no land can be made productive except a small area on which the oil discoverer is working, a hundred or two or three hundred acres, the area is not large enough to warrant the building of a pipe line, and so the withdrawal absolutely prohibits development. The only way that our people have been able to develop any of our fields is where there happened to be patented land that could be secured or where people were fortunate enough to plant several drills and get them to work before the agents of the Government got wind of their operations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask for five minutes more.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that all debate on the pending amendment close in 10 minutes.

Mr. ANTHONY. Reserving the right to object, will not the gentleman make it 15 minutes?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will make it 15 minutes, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment close in 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, this subject of fuel for the soldiers' home at Leavenworth has been before the committee repeatedly, and the committee has given it probably more careful attention than any other one item connected with these homes. At the time the change was made from coal to fuel oil, fuel oil was not only abundant and cheap in that territory, on account of the recent developments in that section, but the price of coal was rather unsatisfactory. That was before the establishment of the Bureau of Mines and before the Bureau of Mines had established the British thermal units as the test of coal furnished to Government institutions. At that time coal was selling to Government institutions on a flat rate at so much per ton, without regard to the heating quality of the coal. Of course the coal which was nearest to the point of consumption had an almost universal monopoly of those Government contracts; but that condition has changed. The Bureau of Mines now is required to demonstrate the heating value of coal that is submitted under Government contracts and determine whether a coal at a certain price is cheaper in its heat-producing value than a coal at a certain other price. Now the coal in the Government institutions is bought upon a fairer basis, which permits competition in coal and the shipment of coal in from farther points. Up to that time the coal mines in Leavenworth had absolutely had a monopoly of furnishing coal to the institution at Leavenworth. I would be inclined under present conditions to favor the burning of coal, because I believe that in the long run coal is going to be the most dependable fuel in that section of the country. The whole of the Missouri Valley is underlaid with a big strata of coal and it is good and comparatively cheap.

I would not be inclined to favor the burning of oil if it were a new propcsition, because the production of oil is limited, compared with the enormous demand for oil at the present time. It is true that new oil fields may come in, but we have no means of knowing that. Coal, we know, is all in sight, and there is ample coal to supply us; so that if it were a new proposition I would be inclined to think that the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas was worthy of consideration, and I would approach it from that standpoint. The committee was anxious to find some economy at the present time for changing back from oil to coal, but we found that it would cost $26,000 to change the heating plant from the present oil-burning plant to a coal-burning plant or hand-fired coal. We know that firing coal by hand with the enormous cost of labor—and with the added age of the old soldiers in that home we get very little labor out of them—the cost is extremely high as compared with the cost of firing with oil. The only thing worthy of consideration is stoker-fired coal. To change to a plant permitting stoker-fired coal would make an initial expenditure of $90,000. It is utterly impossible to figure out any economy with the plant we have there now burning oil to change that plant and make a stoker coal-firing plant for the sake of the saving apparent now upon the face of the price.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] two questions. What are "domes" and "anticlinals"?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman must know what a dome is. There is one on this building, a fine one.

Mr. BENNET. I do not know what a dome in an oil field is.

Mr. MONDELL. A dome in an oil field is a point where there has been an upward pressure on the geological formations which has raised the geological structures and formations at that point above the corresponding formations of the surrounding territory, forming a dome. Ordinarily these geological uplifts, raised by pressure from below, extend for a considerable distance through the country, forming anticlinal ridges. Sometimes they rise in the form of a dome.

Mr. BENNET. And what is an anticlinal?

Mr. MONDELL. It is a geological wave or ridge, with the strata dipping down both ways from the upper point of the raise of the formation as distinguished from a synclinal, which is the trough of the wave.

Mr. BENNET. Having gotten all that information, I would like to ask the gentleman what possible reason there can be for the Government pursuing the course it must be pursuing, because the gentleman states that it is pursuing it, namely, of absolutely depriving oil prospectors of their chance to find oil under these domes and anticlinals and synclinals?

Mr. MONDELL. A number of years ago certain people came to the conclusion that private ownership of the oil fields and the coal fields was not a good thing; that is, the development under private ownership was not a good thing, and that the Federal Government should retain the fee in oil and coal lands and lease the land for the production of coal or oil. Some of the Government departments are very much interested in that kind of legislation, and they have been promoting it very industriously and very earnestly for many years. They have taken the position that certain people who are not particularly inclined to that sort of thing may become inclined to it if conditions are created under which it is the only possible way in which the opportunity to develop the country can be secured.

Mr. BENNET. That is really the information I was looking for. I think possibly the gentleman could have put it in fewer words. [Laughter.] In the moment or two that possibly remain to me I will say——

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. BENNET. Not just at this moment. I will say, despite the length of the explanation of the gentleman from Wyoming, I still sympathize with those western people in some of the hardships which I think they undergo, and if they ever bring the right kind of legislation before the House I will vote for it with pleasure.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I am very glad indeed for the gentleman's sympathy, and we would like to have the sympathy of a good many more people in this House.

Mr. BENNET. I will say to the gentleman he gets a good deal more than my sympathy at times; he gets my vote.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. We appreciate it very highly, and I want to corroborate what the gentleman from Wyoming has said——

Mr. BENNET. I believe it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Because I may say the Government agents in their activity are the greatest wet blanket to and interference with development that possibly can be. Whenever any enterprising person starts out and finds an oil field, if he fortunately or unfortunately happens to find it, why the country around it is immediately withdrawn and development is stopped. It is the most absurd performance, it seems to me, that can be enacted in this country, but that is the policy at present.

Mr. BENNET. If the gentleman will allow me to interrupt him in my own time [laughter], why does not the gentleman bring in some sort of legislation which would tend to correct it?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. We have done so, but we can not get anything in this House of that sort.

Mr. BENNET. I have never seen any brought on the floor.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. We have tried very hard to bring out such measures from the Public Lands Committee, for the purpose of opening up the oil fields and encouraging the people to develop them and gain something when they are developed.

Mr. BENNET. There are always a considerable number of western men on the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. We are simply a drop in the bucket in the whole Congress. There are only about 36—you might say 6 or 8 per cent of the House—and then all the western men are not entirely together on the subject, so it is very difficult to try to develop our country at best.

Mr. BENNET. I will give the gentleman a piece of homely advice, and that is you will not go very far unless you get the western people together on some system.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. That is the difficulty.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] for the salve which he spreads so freely indicating next year's promises, but I think that if the committee intends to do it eventually the sooner the better it will be for all concerned, and in this connection I might remind the members of the Committee on Appropriations that it is well to take some figures that come from the members of the board of managers with a grain or two of salt, especially in view of the fact that during the last year about $55,000 of the Government's funds, intrusted to the care of members of this board, have mysteriously disappeared in investments in the securities of wildcat mining companies in Colorado. Miraculous as it may seem, a member of this board of managers, whose word and whose figure are absolutely taken at par by the Committee on Appropriations of the House, has invested Government trust funds in wildcat mining securities in Colorado bearing 7 per cent interest—in securities which, upon investigation, the Inspector General of the War Department has pronounced probably worthless and the Government is stuck for a big sum of money, and in fact criminal prosecutions are now even being talked of, and I fear only too often committees of this House are inclined to take judgment on business matters coming from men of that sort rather than the opinion expressed by Members of this House who know what they are talking about.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Who is to blame for this squandering of the Federal money?

Mr. ANTHONY. In what respect?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I say, who is to blame for it, the State of Colorado?

Mr. ANTHONY. I think so, in offering temptation to lead otherwise honest humanity astray.

You ought to have a blue-sky law in Colorado that would prevent the selling of this sort of stuff to unsuspecting investors like the managers of soldiers' homes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. It seems to me the managers of the soldiers' homes ought to investigate it before investing the funds.

Mr. GARD. In any event, it is not fair to charge the entire proposition to the managers?

Mr. ANTHONY. I said one of the managers.

Mr. OGLESBY. Is this one of the men to whom you refer?

Mr. ANTHONY. The gentleman is manager of the local home from which this report came. He is one of the officers of the institution that furnished these figures, and he is the superior officer.

Mr. OGLESBY. Do I understand the gentleman thinks that that reflects upon the correctness of the figures furnished by other members of this board?

Mr. ANTHONY. It goes to show that we should take some of these statements with a grain of salt and form our own opinions, without taking unqualifiedly the figures given by all subordinate officials to Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. ANTHONY. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 19, noes 26.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, $163,000.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. If I can have the attention of the chairman, by the way of explanation of an amendment which I shall offer, I want to say that the Battle Mountain Sanitarium was established in 1902, and the building plan as contemplated, the original plan, has been completed, with one exception, and that is the entryway or entrance at the driveway.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We fixed that up last year.

Mr. GANDY. That was the footway which leads to the institution. The old temporary gate which was installed at the driveway at the time of construction is still there. I want to say to the Members of the House that this sanitarium is located in a tourist belt; there are thousands of tourists every year who drive up this incline to the sanitarium, and this gateway should be in keeping with the rest of the magnificent institution that the Government has placed there. I was under the impression that the matter would be properly taken care of. I have here a letter from the president of the national board of managers, under date of November 17, 1915, telling me that the item would be included in the estimates for this year, but it was omitted. I also have a copy of an estimate for the work, to $2,464. With that preliminary statement I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the gentleman offers the following amendment, which the Clerk will report:

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 94, after line 19, insert: "For the improvement of the driveway, including the construction of stone columns and arch and the purchase and installation of gates, $2,300."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. GANDY. Now, it is barely possible, Mr. Chairman, that that might be subject to a point of order, but I have some doubts as to that. It is simply for the continuation of a work that is authorized by statute, was provided for in the original plan, and is one piece of the work that has never yet been finished. If it was something that was entirely new, I concede that the point of order would be well taken, but being for the completion of the plant that the Government has there I do not believe that it is subject to the point of order. I trust that the gentlemen of the House in considering this will by their votes make possible the erection of such a suitable archway and the installation of such a gate as will be a credit to the sanitarium which the Government has at Hot Springs, S. Dak.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am inclined to believe, Mr. Chairman, that the limit of cost fixed on this institution is definite, and that the amount of money has already been appropriated. I will have the information in a moment. I will say that no such estimate was made to the committee and no suggestion that there was any necessity for such improvement. Last year the attention of the committee was called to the fact that there should be an improvement in the nature of a stairway to obviate the necessity of the inmates making a very long and tiresome climb, and the committee, when the information was presented to them, recommended the appropriation. But no suggestion of this has ever been brought to the attention of the committee.

Mr. GANDY. I understand the statement of the chairman is correct that it has not been brought to the attention of the committee, and I will explain how it was left out of the bill. I hold in my hand a letter from the president of the board of managers, in which he said it would be included in the estimate. There are two ways by which it is possible to climb the hill to the sanitarium at Hot Springs—one by the footway, the stairs, and the other by the incline or driveway. And this is for the arch at the driveway where the automobiles go up to the sanitarium.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York insist on the point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think that the point of order is good. I will state to the gentleman from South Dakota that I am not at liberty to accept amendments of this character.

At a future time, if the matter comes up in a regular way, I am sure the committee will be very glad to consider it with a view of doing anything that reasonably ought to be done; but I am not in a position to assent to it under the circumstances. The act of March 3, 1903, put a limit of cost and appropriated the entire sum for the establishment. I have it here.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The headquarters of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers shall be established and hereafter maintained at the Central Branch, National Military Home, Ohio, and shall occupy for offices, without expenditure for rent, any general or post fund building.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I should like to reserve a point of order on that paragraph, that it is new legislation. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee what this is.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The item fixing the headquarters at Dayton is put in at the request of the board of managers. Heretofore the custom has been that whenever a new president has been selected for the board of managers, he has established the office of the board of managers at his home town. They stated that they would have saved $3,000 a year in rent. At the Dayton home they have ample facilities. The storehouses are there. It is the depot of distribution. It is the most centrally located home, and they stated that it would obviate a source of continual trouble and annoyance, and result in much better and more efficient administration. When Col. Wadsworth was president of the board he had the office of the home in New York, and they would have moved the office to Dayton at that time if it had not been for the fact that the treasurer, Maj. Harris, who had been so long connected with the home, was not in a position to leave New York. When Col. Close succeeded Col. Wadsworth as president of the home, he decided to move the office to Kansas City, Mo. Maj. Harris then announced that it would be impossible for him to make arrangements to leave New York, and he resigned. Now, Col. Close has been superseded as president, and all of the members of the board expressed the wish that Congress would fix the headquarters at the Daytor home definitely and permanently, in the interest of economy.

Mr. ANTHONY. As a general rule, though, the gentleman would not approve of allowing the president to take the general offices over the country with him?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is what we are trying to stop.

Mr. ANTHONY. I simply want to recall the fact that three years ago I offered practically this same amendment, and it was rejected by the committee. I said then that the headquarters should be taken from New York to one of the more centrally located homes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The objection to it at that time was on account of Maj. Harris. The gentleman from Kansas will recall that he was connected with the home for a great many years. He had established a home in New York with one of his married children. He was around 70 years of age. He had reached the period in life when it was impossible for him to give up that home and establish a new one, and when it was finally decided by the board, under the direction of Col. Close as president, to move the office to Kansas City, he was compelled to quit the service of the board. The members of the board are unanimously of the opinion that the accommodations in Dayton, and the fact that the great supplies are there and that it is centrally located, make it desirable to locate the office there. Personally I myself, and I think other members of the committee, have been in sympathy with the movement, and it was merely at the earnest request of the board, on account of Maj. Harris, that this was not done before.

Mr. ANTHONY. If the gentleman will permit, I will say that I agree with his statement that it undoubtedly is an economy, that the headquarters should be located in one of the Middle Western or Central States. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman from Kansas yield for a moment? I wish to say that under the administration of the former president, Col. Close, there was an expenditure in Kansas City of something like $3,000 a year for rent, which now has been entirely done away with. Upon the governmental reservation in the central branch home there is abundant room. Offices have been fitted up there in splendid quarters, without additional expense.

Mr. ANTHONY. I want to say to the gentleman that I agree with him that it is the thing to do to locate the headquarters at one of these central homes, where the members of the board will have the opportunity of getting acquainted with the local conditions and the homes themselves, and I think it is a fine thing.

Mr. GARD. I am thoroughly in accord with what the gentleman says.

The Clerk read as follows:

Capitol Grounds: For care and improvement of grounds surrounding the Capitol, Senate and House Office Buildings, pay of one clerk, mechanics, gardeners; fertilizers; repairs to pavements, walks, and roadways, $30,000.

Mr. DECKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do this for the purpose of reading a short paragraph from the Nevada Daily Mail, of Nevada, Mo. During the discussion of the Hay military bill I took occasion to say some words relative to my faith in the dependence that could be put in the National Guard of the State of Missouri, and also saying that I believed the same would apply to other States. I hold in my hand a paper published in the city of Nevada, Mo., of Tuesday, June 20. The call for the National Guard, as you remember, was issued on Sunday night, and this paper, the Nevada Daily Mail, says:

"All organizations of the National Guard have reported to Gen. Clark to-day that they are assembled at their armories ready to move. All now have the strength required by the War Department, but they are being recruited to full war strength. Not a single officer or enlisted man has failed to respond. Gen. Clark issued an order to-night for the troops to move to Nevada to-morrow, and the entire National Guard will be in camp on the State rifle range near here for breakfast Wednesday morning, ready to move to the border when the War Department so directs Gen. Clark. The signal corps will be the first troops to arrive."

[Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

So much of the Agricultural appropriation act for the fiscal year 1916 as authorizes the use of the Maltby Building and the buildings on the west side of New Jersey Avenue between B and C Streets NW. in Washington, D. C., by the Department of Agriculture is repealed.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to inquire of the chairman of the committee the purpose of the paragraph just read, by which the Department of Agriculture is deprived of the use of the Maltby Building and other buildings in that section, and whether that will interfere with the operations of the department?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The agricultural bill a year ago carried a provision authorizing the Department of Agriculture to use the Maltby Building. That building has been condemned four or five times. It is so unsafe that after they inquired into the matter they declined to use it. The ground on which the building stands is needed for park purposes. The Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds says that the Maltby Building is not only unsafe but that if they were to put people in there and a fire should take place there would undoubtedly be a very serious loss of life. Under the circumstances the Department of Agriculture have never taken advantage of the law, and we are repealing it in order that they may go ahead and demolish the building.

Mr. HAWLEY. Do the remarks of the gentleman apply to the other buildings?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The other buildings are not suitable. They are old residences; but the Maltby Building was the principal one that it was designed to reach. It would be a misfortune to have the department utilize it.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will yield, I raised this same question when the Agricultural appropriation bill was up in the Committee of the Whole, and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], in charge of that bill, stated then that the Agricultural Department had never used these buildings and had no use for them, and that he understood the sundry civil bill was to carry an item repealing the authority for their use. That is what this is.

The Clerk read as follows:

Courthouse, Washington, D. C.: For restoration and reconstruction of the exterior and interior of the courthouse, Washington, D. C., including all material, personal and other services, and for each and every purpose in connection therewith, to be expended under the direction of the superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, $200,000, one-half to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States and one-half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This item carries a considerable amount which was not called to the attention of the committee when we were considering the bill. I would like to inquire what is proposed in the reconstruction of the courthouse as provided in this item. I presume this refers to the building in Judiciary Square?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes. The exterior of the building, if the gentleman is familiar with it, is in very bad condition. The building is so arranged in the interior as to afford very inadequate accommodations. The members of the court had the Superintendent of the Capitol make an extensive investigation, and they believe that with this expenditure the building can be put in such shape that it will supply the needs of the District for its purposes for the next 30 or 40 years. Unless something is done there is likely to be initiated a movement for a new courthouse that would require an expenditure of several million dollars.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman does not propose to erect a new building out of this fund by altering the structure?

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is proposed to be done is to face the building with sandstone, tie it in, and rearrange the interior.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why would not stucco plaster, which was formerly used, be as well suited to resurface it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Superintendent of the Capitol stated that with an expenditure of $30,000 or $40,000 to replace the stucco on that character of building would be unwise because it could not be applied in a way to make it permanent. In addition to the outside work the rearrangement of the interior is very important. The justices of the court say that there is absolutely no modern sanitary arrangement for female witnesses, and that the interior arrangement is very deplorable. The exterior and interior work can be carried on at the same time, and with this expenditure this building can be converted into a desirable, substantial building.

Mr. STAFFORD. May I inquire whether the commissioners have made any recommendation along these lines? To me it seems a large amount for the alteration of an old building that is obsolete.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, it is not obsolete.

Mr. STAFFORD. I know it is well constructed, but the interior arrangements are ill suited for the uses of the building.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is proposed to rearrange the interior as well.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman recognizes that $200,000 is a large sum to be expended on a building where the exterior needs reconstruction and the interior needs complete remodeling.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Superintendent of the Capitol thinks that it is a well-constructed building.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no question about that; it is of brick with heavy walls, and I suppose it will require considerable money to alter it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The alteration of the building for these six courts will supply the place of a building which, if authorized, would cost two to three million dollars, and it seems much more desirable to rearrange the interior and improve the exterior of this building, which has a good deal of historic value, and obtain quarters that would be thoroughly satisfactory for years for the needs of this court, and it is on that theory that it will result in a very great saving to do this rather than to wait for a movement initiated for another building. The judges of the court who are working there are very anxious to have these alterations made in accordance with plans that have been worked out. Chief Justice Covington and the other judges believe that it will supply the needs of the District for 50 years to come.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Restoration of lands in forest reserves: To enable the Secretary of the Interior to advertise the restoration to the public domain of lands in forest reserves or of lands temporarily withdrawn for forest reserve purposes, $15,000.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do it for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question in reference to a paragraph we have passed on the same page, page 102, where I find this language:

And of hearings in disbarment proceedings $35,000.

Does the Government have to pay for the proceedings for disbarment?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There are some small sums that are expended for that purpose. These are proceedings brought for the disbarment of attorneys practicing in the Interior Department, guilty of improper practices in land cases. The expense is largely, if I recall correctly, occasioned by taking the testimony in the proceedings.

Mr. CULLOP. Does that apply to the proviso which is as follows:

Provided, That where depositions are taken for use in such hearings the fees of the officer taking them shall be 20 cents per folio for taking and certifying same and 10 cents per folio for each copy furnished to a party.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That was not in connection with disbarment proceedings. This language is inserted on account of this condition: In various States various fees have been fixed by law and there was a great deal of confusion, and this was put in to make uniform the fees for taking the testimony in these land cases. There have been very few disbarment proceedings lately, and I do not know that they are taking any depositions now.

Mr. CULLOP. Do these hearings relate solely to the practice of attorneys before the Department of the Interior?

Mr. FITZGERALD. These depositions are taken in the public-land States where the land is located. That is what the latter part refers to. The expenditures in the disbarment proceedings are insignificant. They have not averaged several hundred dollars in the last five or six years.

Mr. CULLOP. Still, I see the sum here is $35,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Thirty-five thousand dollars is to pay the expenses of hearings in land cases, and then, because there have been occasional small expenses connected with the disbarment proceedings, that item is included so that there might be some fund out of which the expenses of disbarment proceedings may be paid.

Mr. MONDELL. Two or three hundred dollars a year.

Mr. CULLOP. I should think a great department like the Interior Department, with the large number of lawyers they have there, and other officers, with the small number of these proceedings, they could take some of its employees from among their number who could attend to these cases without extra appropriation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is very little expense. It is very rare that it happens, but there have been times when there was some necessity for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There have been times when there has been necessity to incur some of the expense, and the department was embarrassed because there was no provision made for it, and so it was included here. The item is for field hearings, but occasionally something might occur. It is an insignificant part of the work under that. My recollection is that there have been practically no disbarment proceedings now in some time.

Mr. MONDELL. The amount spent for proceedings in disbarment cases, I think, has never amounted to more than two or three hundred dollars, possibly, in a year, and sometimes for a series of years nothing at all.

Mr. CULLOP. Still whatever sum used could be taken from this appropriation of $35,000?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; and that is an item that is but an infinitesimal portion of this entire appropriation.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make this statement to the Members. To-morrow I understand that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] proposes to bring up for consideration a resolution relative to the use of the National Guard in the present emergency. The Army appropriation bill is still undisposed of. There are some deficiency estimates that have been sent in that it might probably be possible to have considered next week. In order that the Members may be advised of it, I shall ask the House to-morrow to sit quite late at night, and hope that Members will make arrangements accordingly, in the hope that we may complete the sundry civil appropriation bill before adjournment to-morrow. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HAY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 15836, the sundry civil appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

REMAINS OF CHARLES H. BINGHAM.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following Senate resolution:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
June 20 (calendar day, June 21), 1916.

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to return to the House of Representatives, in compliance with its request, the bill (H. R. 15282) entitled "An act authorizing the health officer of the District of Columbia to issue a permit for the removal of the remains of the late Charles H. Bingham from Congressional Cemetery, District of Columbia, to Lock Haven, Pa."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the proceedings by which the bill H. R. 15282 was passed will be vacated, and the bill will lie on the table.

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 8654. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead," approved February 19, 1909, by adding a new section, to be known as section 7.

S. 33. An act for the relief of Daniel M. Frost;

S. 1741. An act for the relief of certain homestead entrymen for lands within the limits of the Glacier National Park;

S. 1066. An act authorizing leave of absence to homestead settlers upon unsurveyed lands; and

S. 3132. An act providing for the sale of certain lands in the State of Washington, and for other purposes.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Tavenner amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 32 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, June 23, 1916, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, June 23, 1916.

(Legislative day of Thursday, June 22, 1916.)

The Senate reassembled at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate resumes the consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill, and the pending amendment is the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN].

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I hardly think we can begin business this morning with only five or six Senators in the Chamber. For that reason I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names.

Ashurst	Hardwick	O'Gorman	Sterling
Bankhead	Hitchcock	Oliver	Swanson
Broussard	Husting	Overman	Taggart
Bryan	James	Page	Thomas
Chamberlain	Johnson, Me.	Pittman	Thompson
Clapp	Johnson, S. Dak.	Ransdell	Tillman
Clark, Wyo.	Jones	Reed	Townsend
Clarke, Ark.	Kern	Saulsbury	Underwood
Culberson	Lane	Shafroth	Vardaman
Cummins	Lodge	Sheppard	Walsh
Curtis	Martine, N. J.	Sherman	Warren
Dillingham	Myers	Shields	Weeks
Gallinger	Nelson	Simmons	Williams
Gronna	Norris	Smoot	Works

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I beg to announce that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] is absent from the Senate on official business. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. ASHURST. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Arizona] is unavoidably detained by reason of illness in his family.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-six Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The pending amendment is the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN].

WASHINGTON ASYLUM HOSPITAL.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I do not want to say anything in reference to the pending amendment, but I have here a protest signed by some twelve or thirteen hundred citizens of the District of Columbia, protesting against a change of the Washington Asylum Hospital from the present site to a site near Fourteenth Street in the Northwest. The protest is short, and I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD and then that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Protest against the removal of the Washington Asylum Hospital to the site between Georgia Avenue, Fourteenth, Upshur, and Allison Streets NW.

Whereas it is planned by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and the Board of Charities to use the appropriation requested for a new municipal hospital, in case it is obtained, for the purpose of removing the Washington Asylum Hospital from its present location on Reservation No. 13, where it has been established for 70 years, and placing it under the name of the Municipal Hospital upon the site between Georgia Avenue, Fourteenth, Upshur, and Allison Streets NW.; and

Whereas the placing in a substantial residential neighborhood of an institution which cares for so many alcoholics, dope fiends, mental suspects, and persons suffering from vice diseases, and brought in largely by the police, would be highly prejudicial to the personal and property interests of the residents of the said neighborhood and of those who must travel upon the car lines which will be used by the inmates of the hospital and their associates and by the sick from all sections of the city in traveling to and from the hospital and the dispensary to be run in connection with it:

Now therefore, We, the undersigned residents, property owners, and taxpayers, respectfully but earnestly protest to Congress against any appropriation under the terms of which it will be possible to remove the Washington Asylum Hospital from its present location on Reservation No. 13, and to place it, under the name of the Municipal Hospital, or any other name, on the site between Georgia Avenue, Fourteenth, Upshur, and Allison Streets NW.

NEW JERSEY STATE TROOPS.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to read a short letter that I have received from the adjutant general of the State of New Jersey. Is there objection to reading it at this time?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No one seems to object.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I desire to read this personal letter that I have just received from the adjutant general of the State of New Jersey, and I am frank to say that I am quite proud to read it here in this body:

STATE OF NEW JERSEY,
OFFICE OF THE ADJUTANT GENERAL,
Seagirt, June 22, 1916.

DEAR SENATOR MARTINE: On Monday morning, June 19, we received an order from the President calling for a brigade of Infantry, a squadron of Cavalry, two batteries of Field Artillery, a Signal Corps company, a field hospital, and an ambulance company. Mobilization orders were at once issued, and at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon—

That is, on the 20th—

all of these troops, at maximum peace strength, were in camp at Seagirt, and within a few hours thereafter were under canvas. All horses and mules, amounting to about 900, are either here or en route.

Under the rules of the War Department we are not furnished equipment for more than maximum peace strength. When organizations are ordered to recruit to war strength the extra equipment is supposed to be shipped to the mobilization camp at the time the order for mobilization is issued. We have, as I said before, brought all our men to camp without one slacker.

* * * * * * *

I believe that the State of New Jersey, which is the first to mobilize, has proven that you made no mistake in making the statement you did and in backing the citizen-soldiers of this State.

Very truly, yours,

WILBUR F. SADLER, Jr.

I am very anxious to present this inasmuch as many of our earnest and patriotic associates of this body were so utterly opposed to what they called the tin soldiery of the National Guard.

Mr. REED. I should like to ask the Senator when the New Jersey troops did mobilize?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I will read the statement again.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I am compelled to demand the regular order.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I appreciate the situation, but I should like to read the statement again.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the peculiar situation about the rules of the Senate the Senator from New Jersey is addressing the Senate on the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] to the Post Office appropriation bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Of course, if the Senator is discussing that he is in order.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I have no desire to further detain the Senate, but if I may be permitted to respond to the Senator from Missouri I will say that the statement from Wilbur F. Sadler is that on Monday morning, June 19, he received an order from the President calling for a brigade of Infantry, and they were organized and mobilized on the next day, the 20th, at Seagirt.

I only want to impress upon the Senate, and particularly upon my friend, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], this fact, as he is one of those who talked about the National Guard being a "tin guard."

Mr. REED. I did?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Did you not?

Mr. REED. I was the only man who effectively defended them.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Then I retract it with all apology in the world.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR CLAPP, AT DULUTH, MINN.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, out of order, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] at Duluth, Minn., on May 30.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEMORIAL DAY ADDRESS DELIVERED BY HON. MOSES E. CLAPP, UNITED STATES SENATOR FROM MINNESOTA, AT THE MEMORIAL DAY EXERCISES HELD AT DULUTH, MINN., MAY 30, 1916.

"Veterans, this hour is solemnly dedicated to the memory of your departed comrades, and recognizing this sacred trust, I shall to-day deal only with those problems which are involved in the permanent greatness of the Republic, which your valor saved from dismemberment. For after all, the greatest tribute those who follow can pay you is the faithful guardianship of the legacy you have left us.

CAUSE OF CIVIL WAR.

"Volumes have been written as to the cause of the Civil War, as to the principle which animated those who sought to destroy the Union, and yet the cause can be summed up in one brief expression—greed, and the lust for that power necessary to support the demands of greed. On the other hand, the spirit which animated those who battled to preserve the Union was that spirit of sacrifice which had inspired man in the historic struggle which finally culminated in the establishment of this Republic, exalted, however, in the Civil War to a higher plane than ever before. For, in the past, men had been inspired, in part at least, by the sense of defense, by resistance to oppression, and held together by the cohesive force of a common danger. But the Civil War involved the question whether there existed a spirit sufficient to serve as an inspiration to sacrifice, in the maintenance of the integrity of the Republic against the claim, by a large number of its citizens, of the right to separate, and when the separation would not involve the liberty or directly materially affect the welfare of those who would be called upon to make the sacrifice essential to maintaining its integrity.

"You and your departed comrades answered that question by your patriotism and valor, and when Lee's shattered squadrons melted away at Appomattox the world had learned the lesson that man was not only willing to sacrifice when his rights were involved but that he was willing to sacrifice for the broader welfare of humanity, as involved in the perpetuation of one great and powerful Republic, rather than trust that welfare to the uncertain guardianship and weakness of its dismembered portions.

"In teaching the world this lesson the citizen soldiery of 1861 was exalted to a plane where man had never stood before, and this exaltation was a fitting inspiration to that altruism which, half a century later, prompted the youth of our land to go forth and battle, not for their own rights but that the people of Cuba might be freed from the palsied but oppressive hand which medieval Spain had reached forth and laid upon them.

"While you left us the priceless legacy of a reunited Republic, there came with that legacy another problem which your thinning ranks sadly admonish us can not be solved by you, but must be solved by those who come after. This is the problem we inherited from you, whether we can preserve that virility of citizenship; that spirit as distinguished from the mere form of free institutions; that genuine liberty which involves justice and equality for all. To do this we have to meet that tendency to decay incident to the extremes of abject poverty on the one hand, and the excess of wealth on the other, those twin forces which ever lead to a weak and degenerate citizenship; we have to meet that greed and its attendant lust for power to support its demands, which ever seeks to subordinate the hollow form for the real spirit of free institutions, and enslaves the energy of mind and body under the guise of an overlauded but unreal freedom; we have to meet those forces which thrive upon the destruction of the morals of the people, for immorality and vice are incompatible with a strong and virile citizenship. As human progress has ever kept pace with the broadening of the human equation as a force in government, it follows that the forces which weaken and demoralize citizenship and subordinate the energies of the many to the purposes of the few must to accomplish their purpose destroy the real spirit of free institutions and leave only their shadow.

"To guard itself against this effort is the vital problem of free government. In the language of Lincoln, 'A nation of freemen will live forever, or must perish by suicide.' Now, in a republic the citizen exercises a more direct influence upon governmental policies, and it follows, from this relation, that under a republic more than a monarchy every single force opposed to the general welfare turns to government, either to secure special advantage or immunity in legislation, or, failing in that, to secure immunity in the administration of the laws, the passage of which it has been powerless to prevent.

HUMAN EQUATION.

"The force which has always been arrayed against progress and the broadening of rights has always sought to minimize the human equation with which it had to deal, and hence has ever been opposed to the spirit of real democracy; and well it might be, for a genuine democracy, one in fact as well as in form, is the surest guaranty of the morals of a people essential to a vigorous citizenship, and the surest guaranty of that justice and equality which lies not only at the foundation of human rights but is the basic principle upon which real national greatness must rest.

"This problem involves not only our permanent greatness but it also involves our historic mission, for if this Nation has any mission other than to give to the world something of the radiated form of free government, it is to meet the new condition and carry into a nation's civil life that virility of citizenship, that purity of purpose, that spirit of justice involved in the establishment of the form of free government.

PROBLEMS MUST BE MET.

"These conditions must be met and this problem solved, and, in the light of history, in the failure of other forms, it can only be solved by the establishment and maintenance of a genuine democracy. In the establishment of a real democracy we must meet the same force—that is, the same lust for power—which so sullenly retreated before that historic advance which led to free government.

MENACE TO FREE GOVERNMENT.

"The force which would destroy the real spirit of free government menaces it at every point and, like a beleaguering army, sends forth its sappers and miners to prepare the way for the assaulting column. Already, under the guise of maintaining the Constitution, an attack has been launched against the spirit of real democracy. In the old struggle were the battle-ax and spear, while in this new struggle is involved that respectability which has always been the shield of reaction; the glitter and glamor of the dominion over property; its supposed power to withhold or bestow benefaction; its dwarfing of courage and enslavement of the mind. We must guard against the false concept of the possession of wealth and its supposed benefaction.

"Already we have in this country too many who feel that the few should sit around the banquet board heaped so high that some crumbs must fall, that the gathering of such crumbs be regarded as a privilege bestowed upon the many. There are too many who, in fear and trembling, accept the crumbs forgetful of the basic fact that wealth is the product of the activities of all.

STRUGGLE FOR DEMOCRACY.

"In the struggle for genuine democracy it will not do for us to content ourselves with the thought that the sole mission of this Republic is to see itself reflected in a rapidly developing republican growth throughout the world. We may well rejoice that such has been the result of the establishment of our Republic, and every American may well feel a thrill of pride as he contemplates a world-wide tendency to a transition from monarchy to republic. But we can not develop, nor even preserve the spirit of our own institutions, by simply basking in the refulgence of a reflected sunlight, even though it may be traced to the influence radiating from the Republic which we have established. No great nation ever fell before external forces until first weakened by internal forces. In all ages a favorite instrument in the hands of that power which struggled against the advancing spirit of liberty was the dazzling picture of foreign conquest ever so effectively employed to deaden the sensibilities of a people to the wrong and oppression visited upon them. Proud of our influence in the world-wide sphere of thought, purpose, and development, as we have a right to be, let us not make the mistake of those who have gone before, but realize that our mission to the world and our duty to the world, grand and splendid as it may be, is secondary, after all, to our mission in the development of a true democracy at home, and a duty to ourselves in preserving our institutions from those causes to which can be traced the wreck and ruin of empires in the past.

WORLD-WIDE INDUSTRIALISM.

"So, too, of our boasted world-wide industrial triumph. It may justly appeal to our pride to be told that the products of our industrial activities can be found everywhere, indicating the coming of a world-wide industral supremacy, but such pride, laudable as it is, must not blind us to conditions prevailing in the great centers of industry. We can not still the voice of protest, nor conceal the wreckage of humanity. We can not efface the resentment born of industrial conflict, silenced for the time only by the show of armed force, merely by the boast of a world-wide industrial supremacy. This should not, however, deter us from seeking that supremacy, but should impel us to development and the maintenance of that spirit of justice and equality that will enable us not only to secure a world-wide supremacy but at the same time strengthen and insure its permanency by basing it upon the peaceful and harmonious cooperation of the industrial forces at home, which can only be done through the medium of exact justice and equality of opportunity.

FREE GOVERNMENT AT HOME.

"The first and all-important triumph which we should achieve is the triumph of the spirit of free government at home and in contemplating the reflected glory born of our republican institutions and our industrial supremacy we must not allow either to blind us to the sense of our duty to America.

"We can not emphasize too strongly the necessity of looking back and behind every wrong to discover the force that is responsible for that wrong. We must, of course, ever seek to have regard for law and insist that the cure for its miscarriage must be through orderly methods. Still we must recognize that it is the principle of justice which we should reverence and for every wrong committed and every unjust burden imposed we must trace it to the human agency that is responsible for it, because only in proportion as we disillusionize the abstraction and see the man behind the injustice will we awaken to a sense of the imposition and seek an orderly remedy for its abatement.

SURVIVAL OF THE FITTEST.

"Another instrument, rather a slogan of the old struggle, was the inhuman cry 'the survival of the fittest.' This cry we still hear echoed to-day, but we must remember that it is the law of the brute world and had its place where everything was subordinated to inordinate greed and power, and man was but the plaything of that brutal spirit personified by such power. The very fundamental of democracy is the right of all to exist with equal privilege and opportunity. If we are to reap the benefits of that human association called 'government,' all must participate in the making and administration of its policy.

GROWTH OF FREE GOVERNMENT.

"A genuine democracy must be found in the genesis of man's struggle for the form of free government. He first awakened to the thought that the glitter and glamor of royalty was unreal; then to the thought that no man—no truly human being—was ever good enough, or wise enough, to be the self-constituted guardian of the welfare of others; then to the thought—which was the real mainspring of progress toward civil liberty—that man was not made to be laid as a sacrifice on the altar of royal ambition; and then he grasped the thought that even the moat-protected parapet was powerless to stay God's eternal purpose of justice, arrived at through human sacrifice; and then it blossomed forth into free government in the birth of this Republic, and he found its realization in the thought that the common welfare should be the goal of human association and that humanity, in the concrete, is able, under divine guidance, to develop its own instrumentalities.

PEOPLE SHOULD RULE.

"The opponents of democracy assert that it is unsafe to trust all to that broad equation called 'the people'; that there must be some limitation upon their power as a check upon their mistakes. To this challenge we would reply that if there is a single chapter in our country's history which any patriot would wish to have forgotten, that chapter does not record a mistake of the American people, but records the abuse of power, or the betrayal of democracy at the hands of the few. The opponents of democracy are fond of asserting that for the evils of democracy we are asking for more democracy. This is a false assertion. We should distinguish between the evils of a system, if it has any, and those evils which are foreign to it and opposed to its best purposes, and find lodgment in it only through the instrumentalities of and betrayal by the force opposed to the system itself.

"It is urged again by the opponents of democracy, and, strangely enough, by the chief beneficiaries of governmental generosity, that democracy develops a tendency on the part of the people to look to the Government for benefits, and that there is danger in the extension of this policy.

"Real, genuine democracy either contains within itself the element of the solution of the problem we are considering, or those who have laid down their lives in the effort to establish it have sacrificed in vain. We can not believe that this sacrifice has been in vain, for back of the spirit of sacrifice planted in the breast of man there must have been a divine purpose to the fruition of which sacrifice was essential.

"Veterans, every great achievement has a dual existence. It lives related to those who achieve; it may also live related to the great movement of humanity. But it has often happened in the past that the flower of a nation's manhood wrote into history some great achievement which, as their achievement, became immortal. But the fruit of the sacrifice was lost by those for whom it was made, and, aside from the achievement showing forth the valor and patriotism of those who wrought it, it has ceased to be of historic significance.

DEEDS OF THE DEPARTED.

"The achievement of your departed comrades and yourselves, as wrought out upon the battle fields of this Republic, will remain immortal. That immortality you and your comrades, living and dead, secured. It is yours, sacredly yours, and no betrayal of the legacy which we have inherited can ever rob you of that crown of heroic valor, of unselfish patriotism, the luster of which will brighten as time goes on. No betrayal of the legacy which we have inherited can rob you of the immortality of your achievement. On the other hand, whether that achievement becomes immortal as related to one of the greatest transitions in the history of the race will depend upon whether the American Republic is destined to serve only as a medium from which man passed from monarchy to the form of republic or whether this Republic in itself shall solve the problems born or the transition from the old to the new, and this depends upon us and those who are to follow.

"God grant that the American people, in preserving this legacy, may make your achievement as immortal in its relation to the story of humanity as you made it immortal in the annals of heroism. Despite the tendency of the day to subordinate altruism to commercialism, despite the tendency to blind ourselves to internal conditions in our contemplation of a world-wide influence, for one, I believe that the mission of our Republic is something more than to merely give to mankind as its contribution a world-wide extension of the form of free government; that its real mission is deeper and broader than that, being the development of a real democracy, calculated to develop the best and highest in citizenship, and that our people will find the inspiration to do this in recalling the achievements of yourselves and your departed comrades, for where will man find greater or grander inspiration?

INSPIRATION OF WARRIOR.

"In all ages man has gone forth to battle obedient to one of three conditions. He was inspired by the lust of conquest, or he went obedient to the conscript law, or the instinct of self-defense steeled his heart and strengthened his arm while he waged the warfare of defense. But in 1861 there was no thought of conquest. You scarcely knew what the conscript law meant, and no instinct of self-defense born of imperiled firesides prompted you. But lifted to an exalted plane, you went forth to battle and to die, that the spirit of free institutions might be preserved.

WHAT WOMEN DID.

"As with the manhood of 1861, so with the womanhood of 1861. In all ages woman has cheered man when he has gone forth to battle. Sometimes she has shared in the lust of conquest. Again she has yielded, with man, obedience to the conscript law, and again, she has shared with him the instinct of defense. But the womanhood of 1861 was lifted to a plane where womanhood had never stood before. There was no thought of conquest, scarce a knowledge of conscript law, and no imperiled firesides, but the womanhood of 1861 gave her benediction and bade manhood go forth to battle and, if need be, to die for the spirit of free institutions. We must not forget that it is not man alone who sacrifices in war; woman must ever bear her share of the sacrifice, and it detracts nothing from the meed of praise that is due you to say that, in your heroic achievement, you had the inspiration born of the comradeship of brave men, but the womanhood of 1861 knew nothing of that. No waving banners, no martial music, no comradeship of brave man in camp and on battle lines, but alone she kept her vigils and bore her burden as only woman can.

"Surely, inspired by the memory of the heroism and patriotism of that day, inspired by the mute eloquence of the graves of our heroic dead, the American people can not be recreant to that trust which your sacrifices committed to their care."

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10484) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment is the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN]. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it. The noes have it, and the amendment is rejected.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I was trying to ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment. The Senator from Florida himself is not in the Chamber, and I think we ought at least to have the yeas and nays on it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays are requested on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment is lost, and the question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS].

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator from Florida was in his seat a moment ago. I am sure he will be here in a moment.

Mr. BRYAN entered the Chamber.

Mr. SMOOT. He is in the Chamber now.

Mr. BANKHEAD. He is now here. I do not think it is fair to him to vote down the amendment in his absence.

Mr. BRYAN. Then I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida moves to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment submitted by him was rejected.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment is the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN].

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I had not supposed that the Senator from New Jersey would conclude before I could return to the Chamber. I was called to the Marble Room for a few moments.

The amendment which I have offered does not differ in many respects from the substitute offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS]. The main difference is this: Under the amendment of the Senator from Iowa the present weight basis remains in effect until it is changed by order of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Under the amendment which I offered the space basis adopted by the House in the pending bill would go into effect and remain in effect until the Interstate Commerce Commission changes it.

My amendment authorizes the Interstate Commerce Commission to investigate the rates that the House bill contains. If the rates are too high or too low, it authorizes the Interstate Commerce Commission to put in just and reasonable rates.

It then provides that those rates shall go into effect, and that the Postmaster General shall carry them out. It then further provides that no change in the rates so established by the Interstate Commerce Commission shall be made except upon an application to the commission, either by the Postmaster General or by the railroad companies representing 25 per cent of the mileage engaged in the carriage of the mails.

The amendment which I have offered confers upon the Interstate Commerce Commission as completely as does the amendment of the Senator from Iowa the power to investigate and determine what is a just and reasonable rate.

So, then, Mr. President, we get down to the one proposition of difference of method in ascertaining the rate of pay of the railroad companies. The last clause of the amendment of the Senator from Iowa provides that the present weight basis shall remain in effect until changed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, if it is changed. I prefer the other plan, for this reason: Several years ago Congress constituted a joint commission to study this question, and after a study of some year or two that joint commission, consisting of Members of the Senate and the House, in a voluminous report advocated the abandonment of the plan of paying by weight and advocated the establishment of a new plan of payment according to the space used. If you give any weight to the finding of that commission, the House provision ought to be adopted; but if that is of no value, then you continue in effect the old system that has prevailed for so many years.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that the result of the study of the commission established by Congress is entitled to some weight. I may say that the House bill adopts the rates put into effect by the commission. If those are just rates, or if they are entitled to be considered prima facie fair rates, then the burden is upon the railroad companies to overturn those rates. If, on the other hand, the method of payment we have followed is unjust, that injustice continues until, by application of the Post Office Department, the Interstate Commerce Commission revises the rates. Then litigation ensues through the courts for several years; in other words, you leave the department without the advantage of putting into effect rates that the commission established by Congress has said ought to be put into effect, and allow the old rates, which that commission decided ought not to exist, to continue, and place the burden upon the Post Office Department to get rid of them. That may mean a delay of several years, and undoubtedly will mean that delay.

Mr. POMERENE rose.

Mr. BRYAN. On the contrary, if the rates found by this commission are reasonable and just, this act will put them into effect. If the companies complain, they go into the courts, and the rates advocated by this commission, advocated by the House bill, and advocated by the Post Office Department become effective, and the burden is upon the company to displace them. I now yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, since I rose the Senator from Florida has in part answered my question. There is not anything in the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] which would prevent the Interstate Commerce Commission from adopting the space plan of payment as provided for in the House bill if they should consider that the proper and the just method to adopt.

Mr. BRYAN. Not at all. I realize that.

Mr. POMERENE. But, of course, under the Cummins amendment also, if either party should be dissatisfied after those rates are fixed, the question could still be opened up on the application either of the department or of the railroad companies.

Mr. BRYAN. Of course, it amounts to this, Mr. President, that under the amendment I offered, if the railroad companies are not satisfied, they go into court, if I may say so, to overturn the rates; but the rates go into effect at once.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; but also under the plan adopted by the House, and which, as I understand, the Senator from Florida desires to have the Senate approve, the Post Office Department is given the right to overturn the rates set forth in the Post Office bill if the department should be of the opinion that those rates are not sufficient.

Mr. BRYAN. There is no question about that; and I submit now, even to the friends of the Cummins amendment, this proposition: It seems to be the sense of the Senate that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall fix the rates and put them into effect, and that the Post Office Department shall obey that order without ever coming back to Congress for Congress to put into effect a system of rates. The language of the House bill which it is proposed to strike out requires that after the finding by the Interstate Commerce Commission the rates shall come back to Congress for approval. Now, the Senator from Iowa is not in favor of that and the Senator from Ohio is not in favor of that. They both are in favor, whenever the commission gets charge of it, for them to fix the rates finally and conclusively; and though they are opposed to the House bill as thus amended, it seems to me that even they would be in favor of this amendment to the text of the House bill, because certainly it gives the final power to the Interstate Commerce Commission and does not require the matter to be brought back to Congress. In that respect it is exactly similar to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the Senator from Florida, I think, has misinterpreted my amendment in one respect. He has just stated to the Senator from Ohio that under my amendment, if the railway companies were not satisfied with the present system, they could apply to the Interstate Commerce Commission for a readjustment. That is not quite right.

Mr. BRYAN. No; I did not mean to give that impression.

Mr. CUMMINS. Under my amendment it is made the duty of the Postmaster General within three months to lay the whole subject before the Interstate Commerce Commission, after which ensues a regular hearing, with the railway companies as defendants.

Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Florida made another answer to the Senator from Ohio, about which I have some doubt, and I desire to ask him whether I fully understood it. I think he stated that under his own amendment—that is, the amendment of the Senator from Florida—the Interstate Commerce Commission would be at liberty to adopt either the space basis or the weight basis, or both. I think the Senator from Florida is mistaken about that. He may have so intended it, but I think that, with his amendment adopted, the Interstate Commerce Commission would be compelled to adhere to the space basis, although it might fix an entirely different compensation for the space required. What is the opinion of the Senator from Florida about that?

Mr. BRYAN. I do not remember that I discussed that question, or that it was involved in any answer I had given the Senator from Ohio. The language is very similar to the language of the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, and is, in effect, that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall—> make a thorough investigation of the justness and reasonableness of the rates of railway mail pay fixed under this section; and if it finds that they are not just and reasonable for the service performed for the Government * * * it shall make findings of what rates are just and reasonable.

That power is broad and would not limit the Interstate Commerce Commission, in my judgment, to a space basis.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the Senator from Florida may be right, but it impressed me on first reading the amendment that inasmuch as the House bill declares definitely that, for instance, a 60-foot car shall have—I do not remember the exact amount—we will say 21 cents a mile and that inasmuch as that rate is referred under the Senator's amendment to the Interstate Commerce Commission, the entire authority of the commission would be to say whether 21 cents or 22 cents, or whatever the rate may be, is a reasonable one or not, or whether it should be 18 or whether it should be 30 cents.

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator can not find that in the language of the amendment, though.

Mr. CUMMINS. Not in the amendment of the Senator from Florida; but that is the language of the bill and that part of it is not disturbed by the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. BRYAN. I think it is; I think it authorizes the Interstate Commerce Commission to fix any just and reasonable rate upon any basis it may choose; but, if not, I submit——

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not at all positive that the Senator from Florida is not right. I was impressed with a doubt about it, however.

Mr. BRYAN. Whether that is true or not, under the view of the Senator from Iowa I should think he and Senators of the same mind would vote to substitute the amendment which I offer for the text of the House bill, because under my amendment the question does not come back to Congress. The Interstate Commerce Commission fixes these rates and relieves Congress of entering upon a question which the Senator argued yesterday Congress was not qualified to consider.

Mr. CUMMINS. While I believe that the Senate committee amendment as amended by my proposal is better than the one now proposed by the Senator from Florida, I do not want the Senator from Florida to assume that I intend to vote against his amendment. I shall express my view about that as soon as I have an opportunity to do so.

Mr. BRYAN. So, Mr. President, it seems to me that those who may be in favor of the amendment of the Senator from Iowa and who are in favor of conferring upon the Interstate Commerce Commission the power of fixing just and reasonable rates should vote in favor of the amendment which I have offered to the text of the House bill conferring that power, whereas the text of the House bill retains it in Congress for the final decision of the matter.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, I want to ask the Senator a question. If his amendment should be adopted and then the committee amendment unamended or as amended by the proposal of the Senator from Iowa should be adopted subsequently, that would destroy the effect of the proposal of the Senator from Florida entirely, would it not?

Mr. BRYAN. Undoubtedly; of course that is plain.

Mr. HARDWICK. I merely wanted to have that made clear.

Mr. BRYAN. Certainly, that is plain. There are two propositions. The text of the House bill as amended is one proposition, and the committee amendment or the Cummins substitute is the other proposition; and those of us who think that the matter ought to be referred to the Interstate Commerce Commission for decision should vote for my amendment, although they might prefer the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HARDWICK. They might want to strike it all out.

Mr. BRYAN. They might want to strike it all out. I am not sure whether the amendment of the Senator from Iowa relates back to the beginning of the committee amendment on page 55.

Mr. CUMMINS. My amendment, if I may answer the question, begins with line 1, on page 56.

Mr. BRYAN. I did not know whether or not the Senator had modified it. Then, Mr. President, we have on page 55 this sort of a proposition that is in conflict with the provision incorporated in the amendment of the Senator from Iowa. The amendment of the Senator from Iowa provides that the present method of determining railway mail pay shall continue until overturned, if it is overturned, by the Interstate Commerce Commission; but that part of the committee amendment on page 55 changes the law with reference to that, and orders an annual weighing wherever desired by the carriers, a weighing to be carried on by them. So, wherever they want it, they can have it, and wherever they do not want it they need not have it; indeed, it is specified that, where they do not desire it, the quadrennial weighing shall continue. I do not know whether or not any such instances exist, but I can easily imagine that where the weight has increased very much, the carriers would ask for a weighing, and where it has decreased they would allow the pay to continue under the quadrennial weighing plan.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I am placed in a somewhat peculiar position in considering the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida. I am deeply convinced that the rates for railway mail pay ought to be fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission. That is the result which I hope will be finally attained, and in all other matters of detail I am not so greatly interested. We must come finally to determine or vote upon the relative merit of the House provision as it may be amended and the Senate committee amendment as it may be modified upon the floor. I do not know what the outcome of that vote will be. I believe that the Senate committee amendment, modified by the proposal which I have presented, is better and will reach a wiser result than the House provision as proposed to be modified by the Senator from Florida; but if the Senate committee amendment is rejected, then it is my judgment—and I am very clear about that—that the amendment of the Senator from Florida vastly improves the House bill.

For these reasons I shall vote for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida; but when we come to vote as between the House bill and the Senate Committee amendment, if it is modified as I have proposed, I shall vote for the Senate committee amendment. I thought it was due to the situation that I should state these circumstances, because I may not have an opportunity to do so later.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I do not think the proposal of the Senator from Florida materially improves the House proposition. I do not think it is any worse, except that the Senator from Florida appears to provide—and, of course, I say that with all personal deference to the Senator—for a fair investigation of this matter, and at the same time, the result of his proposal, if it were adopted and the House proposal as amended by him prevailed, would be that we would decide this question first and investigate it afterwards; that we would first change existing law and an existing system that has been in force in this country for forty-odd years, and then afterwards have the Interstate Commerce Commission decide whether or not the change was proper; that is, if the language of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida can properly be given the construction for which he contends.

If it be true, as stated by the Senator from Florida, that the effect of his amendment would be to remit to the Interstate Commerce Commission for its final decision not only the question of what specific rates of railway mail pay are reasonable and just, but also the general and preliminary question as to what plan or system of fixing those rates and arriving at a just compensation.

So far as I am concerned, I do not believe that the proposal of the Senator from Florida on its face can possibly mean what he suggests. The proposal must be considered in connection with the text of the bill which it proposes to amend.

The House bill, as suggested by the Senator from Iowa, provides that a certain system of fixing railway-mail compensation, to wit, the space system, shall be adopted, and provides, with great particularity of detail, what that system shall be and what the rates established under it are to be. But the Senator from Florida then comes and proposes to amend that by providing an page 54 to strike out all from line 6 to line 26, inclusive, as the committee proposes to do, and in lieu thereof to insert:

> The Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby directed to hold hearings and to make a thorough investigation of the justness and reasonableness of the rates of railway-mail pay fixed under this section.

Fixed how, under this section? Fixed on the space plan, fixed on a certain predetermined and settled plan, according to the text which he proposes to amend; and that part of the text he does not propose to change. So that if the proposal of the Senator from Florida were adopted, undoubtedly, judging language by its ordinary and usual meaning, the necessary effect of his amendment would certainly be to provide that the Interstate Commerce Commission should determine what rates were reasonable and just to be paid under the space plan; in other words, how much the Government should pay for a given amount of space, and whether the rates fixed in the pending bill are too high or too low, and to what extent, if any, they ought to be changed. I therefore find the same objection to the proposal of the Senator from Florida that I find to the text of the House bill.

Since the text of the House bill itself provides that the railroads, or the department, either, for that matter, may appeal to the Interstate Commerce Commission on the matter of these rates, personally I do not believe that the proposal of the Senator from Florida involves any material change from the original proposition of the House itself, except possibly this change:

The House provision did provide that such appeals should not be made by the common carriers unless 51 per cent joined in the appeal. Under the language proposed by the Senator from Florida, instead of requiring 51 per cent of them to agree before they can appeal from an unjust rate, he is not going to let them do it unless 25 per cent of them join in the appeal. So that the only material or substantial difference carried by the proposal of the Senator from Florida is that 25 per cent of the railroads may appeal under his proposal instead of 51, as fixed in the House bill.

Under the Cummins amendment and under the committee proposal as it would be amended by the Cummins amendment, any carrier could appeal. The Interstate Commerce Commission would fix the rates for all carriers after general and thorough hearings and after a full investigation of each question, and any carrier that felt that it was aggrieved could, within a specified time—I think it is six months—have the commission reopen the question again. As far as I am concerned, I think that is justice. I do not see why, if one man is being wronged, he shall have no redress unless 25 per cent or 50 per cent of other people that are being wronged will join in with him; or if only 1 per cent are being wronged or only 5 per cent are being wronged, I do not see why they should be remediless, unless it should also happen that either 25 or 51 per cent are also being wronged.

Mr. President, I do not believe, personally, that the proposal of the Senator from Florida greatly improves the House proposition. The House proposition itself, according to my mind, is manifestly unjust. I hope at a later time, when we have perfected the text of the House proposal either by accepting or by rejecting the proposal of the Senator from Florida, to submit some observations on that question. For the present I shall content myself with saying only one word on that question, and that suggested by the last observation of the Senator from Florida.

The Senator from Florida calls attention to the fact that in the first part of the committee's proposal the committee provides for an annual weighing of the mails instead of a quadrennial weighing, as now provided by law, but that we do that solely on condition, as he said, that the railroads want it. It is not that at all.

The only objection to annual weighing that has ever existed in the mind of any fair person who wanted both the Government and the railroads treated justly was the expense of it. That has been the only objection ever urged by any fair-minded person. The railroads, appreciating that, offered before the Senate committee to pay for annual weighing if we would have it done. They said that if the Congress would provide for annual weighing they could have their employees do it with very little expense to themselves, and that they would bear the entire expense. Therefore the committee, taking them at their word, provided for annual weighing at the expense of the railroads, and they declined to give it except in cases where the railroads met that expense, as they had professed their willingness to do.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will my colleague on the committee allow me to suggest, in connection with this weighing to be paid for by the railroads, that it would be done under the supervision and direction of the Post Office Department?

Mr. HARDWICK. Undoubtedly; that was another thing that the Senator from Florida said. He said the railroads were to do this. The language employed in this proposition is exactly what has always been employed in the law. Every weighing that we have ever had has been done under language just like this. We took it from the statutes. We simply provided that the railways should do it under the supervision and direction of the Postmaster General, and that is the way it has always been provided. We said that if the railroads insist that the weight of the mail is increasing so rapidly, especially on account of the addition of the parcel post—and the Postmaster General has been obliged to agree to that contention, because there are two separate sections of this bill where he has recommended increases in their pay because of the parcel-post business, and that no man objects to—and if they are right in their contention that there ought to be an annual weighing of the mails on account of the increase of the business, certainly no honorable or honest Government official who understands the question, no Member of either House or Senate who wants to do right about it, can insist that they ought to be required to carry mail or parcel-post matter or anything else for the Government for nothing.

If they are right, I say, on that point, then there ought to be an annual weighing. They came up and said: "We are treated unjustly about this matter. The Post Office Department itself admits it. The Post Office Department twice since the parcel-post system has been inaugurated has been compelled to recommend the enactment of legislation increasing our compensation by certain amounts, which are more or less guesswork, on account of this parcel-post business put on us. Now, we insist that an annual weighing will meet that situation; and if the Government of the United States is too poor to pay it, if the Post Office Department can not spare the funds to pay it, we will pay it ourselves." We felt it was simple justice to give them an annual weighing at their own expense, so that the Government of the United States might pay them for what they are actually doing now and not for what they did four years ago, when there was no such burden on them.

I do not know that I care to say more. Whether the proposal of the Senator from Florida is adopted or not does not seem to me a matter of any importance, because the proposal of the House, whether modified by the amendment of the Senator from Florida or not, is manifestly unjust, manifestly unfair, and the proposal of the Senator from Florida amounts to little more than saying this: "We will execute this criminal first and try him afterwards. We will settle this question first and investigate it afterwards."

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. HARDWICK. I do.

Mr. POMERENE. As I understand the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida, it would commit Congress to a space plan.

Mr. HARDWICK. It would, undoubtedly, and without the slightest investigation.

Mr. POMERENE. I was going to ask the Senator whether the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads had investigated this question sufficiently to enable them to determine whether or not the space plan would be preferable to the weight plan?

Mr. HARDWICK. I thank the Senator for inviting my attention to that. That is something that I ought not possibly to have omitted from my observations at this stage of the proceedings.

Let me say that the Senator from Florida contends that the space plan is approved by the judgment of the congressional commission. There have been, I think, in the last 44 years, either four or five commissions that investigated the general subject of railway pay. Only one of them, to wit, the Bourne Commission of 1912—I believe it was organized in that year—undertook to deal with the space plan. It is true that the Bourne Commission did recommend a space plan for fixing the railway mail pay; but the only member of that commission who is on our committee, and the only one that I know of, as far as I know—there may be others—who is a Member of the Senate, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the distinguished chairman of this committee, assured the committee that his investigations even as a member of the Bourne Commission were such that he did not believe in the space system, and had so stated at the time this investigation was concluded and when this report was made.

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask the Senator a further question while he is commenting upon this subject?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes, sir.

Mr. POMERENE. Did the committee come to any conclusion with reference to the combined space and weight system which has been suggested?

Mr. HARDWICK. I am going to endeavor to answer that, too, in connection with the Senator's other question. The committee undertook to investigate this matter as much as it could. I will say to the Senator from Ohio and to other Senators who are interested that I, for one, studied it as hard as I could day and night during the whole time this question was up in the committee and pending before the committee. I was absolutely unable to arrive at a conclusion as to what is exactly right. Why? The gentleman connected with the Government service who knows more about this question than all the balance of them put together, Mr. Stewart, said before the committee that the space system undoubtedly would not do for the very small railroads of this country, and therefore, in proposing it in the legislation that the department proposed to the House of Representatives, they had to have special authority of law to authorize the Postmaster General to except such of these little roads as he thought best from the operation of the space system. In other words, the very small roads that carry pouch mail only cannot operate on the space system, and the Senator can readily see why.

The Senator from Florida says that this thing has been carefully worked out. I tell him that it has not, in my judgment; and I do not mean to state it brusquely when I say that. No commission that ever yet investigated railway mail pay investigated it at a time when the parcel-post system was in operation.

The Bourne Commission concluded its investigation before the inception of the parcel-post business; and the truth about this matter, in my judgment—I have arrived at that much of the truth, I think—is that the main contention, both on the part of the Government and on the part of the carriers, about this question, grows out of this very parcel-post business. What its effect will be on the volume of mail carried, of course, depends upon what the rates are, and how generally and liberally the parcel-post system is used by the people of the United States. What its effect will be on certain classes of business that the railroads have handled in other ways, or that the railways have handled for the express companies, and what will be the effect upon the revenues of the railroads of adopting this space plan, no living man knows or can even guess. That is the trouble.

Do we want to treat the railroads unfairly about this matter? Do we want unjustly or inadvisedly to jump into something that may cost them a great deal of money? I think not. I have never been either accused or suspected of having any undue affection for the railroads of this country. I have never been on that side of the public questions involved in the controversies that raged about them; and yet I would be ashamed of myself if I did not want to treat them justly about this and every other matter. I do not believe in hanging people first and trying them afterwards. I do not believe in changing a system that has been in effect forty-odd years without any previous proposal to change it, a system that is in force in every civilized country on this earth except Canada—and Canada has only recently changed to the space plan—without some more investigation than we have had yet, and some investigation by somebody who can consider what effect the parcel-post business will have on this entire question and all of its ramifications, both from the standpoint of the Government and from the standpoint of the carriers.

That is the situation. We trust the Interstate Commerce Commission to investigate and finally pass upon questions for your people and for mine, Senators. They fix freight, passenger, and express rates for every citizen of this Republic; for every person, natural or artificial, within its limits. They are organized for that work. They are equipped for that work. We like to believe—and I do believe, for one—that they are suited for that work, and that they have the judicial temperament and the judicial environment and the judicial disposition to try questions of this sort fairly and justly. We do not believe that on the recommendation of the Post Office Department, even if it is backed, to some degree, although not exactly, by the findings of one commission out of four or five, we ought to undertake to settle offhand this great question.

Why, Senators, it seems to me that it would be wrong to run the serious risk that we take of doing somebody very great injustice if we act hastily in this matter. I believe, myself, that before we take quite such sudden or drastic steps as are proposed in the House legislation there should be thorough investigation. No member of this body knows anything about it yet.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I offer a further suggestion to the Senator? It seems to me that by our legislation, or our attempt at new legislation, we have discredited the weight system. Now it is attempted by the House to adopt the space system, but they have thoroughly discredited it by saying that the Postmaster General may, under certain circumstances, change these rates if in his judgment they are not sufficient, and, secondly, they further discredit the Postmaster General by saying that the whole proposition may be referred to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. HARDWICK. On appeal.

Mr. POMERENE. And yet the amendment of the Senator from Florida would commit the Congress to the plan which they themselves have discredited.

Mr. HARDWICK. Exactly; and for that reason I am opposed to it. They are so certain that it will not work universally, and they are so certain themselves that it is not fair as a general system, that they have made this provision; and that is what I referred to just now, that Mr. Stewart made a statement about.

> The Postmaster General is authorized to make special contracts with the railroad companies for the transportation of the mails where in his judgment the conditions warrant the application of higher rates than those herein specified and make report to Congress of all cases where such special contracts are made and the terms and reasons therefor.

Mr. Stewart, their great expert—and he is a great expert on this question—said that the reason why they put that in was that they knew that the space system would not do for the very small railroads of this Republic north, east, south, or west.

The Senator from Ohio is right. They admit all that. My own opinion is that what will be finally worked out will be some sort of a classification of the railroads. The space system probably will apply very well to some of the trunk lines, the weight system to other lines where the conditions are different, and a combination of the two, and probably other considerations besides either space or weight, will enter in many cases into determining what the rate should be. My own opinion is that, without prejudging this question, without ignoring the many difficult and important and intricate and involved transportation problems that are involved in it, without doing any injustice to the railroads or without doing any injustice to the department, we ought to submit this matter to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and my opinion is, further, to refer it to the commission with instructions to take the final action on it just as they do about every other rate—freight, passenger, and express—in this country, for your people and for mine.

Now, Mr. President, it is no disparagement of the Post Office Department or of the Postmaster General to suggest that the department and its chief executive officer are not in a judicial position about this matter. On the other hand, it is a matter of compliment to so state, because there never was a Postmaster General who was worth his salt who was not trying to do his very best for his great client, the Government of the United States, and trying to make the best showing that his department could make when the balance sheets are drawn up and submitted to the American people. Those are the motives that must be first with the Postmaster General, and I am commending them, not criticizing them. While he may be most efficient and entirely loyal to the Government of the United States and its interests, that does not qualify him for any judicial decision of this sort, on an issue where the question is, How much money shall his department pay out to the carriers for service in transporting the mail? On the other hand, we ought to be equally impartial and just to the railroads of this country.

Mr. President, this committee was unjustly assailed, slanderously assailed by a minor official of the Government, because it dared to express its opinion about this matter, and dared to assert what it thought was right and just to the public and to the railroads and to the Government. I am not going into that. It was a disgraceful episode that it will do no good to dwell upon, when that gentleman undertook to say that the committee had surrendered to the contention of the railroads.

He did not undertake to mention the fact that the great Merchants' Association of New York and 59 of the most important and influential chambers of commerce of the country had insisted that there ought to be a thorough investigation of this great question by the Interstate Commerce Commission before Congress should undertake to take any action upon it. He did not undertake to state, although he must have known it, that the representatives of the great Farmers' Union of this country came before your committee and urged that the matter be referred, either one way or the other, to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Do you know why the merchants and farmers of this country are interested in the question? It is not only from a desire to see justice done, but because they know that unless we do justice and pay the railroads, not an unreasonable rate nor an exorbitant rate nor an unduly high rate but a just and a fair rate, and one that is moderately compensatory for the services they render, somebody else must foot the bill.

Fifty-nine million dollars are carried in this bill for the transportation of mail by the railroad companies. It is no present economy to adopt the proposition of the Senator from Florida and to provide that, pending the investigation of this question and its final determination, this new system shall go into effect and the entire system changed without investigation, because Mr. Stewart testified before the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads that if the roads were paid on the scale fixed in this bill the railroads of the country would receive $5,000,000 more than they do under existing law. Not only that, but the distinguished gentleman who is chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads of the House of Representatives made substantially the same statement.

Now, nobody is favoring the railroads if they want to keep the existing law in force pending this investigation and determination of this question by this great semijudicial body.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to ask the Senator in reference to the payment by the space system to the railroads of $5,000,000 additional if it is not true that the railroads are opposed to the space system and do not want the House provision?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes. I will tell the Senator why. I say to you undoubtedly the railroads do not believe these estimates. The railroads do not think that the Post Office Department or the House chairman is right about it. They do not believe it is true. They believe that the discretion of the Postmaster General, the authorization given him under law—and by the way it has always been carried in the law; and I do not want to quibble about that—might be so exercised as to prevent them from receiving the maximum rates carried in the bill——

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to ask the Senator in this connection if there is anything in the contention that if the space basis is fixed as a matter of law it will enable the Postmaster General to economize in a way that he could not economize under existing law? Is it the belief of the railroads to any extent that they fear that although if they would carry the same number of cars they carry now they might be increased, but that the Postmaster General, if the space system were adopted by law, would be enabled to curtail the space somewhat and thus reduce the compensation?

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will let me answer him, all those contentions are made and a thousand more. There is no question that the Senator or any Senator can suggest that has any pertinency to this great issue that has not been raised; and as to all of these questions and the contentions that are directly conflicting—and I must say in many cases the evidence is also directly conflicting—it would be utterly and absolutely impossible, with the duties that Members of the Senate and Members of the other House of Congress have upon them, for any considerable number of Senators or Representatives to determine the truth between these manifold and conflicting contentions.

For that reason I say we must submit it in one form or another to that great agency of Congress which has been organized and equipped to determine the truth of just such great issues as this, and that ought to be fair enough, and that, I believe, is fair enough to do simple and absolute justice between the Government and the department and the people on the one hand and the railroad companies on the other.

Now, just a word more and then I have finished. These farmers and merchants did not ask us to refer this question to the Interstate Commerce Commission entirely from motives of patriotism. They realized if they cut the railroad revenues materially in respect to this matter the railroads are bound to make it up somewhere else, either in freight or passenger rates. The railroads are bound to make a living; they are bound to pay their fixed charges; they must be allowed to earn a reasonable return on their investment. Therefore I say that it is not to the interest of the people of the United States to try to save money for this department of the Government unjustly at the expense of the carriers. Our own constituencies will have to foot the bill if you do. Not only every motive of justice and fair play urges us to have this question fairly investigated and justly determined, but every motive of self-interest for our constituencies impels us to adopt the same course.

Now I am through. As far as the proposition of the Senator from Florida is concerned, I regard it as utterly immaterial whether we adopt it or not. The House proposition is wrong, in my judgment, whether it is modified by the Senator's proposal or not.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I am not an expert on the question at issue before the Senate. I was, however, impressed with the fairness and justness of the space basis as it was presented to the committee by its advocates, and personally I should have preferred adopting the House provision and then referring the question to the Interstate Commerce Commission to determine whether or not the compensation to railroads as provided for in the bill was adequate.

I was not particularly moved by what the farmers and the representatives of the farmers' unions, and the boards of trade said to the committee. I saw what appeared to me to be a well-organized, carefully laid plan on the part of the representatives of the railroad companies to cripple the parcel-post system. The railroad companies were there looking after their own interest, and most of the gentlemen who came before the committee and asked the committee to refer this question to the Interstate Commerce Commission impressed me with the fact that they were there at the request of and in the interest of the railroad companies. That fact was manifest and the motive behind it all was unmistakable.

But I realize that the problems involved in this question require serious thought and careful consideration to understand and solve them. I am just as much opposed to doing the railroads an injustice as I am the humblest citizen of this Republic. To my mind the act of robbing the railroads involves the same moral turpitude that a law withholding the right of a square deal and the privileges of a freeman from a private citizen does.

The State can not afford to show partiality in dealing with its citizens. The public is the beneficiary of the parcel post. The transmission of the mail is a public necessity. Its purposes and designs are to serve the many rather than promote the private interests of the few. Above all things the statutes of this Republic must be just, and the rich and poor alike should share the benefaction of its righteous laws.

When the railroad companies render service to the Government, it is the duty of the people represented by the Government to pay the railroad companies adequately for that service. There should be no difference of opinion on that question. Many of my colleagues on the committee in the discussion of this question urged the course which was finally pursued by the committee and the amendment adopted which has been so clearly and forcibly stated by the eloquent and learned junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK]. They insisted that before we change the system which has been in vogue so long that the matter should be thoroughly investigated by the Interstate Commerce Commission and then with the light before us we could embark upon the new system knowing exactly what we were doing.

That argument appealed to me and I finally acquiesced in their conclusion.

We provided that the mails should be weighed annually by the railroad companies under the direction and supervision of a Government official, the railroad companies or their representatives telling us that that could be done at very little expense to them, because they had the men there to handle the mails. There was no special objection to that, though I doubt whether an injustice would be done if the mails were not weighed annually.

I had hoped that the committee amendment might be adopted without opposition. I wanted the evidence, I wanted all the data that the Interstate Commerce Commission is so well equipped for ascertaining, gathered and submitted to Congress, and then I wanted Congress to determine this question and settle it right. I do not share the opinion that Congress is incapable of dealing with the question.

Mr. President, I can not agree with my colleagues on the committee that this matter ought to be left to the Interstate Commerce Commission unconditionally. The tendency to government by commission is becoming too popular in this Republic to suit my democratic notions. To my mind such a policy will lead inevitably to disaster. The further you get away from the ballot box the more liable the functions of government are to be prostituted to personal, partisan, and selfish ends.

I am perfectly willing that this question should be submitted to the Interstate Commerce Commission for investigation and report, and therefore I trust the amendment offered by the committee may be adopted. The representatives of the railroads have expressed themselves as being satisfied with that method; the people will be satisfied with it. Then let the commission go on and investigate the matter and report the result of their investigation to Congress, and then let Congress take it in hand seriously and do the thing that is best to be done for the people of America.

Mr. President, I am very glad that my colleague on the committee, the brave and patriotic Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], has seen fit to call to the attention of the Senate the unwarranted and inexcusable slander that was issued by the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General against the committee for doing its duty. The conduct of that officer was grossly improper, and it is a matter of which Congress ought to take further notice.

To have the character of the honorable Members of this body aspersed by an insignificant head of a bureau should not be tolerated. Added to the gross impropriety of his conduct, this self-constituted censor is guilty of the crime of misuse of public funds in the circulation of his base slander. If Senators are thus to be punished by having the filth and slime of slander which exudes from an unpunished underling smeared upon them for daring to do their duty to their constituents, the American people will soon lose that confidence that they always repose in the integrity and manhood of their representatives in Congress.

But returning to the question at issue, Mr. President, I think, as the Senator from Georgia has said, this question ought to remain as it is provided for by the committee amendment. The old system can be endured a short while longer without serious detriment to anybody, and after the Interstate Commerce Commission shall finish its investigation and submit the result of its study of this question to Congress, then Congress can proceed to legislate intelligently. Possibly an entirely new system or basis for the payment of the railroads and the perfecting of the Postal Service will be effected. But I do not want Congress to turn this matter over entirely to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

There is one thing that struck me in the investigation of this question before the committee. I think it is the first time in the history of the Government that the railroads have shown themselves perfectly willing to trust implicitly the Interstate Commerce Commission. I asked one of the railroad presidents who came before the committee how it is that they had changed their attitude toward the Interstate Commerce Commission; they used to fight the commission. "Well," he answered, "we think they are doing right now." They may be. I trust they will do right in this instance. I want to give them an opportunity to investigate this subject and give the people of America the result of their investigation. But I am not in favor of delegating to commissions the power which Congress has arrogated to itself for all these years, and which I believe vital to the future welfare of the American people.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, it seems to me that Congress ought to determine the system by which compensation for carrying the mails shall be reached. The railroad companies have a right to a reasonable pay for what they do, no matter what system may prevail, but it is not one of the provinces of the railroad companies any more than any other citizens to say to Congress the work shall be performed on this or that basis. We ought to be moved in the question it seems to me——

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. In just a moment I will yield to the Senator. We ought to be moved as to how the method of compensation should be reached, by what would be the most economical method, and whatever system we arrive at, then whatever the railroad company does in carrying the mail it must have reasonable pay for doing. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. HARDWICK. I was just going to suggest to the Senator that I quite agree with him—we ought not to let the railroad companies fix the plan or system, yet I suppose the Senator will also agree with the statement that we ought to hear every reasonable argument they have to present and every objection they have to make about the matter.

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly, I agree to that. I do not want the Senator to get the idea now that I am complaining of the method pursued by the committee or by anybody else. I think they ought to be heard.

Their interests, however, as railroads are confined entirely to the compensation that they should receive for whatever they do. Their interest in general legislation may be the same as that of any other corporation or of any other individual moved by a patriotic or worthy purpose or motive; but the idea I am trying to convey is, that no matter what system we decide as a matter of law shall be adopted in weighing the mails, the question of compensation is a different proposition. In that the railroads which carry the mail have a different interest, and they are entitled to fair treatment and to fair pay. To my mind, however, whether their pay should be fixed on a space basis or on a weight basis is a question entirely of an economic nature, and we ought to decide it on that basis. When we have decided that, then the compensation to the railroads, so far as the railroads are concerned, becomes a direct question. They are entitled to more consideration, perhaps, than is the ordinary citizen because they have a direct interest in it; and we ought not to try to enact any system into law that would be unfair or unjust to anybody.

I approach the subject of the weighing of the mails with some hesitancy and some embarrassment, because I know it is a complicated matter, which I do not profess fully to understand, although ever since I have been in Congress I have tried to devote to it all the time I could spare. During 13 years' time I have seen practically every year a contest over the question of compensation for carrying the mails. It is a complicated subject. The law as it now exists, and has existed during all those years, is one which it is difficult to understand, and after one understands the law it is still more difficult to apply it and to get its actual application as it works in the weighing of the mails.

In addition to that, it is an expensive system; it costs a great deal of money. In addition to that, it is not fair; it is not the fairest way, either to the Government or to the railroads, especially when you weigh the mails but once in four years. I believe it has been said a good many times—and I think that has been the idea of those who framed the law providing for a weighing once in four years—that the rate was liberal, on the theory that, as a rule, the weight of the mail would increase. However, if you weigh the mail every year you increase the expense, and still you will not have arrived at a just system.

The weighing system, to reduce it down to an absolutely just basis, would require weighing the mail every day in every year, all the time. That would be fair. The only objection to that, as I understand, is the expense; it would be very expensive. When the committee brings in an amendment here providing that the mails shall be weighed once every year at their expense, if the railroads want it weighed, to my mind they have not provided any remedy for the difficult situation. Directly the railroads would pay it; it would be a legitimate expense on the part of the railroads; but economically the people in the end pay it, no matter what the amount is, and they ought to do so. It is proper; it is a proper charge for the railroads to make. So, as a matter of fact, if the railroad pays the expense, it will only be an additional railroad expense that must be made up either in the charge for carrying the mails or somewhere else; it must be paid for, and if the railroads make, let us say, 7 or 8 per cent on money invested, this is going to be one of the deductions which will be taken out, and there must be a sufficient contribution from some other source to make up that expense.

I speak of it in no spirit of criticism, because it would be a legitimate expense. I mention it only because, according to my idea, we have not solved anything when we have taken away the necessity of paying the bill from one pocket and put it over to another pocket. It must be paid by the people, if not in taxation directly to the railroads themselves for carrying the mail, then in the carrying of passengers or of freight, although it would come nearer reaching a just conclusion. I admit that. The objection to the system is its expensive nature.

Now, the committee propose that this matter shall be investigated by the Interstate Commerce Commission. Mr. President, in the last 13 years, since I have been a Member of Congress, somebody has been investigating this subject most of the time; but yet we have never changed the law. About three years ago—it was before I came to the Senate, though I know the report was made afterwards—we appointed a joint committee consisting of a certain number of members of the House Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads and a certain number of members appointed from the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads to investigate the question of mail pay. I believe it is conceded that that joint committee made a very diligent inquiry into the subject. I know I had conversation with members of the committee while the investigation was going on, and talked especially with the chairman, ex-Senator Bourne, a great many times about the work, and, in a general way, I knew what they were doing. They made an elaborate investigation. They were equipped for that investigation; they were provided with all the funds they needed; they employed all the experts they wanted; they were unlimited practically in the scope of the investigation. Mr. President, they reported here some time ago, but Congress did nothing. I take it that, if the Interstate Commerce Commission makes another investigation, the danger will be that when their report comes in it will lie on the table and molder until it is gray with age.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HARDWICK. I desire to make one more suggestion. The great trouble we find about accepting without any qualification the recommendation of the last commission which investigated this subject is that the Parcel Post System had not then been inaugurated, and the commission did not calculate what its effect would be on any of the questions that they investigated or in reference to any of the conclusions which they reached. The Senator from Nebraska sees, of course, what a great difference that might make.

Mr. NORRIS. That would make a great difference in the compensation that would be paid; but, as I understand, whether we had the space basis or the weight basis, if we had a system providing that so much per pound should be paid or so much should be paid for space, as the Parcel Post System developed there would be greater compensation. It would increase automatically.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the Senator pardon me for just another suggestion?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield; certainly.

Mr. HARDWICK. In Great Britain they seem to have reached a solution of that very troublesome question by allowing the railroads a certain percentage of the revenue derived from the carriage of parcel-post business, and I expect that is one of the ways that we may have to consider very seriously in this country.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; and I think that is also done in France and in quite a number of other countries; in fact, in most of them. I think this expense of carrying the mail is compensated for to the railroads by a division of the proceeds. That is the system by which the express companies operate in this country. There is, however, not any proposition before the Senate now from the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads to have that matter investigated, as I understand. Perhaps the amendment will be broad enough to have it investigated by that committee.

This committee did not do it, but I presume the joint committee looked into it, and, in a general way, they reached the conclusion that we ought to pay on a space basis. It may be that that report appealed to me because I had believed for a good many years that that was the proper solution of the problem.

Mr. President, as to the present system the ordinary citizen can not tell anything about it unless he makes a special study of the question. The ordinary Member of the House of Representatives and the ordinary Member of this body does not know much about the intricacies of the weighing of the mail and the compensation the railroads get for carrying it. We know in a general way about how much they get; we can read the statute, but the difficulties confronting the carrying out of the law under the weighing system are multitudinous and almost unlimited.

The space basis, it seems to me, is a simpler method. I was impressed by what the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] said in regard to what it was claimed by some people would be the result; that is, that it would increase the expense that the Government would incur if we adopted that system, although, as he very frankly admitted, the railroads are opposed to that change, and, of course, are opposed to it on the theory that it would decrease the compensation they would receive. It seems to me that might be important from a railroad standpoint, but it is not so important in considering the fundamental principle involved.

If any system we adopt is economically sound, the amount of compensation must depend upon the services rendered by the railroads; but I can see, I think—and I have heard many other gentlemen offer this as an argument on behalf of the railroads in opposition to the change and on behalf of the Government in favor of the change—that if we adopted the space basis as provided for in the House bill it would give to the Postmaster General an opportunity to bring about a great many economies. We ought to be in favor of that.

In other words, if that basis were adopted the Postmaster General would call upon the railroads for a certain amount of space for so many compartment cars on certain railroad lines to carry the mails. He would be moved, as the Senator from Georgia so well said, by a patriotic desire of economy to reduce the cost of the operation of his department as much as possible, and he would not call for any space that he did not need. The railroad companies, in my judgment—and I have talked with some railroad officials who have privately admitted that this is true—believe that by the practice of economy the amount of money paid to the railroads for carrying the mail in the aggregate would be reduced; but if that can be done and the railroads still get reasonable pay for what they do, then, as an economic proposition, we ought to do it. It looks in the direction of economy, and we ought to be in favor of economy so long as we do not interfere with efficiency.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. May I suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that he ought not to accept the claims of either side of this controversy without the most careful scrutiny? For instance, upon the point the Senator is just discussing the ordinary weight of the mail in a storage car at the present time is about 6 or 7 tons; that is the average weight carried in one of those cars, which has a capacity for carrying 20 tons, we will assume, and that is the fact. Now, let us think of two cars starting from New York City to Chicago, one of them filled to its capacity with 20 tons of mail and the other, a precisely similar car, with a load of but 6 or 7 tons. It is prefectly obvious, of course, that it will cost the railway company more to carry the fully loaded car to Chicago than it will cost to carry the partially loaded car. The railway company is entitled to fair compensation for the service; and that fair compensation depends, in a measure at least, upon the cost of the service. If we accept the space basis, we would be compelled to plunge into this uncertainty—and in my judgment it would be just as uncertain and uneconomical as the weight basis—we would have to pay for that space upon the theory that there is some kind of load in it. What kind of load? Shall we pay for it upon the basis that it has 6 tons or 10 tons or 15 tons or 20 tons?

If in fixing the rate of compensation on the space theory we assume that the car will have 15 tons in it and we load it with but 6, we have greatly overpaid the railroad. If, on the contrary, we pay for it on the basis of, say, 10 tons, when, as a matter of fact, it is loaded with 20 tons, we will greatly underpay the railroad. There will be that uncertainty in the space basis, and nothing can eliminate it; it is not possible to eliminate it.

I agree that there is very great uncertainty about the weight basis, and, as I said yesterday, after having studied the matter with all the care I could, I am utterly unable to reach a conclusion with regard to the proper theory, although I am tending toward a combintion of both. Where the car is a peculiar car, fitted up for a post office, and where the facilities of the car are more important than the contents of the car or the weight of the car, then I am strongly inclined toward the space basis; but where the car is loaded to its capacity, just as an ordinary freight car is loaded, then I am very clear that the weight basis is the more economical for the Government as well as the more certain in its application. I wanted to suggest this to the Senator from Nebraska, because I know he has studied the same subject, and he desires to reach exactly the same result as I do.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the suggestions made by the Senator from Iowa are very illuminating to my mind. They do not, however, at least in any conclusive way, convince the mind that the space basis is not preferable to the weight basis. Whatever system we adopt, we will not be able to get, in every day of every year, exact justice. We do not get it now. The railroad companies do not get it in anything that they carry. They carry passengers now on a space basis, but they charge just as much to carry the Senator from Iowa from Washington to Chicago as they do to carry the Senator from Massachusetts; and yet everybody knows, without putting them on a scale to have a test of it, that there is more expense involved in carrying the Senator from Massachusetts to Chicago than there would be in the case of the Senator from Iowa. The Senator from Massachusetts comes nearer getting the worth of his money than the Senator from Iowa does. They will charge you so much per carload for hogs to go from my home town to the South Omaha market; and if the hogs are large and the combined weight is great, they get no more pay for it than though the hogs are only half that heavy. In carload lots it is a space basis, even in freight.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Nebraska is in error about that, in part at any rate. In a carload of hogs the weight is about the same, no matter what the size of the hogs may be. I suppose the larger the hogs the fewer there are to the car; but the railways have a minimum weight upon which the shipper must pay, no matter whether the hogs are there or not.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I think they do. In other words, if the shipper shipped one hog and got a car to ship it in he would have to pay for a good many hogs that he did not ship. There would be a minimum charge for that space.

Mr. CUMMINS. He would have to pay the rate on the minimum carload, whatever it might be.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. But the illustration which the Senator from Nebraska has just given, in which the Senator from Massachusetts and myself were compared, is a very good one. It shows exactly what I tried to say a few moments ago, although the Senator from Massachusetts does not outweigh me so much as he does some other Senators in the Chamber. The passenger is carried on a space basis.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to say that I was referring entirely to physical weight in pounds. I had no reference to any other basis of comparison.

Mr. CUMMINS. The passenger business is done upon a space basis, really. The car is especially fitted for that work rather than to carry weight, just as certain postal cars are fitted for carrying the mail and the distribution of the mail while the car is traveling. I am very clear that the space basis is the most certain as well as the most economical for that part of the service; but I am just as clear that for the heavy mail—the ton mail, if you please—that is carried precisely like any other freight you can not eliminate eventually the factor of weight.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, of course, if we were going to be obsolutely accurate we ought to classify it, probably, like they do freight; but it is an impossibility to get absolute accuracy with regard to anything of this kind. We do not have absolute accuracy now in the transportation of passengers or freight or express or anything else. The weighing system, in order to be fair, ought to be put into force every day; that is, the mail ought to be weighed every day. Doing it once a year will only make the difference less and the wrong less than exists now. If we were going to fix a rate and only have a four-years' weighing, assuming, as we would naturally assume, that the post-office business would increase as time went on, probably we would fix a liberal rate, on the theory that before the four years were up they would be carrying a much larger volume in weight, and also in volume, than they would at the beginning of the four-year period. If we had a space basis, it would be automatic. If you could weigh the mail every day that would be automatic. No one contends for that, because it would probably cost more to weigh it than it would to carry it.

We eliminate, to begin with, the enormous expense of weighing the mails; and it does not make a particle of difference whether the Government pays it directly or whether the railroad pays it in the first place; the Government pays it in the end. It is in the bill. It belongs there, and you can not get it out. If we have a space basis, it is eliminated to begin with. It is automatic. If the parcel post, or any other part of our mail business, increases, the Postmaster General simply orders that much more space, and pays for what he gets, and he will not order any that he can not use. He will fill it up as much as he can to its capacity, which he ought to do. The railroads do that in their own business. Every man does that in his own business. If you can carry in two cars what you now carry in three, it is economy to carry it in two. It is economy both for the railroad and for the Government. Of course the railroad would rather carry it in three cars, because they would get pay for three cars; but coming down to an economic basis, it is an economy that in the end would redound to everybody to carry it in two cars instead of three, if you could reasonably do so.

It seems to me that the space basis is the proper one, and it seems to me that Congress ought to determine that by law, and that it is not any more the business of the railroads than it is the business of any other individual whether we are to provide by law that it shall be on a space basis or a weighing basis or any other basis. It is a principle that we ought to put into law and decide whether the pay should be by space or by weight.

In my judgment we eliminate a large amount of the difficulties and the intricacies that surround this railway-pay business if we adopt the space basis. We will put it on a basis where the ordinary citizen can read the law and understand it and see how it is applied in practice. There is not anybody except an expert that can do that now under the weighing system. The weighing system is unfair because under the law that exists now it is only weighed once in four years, and mail on one route may go up and on another one it may go down. In one case it is unfair to the railroad and in the other case it is unfair to the Government.

I believe—I should like to be corrected if I am wrong—that it costs $300,000 to weigh the mails, in round numbers. If it is weighed every year, it will cost four times more to weigh it than it will to weigh it once in four years. If you weigh it once in six months, it will cost eight times more—and disabuse your mind of the idea that the consumer does not pay the bill. The Government pays it, or its people pay it somewhere, and it is a proper charge. It is not automatic, and therefore it does not go up and down according to the volume of business done. The space basis does. We provide by law that we will pay by space. If the business goes down, we are paying the railroad companies less for doing less work. If the business goes up, we pay the railroad companies more for doing more work; and in either case it is just and fair.

On the question of rates, the amendment now pending, offered by the Senator from Florida, simply submits the question of rates to the Interstate Commerce Commission. If we submit anything to the Interstate Commerce Commission, that is all I believe we ought to submit.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, that is not the view taken by the Senator from Florida of his amendment. I asked him that question specifically, and he thought otherwise. He thought the whole matter would be submitted to the Interstate Commerce Commission. I confess that I agree with the Senator from Nebraska. I believe that the amendment would prevent the Interstate Commerce Commission from making any inquiry as to the merits of the space and the weight systems.

Mr. NORRIS. Did the Senator contend that the amendment he has offered would give the Interstate Commerce Commission authority to put into effect some other system?

Mr. CUMMINS. He said so this morning.

Mr. NORRIS. I am getting my idea from the amendment itself. I did not hear the Senator say that. I do not see how, on reading the amendment, anyone can get that idea, although I may not have read it carefully enough. I will read the amendment. In the first place, remember where this comes in the bill. It comes in the bill right after the place where the space system is provided for. The bill provides for the space system, just exactly how it shall operate, what it is, and what the pay shall be; and right after that comes this amendment, or it will come in there if it is adopted:

The Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby directed to hold hearings and to make a thorough investigation of the justness and reasonableness of the rates of railway mail pay fixed under this section, and if it finds that they are not just and reasonable for the service performed for the Government by the railroad mail carriers it shall make findings of what rates are just and reasonable and shall certify such findings to the Postmaster General, who shall adopt such rates, and, where greater or less than the rates fixed under this section, shall readjust the compensation of the carriers in accordance therewith. No change shall be made in the rates fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission except by the commission after investigation, which shall be made only upon application of the Postmaster General or the representatives of railroads with an aggregate mileage of at least 25 per cent of the mileage of the railroads carrying mails.

To me it is perfectly plain that the only thing the Interstate Commerce Commission can do if that amendment is agreed to—and it will be their duty to do that—is to proceed to investigate the reasonableness of the rates fixed in the section that immediately precedes this amendment in the bill. If they find, for instance, that those rates are too high, they will certify not only that they are unreasonable and too high, but they will certify to the Postmaster General what is a reasonable and proper charge; and immediately the Postmaster General will put into effect those rates so certified to him, and they become the rates.

If later on, through changed conditions, these rates become unreasonable—either too high or too low—it provides that the Attorney General or the railroads representing 25 per cent of the mileage of the railroads of the country can apply again to the Interstate Commerce Commission; then they will make another investigation and fix the rates again, and those rates shall remain in effect until another application and another investigation are made. It ends the entire controversy, it seems to me, and I do not know how any man can complain, whatever system he may be favorable to, of the justness of the proposition. It gives the Government and it gives the railroads each the right to complain; and then, after investigation is made by the Interstate Commerce Commission, the rates that they find to be right are put into effect, and they remain in effect until, under the law, somebody feels aggrieved, either the Government or the railroads, and makes another complaint and has another investigation.

To my mind it is perfectly plain and perfectly simple. I do not see how anyone can construe that language to mean that it gives to the Interstate Commerce Commission the right to put in the weighing system. The bill to which this is an amendment provides specifically for the space system, and this is an amendment to that provision.

It seems to me that Senators who are opposed to the space basis, but who favor the weight system, ought still to vote for this amendment if they believe it would improve the House text. For instance, I am going to vote against the Senate amendment when we reach it, but I believe the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa improves the Senate amendment. I am going to vote for it. I would rather have it in that form than in the form in which the committee have reported it. But whether his amendment is agreed to or not, as against the House provision in the bill, I am going to vote against the amendment when we finally come to that test, because I believe we ought to stop investigating. We have investigated enough. It is a question for Congress, anyway, to decide what system should be put into effect, whether weight or space; and I vote for space because, from what investigation I have been able to make, backed up in the main by the judgment of those who have studied it more than I, and in whom I have great confidence, I believe the space system is the most economical. So far as rates are concerned, they are provided for outside of that. The railroads will get what is coming to them, and what they are lawfully and justly entitled to, no matter which system is adopted.

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President, if an excuse is needed for entering into a discussion of this question, it is because I have long been interested in this branch of the service, and I believe I may be able to throw some light on this subject. Therefore I venture to rise to address the Senate on the bill.

The primary objection that I have to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa is that it leaves the existing system as it is—first, the determination of railway pay according to the weight system, and, secondly, it in a way approves, or at least does not disturb, a change in that system in the way of weighing. I am referring particularly now to that part of the proposed amendment which deals with the annual weighing. The amendment of the Senator from Iowa begins on line 1, page 56, I believe, and it proposes to leave intact this part of the recommendation of the Senate committee which provides that—from and after the passage of this act and not less frequently than once every year to cause the United States mails to be weighed simultaneously on all railroad mail routes for a period of 30 successive working days, and when such annual weighing is completed he shall readjust the annual compensation of railway mail pay on the basis of the average daily weight of all the mail carried on each route as ascertained by the actual weight taken, as herein provided, which readjustment shall be effective on and after the 1st day of July following such weighing.

The main argument in behalf of the Senate committee amendment, as I understand it, is that we are leaving the system of weighing, the system of railway compensation, where it is. I want to take issue with that, and say that it is disturbing existing conditions very materially in favor of the railroads and against the Government.

This matter of railway mail pay has been a subject of a great deal of discussion and a great deal of investigation. I have had the department compile for me a history of the legislation upon this subject, which I should like to place in the RECORD as an appendix to my remarks. From this it appears that for a great many years, as far back as 1838, statutes were passed regulating the mail pay of railways. I do not propose to rehearse the whole history of this legislation here, but it gradually worked down into a system whereby the Government caused the weighing of mails to be made every four years, and the rate of mail pay was fixed on a basis which continued for years in that particular section. Although in fact there has been weighing each year in the United States, yet each quarter section of the United States is weighed only once in four years, and the mail pay—that is, the rate per ton-mile, or per hundred pounds per mile, or whatever the basis or unit of computation is—is based upon the weight procured in one year over a particular section of country and over a particular railroad in that section.

It clearly appears from this legislation that in fixing the rate per ton-mile, which was to continue for a period of four years, both the department and Congress and the railways took into consideration the anticipated increase in those four years, and consequently a higher rate per ton-mile was paid the railroads for that hauling than would have been paid if there had been an annual weighing.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HUSTING. I yield.

Mr. HARDWICK. Has the Senator the authority for that statement, especially in view of two reductions——

Mr. HUSTING. For that reason I am going to put into the RECORD the history of railway mail-pay legislation.

Mr. HARDWICK. Something more than a mere statement, because I do not think that is a fact.

Mr. HUSTING. It is a history of legislation?

Mr. HARDWICK. I know, but who is the compiler?

Mr. HUSTING. And I am going to draw this inference from it.

Mr. HARDWICK. Can the Senator cite from the record to show what was done?

Mr. HUSTING. I am going to cite from the record the facts, and from those facts I am going to draw an inference, and I am now drawing an inference which I am trying to elucidate. I say, when the weighing was made once in every four years both the railways and the Government must have taken into consideration the anticipated increase in the weight during those four years and consequently raised the rate per ton-mile to a sum which would fairly and equitably cover the anticipated increase. I do not think it requires any specific testimony to that effect, because in all the discussions, not only upon this subject but upon every other subject involving railway pay——

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HUSTING. Certainly.

Mr. HARDWICK. I wish to ask the Senator if that be true how he accounts for the horizontal reductions that were twice made, one of 10 per cent and the other of 5 per cent?

Mr. HUSTING. Horizontal reduction?

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator is right in that contention, on what theory and on what basis were the horizontal reductions made twice after the act of 1872?

Mr. HUSTING. I think that regular horizontal reductions might have been made without any reference to that part of it, on the general principle that it does not cost the railroads of the United States as much to haul a ton-mile of any freight or express as it did 50 years ago. This rate, as will appear from the record, that is now charged the Government I have no doubt in my mind is excessive compared with other services of like nature which the railroads are rendering the public generally. I think the effect of the general reduction of the expense of hauling a ton per mile would have warranted not only a 5 or 10 per cent horizontal decrease, but, as compared with the rates the ordinary citizen has to pay the railroads, would have warranted a far greater reduction.

That in no wise affects the proposition I am trying to make. I started to say that in every discussion I have ever heard about the adequacy of railroad compensation I have always heard argued the danger to the railroads resulting from the fear that they were not going to get compensation enough. I do not think it is very complimentary to the railroads to say that there will be danger to them because of fear of loss, because in their dealings with the Government and in their dealings with the people and in their dealings with others the railroads have found themselves well able to take care of their own interests and to see that they did not lose any profits.

I think there is a far greater danger, Mr. President, that the public will not get adequate service at fair prices than that the Government is going to do its business on an inequitable basis to the railroads. I have heard it argued over and over again that there is danger that the United States and its agents, its Cabinet officers, for instance, like the Postmaster General, acting like a tyrant, were going to crush the railroads. I have never been able to understand that solicitude, that anxiety, about the railroads not getting sufficient pay, because experience has shown that they have always gotten all that was coming to them. I might go further, and say that the history of every investigation has shown that they not only got all that was coming to them, but a great percentage more.

Now, that is a matter that is open to discussion. I think everybody understands it, believes it, and knows it. I think the railroads will agree themselves that it is a fact if we get them into a corner and ask them about it. That is not the danger at all. I have found that the danger usually, in connection with the public service, is that of the public being too solicitous through its representatives of the interests of the railroads, and too fearful lest some harm should come to these carriers.

There is no doubt in my mind that when the rates were fixed and mails weighed once in every four years there was taken into consideration the anticipated increase within those four years. I have not the slightest doubt that if the records were examined and this question discussed at all the record would show that in dealing with railroads and fixing the amount per ton-mile on the mail carried there was taken into consideration the percentage of increase in the preceding four years in the history of the development of the mail service and this was reflected in the rate per ton-mile. That is the position, those are the premises, upon which I am going to argue this case.

Now, what is proposed to be done. Why do you not let well enough alone and say we want to maintain the existing system until the Interstate Commerce Commission makes this change? That would at least be a consistent position. Then the question would merely resolve itself to one between the amendment of the Senator from Iowa and the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

They do not do that. What do they do? They say that the mail shall be weighed every year if the companies want them to make the weighing. They do not put in a provision that there shall be a weighing every year if the United States wants the mail to be weighed. In fact, under the provisions of this recommendation of the committee, the United States can not demand a weighing except once in every four years.

Now, what is going to be the consequence? The consequence is simply going to be that if the railroads find their mail increasing they will demand a weighing. If they find their mails decreasing on any particular line they will not demand a weighing. Is it fair to the Government that you should place within the hands of the railroad companies the right to say when they want a weighing?

There is talk here about the expense of weighing. The expense of weighing is a mere bagatelle compared with the tremendous amount of revenue that goes to the railway companies for carrying the mails.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the Senator specify the amount?

Mr. HUSTING. I am told that it is $400,000 a year for one weighing all over the United States.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. If the Senator will permit me, I think I recall very well the statement of the representatives of the railroad companies. They agreed to pay the entire expenses of the weighing, the mails to be weighed in the presence of any officer the Post Office Department might designate, the local postmaster, or any other officer.

Mr. HUSTING. I believe it says under the supervision of the Post Office Department.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will pardon me the Postal Union provides exactly the same as the existing law.

Mr. HUSTING. That may very well be. I am not dwelling on that, but I do say if the practice is going to be the practice which obtained a great many years ago then we are going back to a practice that has been condemned, because the mail, as a matter of fact, in the last 40 years has been weighed by United States Government officials. I have not compared the provisions of it, but regardless of what is in the law I want to say to the Senator as a matter of fact, and I will make that statement on my own responsibility and that of the officers of the Post Office Department, they are weighed by men sworn in by the Post Office Department and not by employees of the railway company.

Mr. HARDWICK. Exactly. If the Senator will pardon me, that is exactly what this contemplates. We use exactly the same language that is now provided by law. We expect to have it done in exactly the same way.

Mr. HUSTING. That is another question. I am not addressing myself to that yet. The point I am addressing myself to particularly is that you are giving to the railroad companies the option to weigh or not to weigh when they see fit. Now, if to weigh or not to weigh is the question, then they are not going to weigh unless they are satisfied in their minds that they are hauling more mail than they did before.

Mr. HARDWICK. Has the Senator any doubt upon that?

Mr. HUSTING. I have not any doubt that it is increasing all the time.

Mr. HARDWICK. Therefore every one of them will weigh.

Mr. HUSTING. But I say this to the Senator, that when they are weighed in 1916 under the present system they are going to be paid on this basis of the weight and at a rate which already reflects the anticipated increase.

Mr. HARDWICK. Of course the Senator quite understands if that is his argument he is totally in error.

Mr. HUSTING. I am not sure——

Mr. HARDWICK. I will show him.

Mr. HUSTING. I am not able to put my hands on the precise direct evidence where it was said that when we make the rates we may expect the Government to pay for the anticipated increase; but I call the attention of the Senate to this proposition, that for the last 40 or 50 years there has been a weighing only every four years and that the railway companies have not been permitted to weigh again during the four years. The railroad companies know their business certainly as well as we know ours. When we enter into a rate agreement with the railroad companies for a four-year period the inference is inevitable that we are paying on that rate for four years.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will pardon me, I do not care anything about inferences. The testimony is undisputed the other way.

Mr. HUSTING. I should like to have my attention called to evidence which shows that the railroad companies did not in the four years include the anticipated increase.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator pleases I do not want to ruin his speech, but I can cite him to the fact.

Mr. HUSTING. I should like to have the Senator cite that.

Mr. HARDWICK. I cite the Senator to the hearings before the Senate committee held April 14, 15, 17, 18, and 19, 1916, in which the executive officers of these companies claimed that the rate was not fixed in that way——

Mr. HUSTING. Oh, I did not——

Mr. HARDWICK. Let me finish; and in which they contended on the contrary that the rate was fixed absolutely literally on the exact weighing. I cite the Senator further to the testimony of Mr. Stewart, who appeared and undertook in detail to refute and deny and answer every statement that these men had made with which the department took issue, and as a matter of fact he did not make the slightest issue on that proposition, unless I am absolutely in error.

Mr. HUSTING. The Senator said he would cite some evidence.

Mr. HARDWICK. I have.

Mr. HUSTING. The opinion of the railroad company is not evidence.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator thinks not?

Mr. HUSTING. I do not think it is.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator does not think what people come and say before a committee is evidence?

Mr. HUSTING. Their opinion was to that effect, of course. Does the Senator say that is evidence?

Mr. HARDWICK. I did not say their opinion. It was their statement about facts that were absolutely undisputed and uncontradicted, and if the Senator wants to state it accurately he ought not to state——

Mr. HUSTING. I know I am stating the case accurately when I state that the practice has obtained during the last 40 years to fix the rate of pay as a basis upon the weighing once in every four years.

Mr. HARDWICK. I understand; but the Senator suggests now——

Mr. HUSTING. I will submit my own argument.

Mr. HARDWICK. All right; I think you had better.

Mr. HUSTING. I say when that has been the past practice and when you make an arrangement with a railroad company for so much per ton-mile of mail, and that was to obtain for four years and both the railroad companies knew it and the Government knew that the mails were increasing at the rate of 5 or 10 per cent every year, that that was taken into account in fixing the rate and that they were in fact paid for the increases from year to year. I say, if that is not true, then the railroad companies are not the financiers that I take them to be, and they do not know their business as I think they know their business, and the United States in a sense of fairness did not know its business as it always has in the past known its business in the way of giving equity to the railroads.

Now, you want to weigh the mail every year when the railroad companies want to do it. What does that mean? It means that they are enjoying a rate per ton-mile based upon an anticipated increase, reflected in an anticipated increase. Next year these railroads will receive cumulative compensation upon something they are already receiving by an increase in the basis of the weight, and in the third year and the fourth year likewise. It is compounding the payment; it is compounding the compensation. Those are the facts. They can not be successfully contradicted, in my judgment; and, as a matter of fact, they will increase the compensation of the railroad companies some two or three or four million dollars a year. That, even though the Senator from Georgia does not agree with me upon the premises, shows that as a matter of fact the basis of compensation does not remain stationary, as it is now. This bill means the adoption of a new policy, by which, when the railroads are rendering the same service they have rendered in the last 40 years, they are going to receive in compensation two or three or four million dollars more.

Mr. HARDWICK. Does the Senator mean the annual weighing will cost that?

Mr. HUSTING. It will result in this extra cost.

Mr. HARDWICK. The anticipated increases are already allowed for. We will have an annual weighing for that. Why should there be any more allowed for weighing than when the weighings are quadrennially made?

Mr. HUSTING. They are not satisfied with that, if the Senator pleases. It is based upon the anticipated increase.

Mr. HARDWICK. I understand. But if the Senator——

Mr. HUSTING. But the recommendation of the Senate committee is that we, the Government, are not satisfied to pay them so little; that we ought to pay them three or four million dollars a year more for the same service.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator wants to pay them just what they are entitled to receive.

Mr. HUSTING. Certainly. They have not seriously come before Congress, as I understand, to complain that they were not getting enough.

Mr. HARDWICK. Oh, the Senator is wrong. I hope the Senator will not make that statement. The very reverse is true. If the Senator will be willing to yield—and he has been so very nice in yielding——

Mr. HUSTING. Perhaps I have yielded the floor too often and the Senator will be taking as much time as I am taking myself.

Mr. HARDWICK. All right.

Mr. HUSTING. I say this, that this fight has started and revolves around the space basis and the weight basis, and now it has revolved itself around the point of not only abandoning the idea of the space basis, which has been recommended, but of going one better and providing the railroads with two or three or four million dollars additional for the same service that they have rendered in the past 40 years. In other words, we are going to change the basis of the weighing system itself. In the first place, we are going to give the three or four million dollars additional every year, and, secondly, we are going to give them the right to say whether or not they shall weigh the mails every year. In other words, it is going to be optional with the railroad companies whether they are going to have a reweighing or not.

Now, what does that mean? It means simply this. It is a matter of fairly common knowledge, at least it is a matter that is certainly within the knowledge of any man who knows anything about the railway mail service, that the schedules are arranged in such a manner as to attract to the trunk lines certain classes of mail. I forget just the time limit. I did know, at one time the time of carriage of a simple letter, for instance, between Chicago and St. Paul that can arrive in St. Paul an hour sooner by going over one line or a daily paper can get there an hour sooner even though the route is longer. The Government, in its desire to expedite the mail, will send it around that way. Now, one thing I think will be conceded, that around the weighing time, and it is fixed for every four years and the days are numbered, when the weighing time comes around the railroad companies are not going to do anything to their schedules to deflect mail from those routes. If anything, they will be working up to something that will attract it. Knowing that the pay is going to be fixed for four years they will want all the mail that will legitimately come to them over their route. After the mail has been weighed they do not care so much whether that particular mail comes over their route or not, and some other railroad may make about weighing time another schedule which will attract mail to them. Now, if this is going to be done in this way, and if we are going to permit a reweighing, then these lines that have lost their mail are not going to ask for a reweighing. They will continue to charge the United States for the mail that is no longer carried and which has been deflected to some other line, and the company that enjoys the increase will ask, if it wants to do it, for a reweighing. So, we pay for carrying mail over one line and continue to pay and repay it again on some other line by virtue of an increase. It is simply putting our business matters in the hands of the railroad companies in a way that is unfair to the Government of the United States and the people of the country whom we represent.

Now, the objection I have to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa is that it leaves this annual weighing provision in the bill, and I think that this provision is absolutely indefensible. I do not think it is based on any good reason of justice, either to the railroads or to the people of the United States.

Now, getting down to the question of the amendment of the Senator from Florida, I favor that amendment because it leaves us the basis recommended by at least two commissions and recommended by the post-office authorities themselves. The amendment of the Senator from Florida does just exactly what the chairman of this committee recommended only a short time ago.

On this question of the space basis and weight basis I am talking concerning the practice as it now obtains. The portion which I have just been discussing resolves itself, as I understand it, into two different questions. One is a question of business policy and the other is a question of remuneration to the railroads. Those who favor the space basis do not claim that their system necessarily decreases the pay of the railroads. It is a matter as to how much the rate is going to be per ton per mile per car that is run upon these mail-carrying railroads. It is a question whether you are going to base your rate of compensation on tonnage or whether you are going to base it on the foot car space of the railway mail car. The rate is one thing, the basis is another, and as I think these matters are quite mixed up I want to see if I can not make it clear in the short space of time I wish to occupy, and disassociate this idea in the minds of those who are trying to understand as I am trying to understand this question. I say the mere fact that we adopt a space basis does not necessarily mean that the railroads are not going to get as much compensation. It is only a different way of arriving at the amount of pay they are to receive. It is a question of whether you are going to multiply a certain number of running feet per mile that the railroad company has carried or whether you are going to compute it by multiplying simply the number of tons per mile hauled by the railroads.

The question has arisen here as to who is better able to judge of that proposition—Congress and the Post Office Department on the one hand or the Interstate Commerce Commission on the other. As I understand, the subjects that properly go before the Interstate Commerce Commission are matters not of governmental policy but matters of pay, matters of fairness of compensation. I do not think that the question properly belongs to the Interstate Commerce Commission, as to whether or not we are going to adopt the space system or the weight system. All that the Interstate Commerce Commission ought to care about this proposition, and all that we ought to ask the Interstate Commerce Commission, is, What is a fair compensation to the railroads for carrying the mail? It ought not to make any difference or be of any material moment to the Interstate Commerce Commission whether we proceed on the space basis or on the weight basis; but the only question presented, if any, for the Interstate Commerce Commission to determine is how much we are going to pay the railroads.

There are some reasons why it is claimed by the Post Office Department and by the commissions that have investigated this matter that the space basis is the better basis. What are those reasons? The weight system, as has already been shown here, is at best very unsatisfactory. The weighing is done once in four years; it is done at a particular part of the year when, it seems, by common consent, it has been agreed that there is carried a fair average amount of mail in the United States, and yet that is only a guess. Nobody knows very much about it. There are 101 days cut out of the calendar year every four years in which to arrive at the average amount of mail that is probably carried for that year. Taking into consideration, as I said before, the increase in the mails for four years, the rate is fixed.

Now comes the Post Office Department and certain committees, and they say that the space basis is the better, because we know just how many cars are running every day in the United States, what is their capacity, and what distance they are hauled. That certainly makes for certainty. Certainly when we talk about equitable payments, the more certain the service is the better; the more clearly we know what service is being rendered, the nearer we can approximate an equitable compensation for that service.

ADVANTAGES OF THE SPACE PLAN.

The unit of service rendered by a railroad company in a passenger train, whether it be for carrying passengers, express, or mail, is the car space in the train devoted to the particular service. A full train is made up of passenger cars, with baggage car and express car or apartment in car devoted to express, and one or more full cars devoted to mails or, if the service be light, only an apartment in a car divided off and devoted to the mails is furnished. Where there is no other mail service on the train excepting the carriage of pouches and sacks of mails these are placed in the baggage car.

The railroad company endeavors to receive from its passenger rates, based upon the average number of passengers to a car, adequate pay for the operation of the passenger cars and all other expenses chargeable to that service. The average number of passengers to the car in 1914 was 10. For the service of furnishing and operating the express car it receives approximately one-half of the revenues the express company derives from its business in transporting express matter. It fixes this rate itself, and the amount presumably pays the company for the space occupied and service performed. The average load of a 60-foot express car is about 2.73 tons. The company furnishes the department full railway post-office cars, if required, or apartments in baggage cars if less than full cars are required. The service rendered is in hauling these cars with the mail in them and clerks in charge of the same, and in performing certain service in carrying the mails between stations and post offices, excepting where the department performs it. The pay the company receives for this service compensates it for the space furnished and service rendered. The average load for all mail cars equated to a 60-foot basis is about 2.39 tons.

It will be seen from this that the real unit of service is the space furnished and service performed in hauling the car and not the weight of the matter contained in the car. This applies particularly to passenger trains in which mail service is performed.

Although the present law provides for mail pay on the basis of weight of the mails carried and authorizes an additional payment where full railway post-office cars are furnished, the service is really performed at the present time on a space basis. The great bulk of the mails is carried in full railway post-office cars, apartment cars, and storage cars. This constitutes 96 per cent of the mail service which is now on a space basis so far as service is concerned, leaving only 4 per cent for the closed-pouch service, which is the carriage of pouches and sacks in baggage cars. Therefore all the service excepting the closed-pouch service is performed in authorized space or space which is called for by the department, which is the same thing as authorization. However, 90 per cent of the payment received by the railroads is based upon the weight of the mails carried and only 10 per cent based upon the special service of furnishing full railway post-office cars where they are needed. The full railway post-office cars and apartment cars are those in which the mails are distributed en route by clerks. The effect, therefore, of a bill authorizing adjustment on space would merely be to transfer the pay to the unit which actually measures the facility furnished and the service performed.

Payment upon the space basis compensates the railroads for the actual service rendered. It takes into account the frequency of the service, which the weight basis leaves out of consideration. It will pay each individual railroad fully for all the facilities furnished and service performed and will not overpay any of them. Under the present system some of the very large railroads upon which heavy storage mails are carried are overpaid proportionately to other roads for the service they perform, while other roads are comparatively underpaid for the service they render. The space basis would properly distribute among the carrying companies the railroad mail pay, adjusting it upon the basis of service actually rendered. This is one reason why the proposition is so strongly opposed by the large systems.

The space basis is a definite and scientific gauge for measuring the facilities furnished and service rendered. Under it a company will be paid for every mile of travel of a car or part of a car authorized by the department for the carriage of the mails. If the rate of pay be fixed with reference to the average passenger car-mile revenue received by the companies for the passenger service, with suitable reductions to compensate the Government for the difference between passenger service and mail service, there certainly can be no complaint that the roads will not be adequately paid.

The space basis will allow the department to effect great economies in the service by utilizing space authorized and paid for for the dispatch of mails which would otherwise be paid for at additional cost. This is particularly true with reference to the dispatch of mails on heavy lines out of large centers. Furthermore, there are in some cases storage cars carrying heavy storage mails out of large centers in one direction, but which return empty. Very often the space in working cars in one direction is fully used, but only partly used in the return direction. This provision will allow the Post Office Department to use this surplus space, for which payment would be made, in transporting empty equipment, which is now carried by freight, and thereby save that cost.

There are certain special provisions in the bill as passed by the House which, first, would enable the Postmaster General to arrange for the transportation of mail matter other than first class at rates not exceeding those which the Interstate Commerce Commission should find to be paid by express companies to the railroad companies for the transportation of express matter. Second, it would also give him authority to petition the Interstate Commerce Commission for a postal carload or less-than-carload rate for transportation of fourth-class matter and periodicals. Third, it would also allow him to arrange with railroad companies for a lower rate for less frequent dispatches of mail matter of the third and fourth classes and periodicals where it could be done without detriment to the public and the service. These matters were explained to the committee during the hearing as follows:

Senator HARDWICK. We can enlarge that, can't we?

Mr. STEWART. Yes. A provision of a bill now in conference removes the existing limitation requiring the Postmaster General to confine freight shipments to those now in effect in a part of the country. If this becomes law, the plan can be extended.

Senator HARDWICK. And that will make a very much larger saving?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Isn't there a large amount of parcel post going that way?

Mr. STEWART. No parcel-post mail is handled by freight.

Mr. HARDWICK. Most of it ought to go that way.

Senator VARDAMAN. Here is the point I want to bring out. That economy can be practiced by the Government—the Government can save in the general expense of carrying the mail without imposing any additional hardship upon the railroads?

Mr. STEWART. Surely.

Senator VARDAMAN. Paying them the same rates that Tom Smith and Bill Jones are paying for shipping their freight?

Mr. STEWART. Exactly; and we have a provision in this bill which authorizes that very thing.

Senator HARDWICK. What provision is that?

Mr. STEWART. There are three paragraphs in the bill bearing on this subject. They are on pages 45 and 46.

Senator HARDWICK. Read them and get them into the record.

Mr. STEWART. The first paragraph is on page 45, being the last paragraph on that page. It reads as follows [reading]:

"The Postmaster General shall, from time to time, request information from the Interstate Commerce Commission as to the revenue received by railroad companies from express companies for services rendered in the transportation of express matter, and may, in his discretion, arrange for the transportation of mail matter other than of the first class at rates not exceeding those so ascertained and reported to him, and it shall be the duty of the railroad companies to carry such mail matter at such rates fixed by the Postmaster General."

The second provision is on page 46, the first paragraph [reading]:

"The Postmaster General is authorized, in his discretion, to petition the Interstate Commerce Commission for the determination of a postal carload or less-than-carload rate for transportation of mail matter of the fourth class and periodicals, and may provide for and authorize such transportation, when practicable, at such rates, and it shall be the duty of the railroad companies to provide and perform such service at such rates and on the conditions prescribed by the Postmaster General."

Senator VARDAMAN. I understand that heretofore that when postal material has been shipped that you have paid the regular freight rates?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir; we asked the companies to submit rates, and they submitted rates which were accepted by the department. This other provision follows on the same page, 46 [reading]:

"The Postmaster General may, in his discretion, distinguish between the several classes of mail matter and provide for less frequent dispatches of mail matter of the third and fourth classes and periodicals when lower rates for transportation or other economies may be secured thereby without material detriment to the service."

Under these provisions the department can go to competing railroad companies and say, "We have a number of carloads of mail moving from New York to large centers every day, and it is practicable to accumulate these carloads and ship them by any of several routes, what rate will you give us to Chicago, St. Paul, St. Louis, or Denver, on that carload business?"

Senator HARDWICK. In the end they ought to be able to handle the great bulk of third and fourth class mail matter in that way?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir; and we can give the same expedition that is given to express matter.

Senator HARDWICK. And fully as good service as that class of mail really requires?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir. Nobody expects fourth-class mail to be carried with the same expedition as letters, and the department does not attempt to do it now. In the dispatch of letters the department requires that they be moved on the fastest trains and in the most expeditious manner available; but we do not enforce this requirement with respect to parcel-post and other inferior classes of mail. The parcel-post mails are usually carried on the slower trains, and the local mails of that character, unlike letters, are not thrown off at catcher stations from moving trains.

Senator STERLING. Is there complaint on the part of any of the senders of such mail, as, for example, publishers of magazines, in regard to the sending of it by freight rather than in the regular mail?

Mr. STEWART. There is practically no complaint now. When the system was inaugurated there were some periodicals included whose publishers thought that a hardship was being imposed upon them, as might have been expected. When these cases were later considered some were taken out of the freight and given the mail movement. We moved 4,853 carloads of mail matter in that way in 1915, and there was practically no complaint. The publishers themselves, before the House committee in 1910, said to the department that it ought to transport magazines where practicable by freight.

Senator MARTINE. The delay does not amount to a very great deal, anyway. How many hours' difference is there between first-class mail and mail that would be shipped by freight?

Mr. MCBRIDE. The delay is from two to five days; but that is overcome to a large extent by arranging with the publishers to make advanced delivery to the post office. The magazines are usually printed a number of days in advance of the time when they are issued, and the publishers deliver them to us a sufficient number of days in advance to overcome the delay.

Senator HARDWICK. The object of these provisions to which you have referred and read into the record is to extend that economy further on those classes of mail?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir; and also to secure, through the instrumentality of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the same rates for this mail matter as the railroads charge the express companies.

Senator HARDWICK. And you would handle a good proportion of the parcel-post matter in that way?

Mr. STEWART. I think the great bulk of it would be handled under the authority of the last provision I read.

The next objection of the railroads to which I want to call attention is that made to the provision in the bill fixing a penalty of $5,000 for refusal to perform service.

BRIEF ON RAILWAY MAIL PAY.

The Post Office appropriation bill passed the House on February 28 last, containing legislation providing a new plan for authorizing and paying for the carriage of the mails by the railroads. The proposed legislation adopts the space basis with an adequate scale of rates, instead of the weight basis with additional pay for distribution space in some cases, which has been in operation since 1873. This space basis embodied in the bill was recommended by a joint congressional committee, which held exhaustive hearings during a period of two years, at which both the railroads and the department were given and took every opportunity to appear and to submit views. Substantially the same legislation passed the House last session and was agreed to in conference during the last hours of the session, but the whole bill failed of enactment becaue of lack of time for the two Houses to adopt the conferees' report.

The railroads were given a hearing at their own request before the House Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads before the bill was reported. They opposed the bill principally upon the ground that the space basis would permit, as they claimed, an extraordinary development of the Government's Parcel Post System at the expense of their express and freight business.

Recently the representatives of the railroads appeared before the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and opposed the bill on the ground that, as they claim, the space basis will not be equitable to them, and have proposed, first, that Congress authorize annual weighings of the mails under the present provisions of law; second, that the railroad companies shall be relieved of the performance of substantially all service between the post offices and the railroad stations and that they be paid for space in apartment cars—baggage cars, part of which are used for mails—in addition to being paid for the weight of the mails carried therein, at pro rata of the pay now allowed for full cars devoted entirely to the mails; and, third, that the question as to the justness and reasonableness of existing rates as well as the practices and regulations of the Post Office Department affecting them be referred to the Interstate Commerce Commission for investigation and report to Congress with recommendation. In the draft of their substitute bill submitted to the committee it is not proposed by the railroads to give the commission any authority to inquire as to the desirability of the plan recommended by the joint congressional committee, namely, space. The presidents of several of the trunk lines also appeared and urged a reference of the question of regulation of rates to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Officials of the department acquainted with the subject matter feel that this proposal of the railroads is lacking in sincerity, and has for its object the defeat of all present proposed legislation in the interest of the Government; the continuance of the status quo under the existing antiquated plan and pay, with additional compensation; the entire elimination of the space plan recommended by the joint committee from consideration; and an indefinite postponement of a determination of all questions relating to rates until such time as the Interstate Commerce Commission should be able to thoroughly investigate and report and Congress should fortunately act thereupon, or such time as the commission should fix rates, if so authorized to do. This view is sustained by the following facts and those above stated:

The space basis instead of the weight basis for payment for railroad mail service was unanimously recommended to Congress by the joint congressional committee after two years' exhaustive investigation, during which every argument that could be advanced by the railroads was heard and considered. The same commission recommended a schedule of rates which, if adopted, will pay the railroads greater compensation per unit of service on the average than they now receive under the old system. The bill as it passed the House last session embodied substantially the space basis recommended by the joint committee and carried a schedule of rates somewhat lower, but which, in the opinion of the Post Office Department, were adequate for the service.

On account of the railroads' bitter opposition to the bill which was then centered upon the rates, the department itself suggested and prepared a clause for insertion in the bill giving the right to the railroads upon petition of 51 per cent of the control of the mileage represented in the mail service, and also to the Postmaster General to petition the Interstate Commerce Commission to investigate the justness and reasonableness of the rates provided in the bill at any time after one year after the same should become effective. The time specified was believed to be in the interest of the railroads as well as the Government, because it would allow an adjustment of the service to the provisions of the bill and furnish the data which would demonstrate the reasonableness or the unreasonableness of the rates provided. This provision was adopted by the conferees and included as an amendment to the bill. The whole bill failed, as above stated.

When the bill was again considered by the House committee at the present session the contention of the railroads was renewed for a reference of the matter to the Interstate Commerce Commission. As a concession to them the House committee, without objection from the department, included the clause providing for an inquiry by the Interstate Commerce Commission on the conditions above noted at any time after the bill should become effective, instead of after one year as provided in the previous bill, and the bill passed the House with this provision. Notwithstanding this effort to meet this demand of the railroads for a review of the rates named in the bill, the railroads are now insisting that Congress take no action in determining the plan or in fixing the rates as recommended by the joint congressional committee, but shall refer to the Interstate Commerce Commission for investigation the question as to the reasonableness of the present rates. No authority is to be given to inquire into the plan, whether it shall be weight or space.

The conclusion above stated, as to the purpose of the railroads appears irresistible.

It has been suggested that, as the Interstate Commerce Commission has been given jurisdiction to fix or review rates for passenger, express, and freight service performed by the railroads for the public generally, it should be given jurisdiction over rates for carrying the mails. There is a fundamental difference between the two relations. In the first relation the railroad is a common carrier for the public, and the Interstate Commerce Commission is a body created by Congress, under its power to regulate commerce between the States, with duties to enforce the common-law obligations of the railroads as common carriers and their statutory obligations to the public. In the carriage of the mails the railroads are not common carriers, but act as agencies of the Government performing a governmental function. It is especially appropriate in the latter case for Congress to act directly in fixing the rates for mail service or to determine the plan upon which the service shall be authorized. Of course, if Congress desires to delegate that power to an administrative body it has the right to do so, but the same reasons which make it advisable in the case of service for the public generally do not exist with reference to the service for the Government.

At all times since the first direct legislation in 1838, regarding rates for carrying the mails on railroads, Congress has retained to itself the fixing of the maximum rates and the designation of the plan under which they shall apply. Under the Constitution Congress is given power over the entire Postal Establishment and has retained direct control, the administration of its laws relating thereto being carried out by the Post Office Department, the administrative branch of the Executive. A delegation of any of its powers to the Interstate Commerce Commission would seem to be justified only on the ground of the intricacy of the problem.

The questions of rate and plan, however, have been thoroughly considered by a congressional joint committee, and the pending bill provides for a review at any time of the justness and reasonableness of the rates fixed. This provision meets all reasonable requirements.

The liberality of the rates provided in the pending legislation is shown by the following facts:

The appropriation for the transportation of mails by railroad routes and for railway post-office car pay for the fiscal year 1915 under the existing weight plan and rates was	$61,600,000
The appropriation for the same items included in the Post Office appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1916 under the existing weight plan and rates, but which failed of passage, was	62,874,000
The estimated cost of the service under the provisions of the space bill (based on conditions of service as then performed) as it passed the House in the appropriation bill making appropriations for the fiscal year 1916, but which failed of passage as above stated, is	65,772,369
The estimated cost of the service under the space bill last above mentioned (based on conditions of service as then performed) at the rates agreed to in conference, but which finally failed, is	66,948,031
The items of appropriation for transportation of the mails by railroad routes and for railway post-office cars carried in the pending Post Office appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1917 under the existing weight plan and rates is	63,582,000
The estimated cost of the service under the space bill (based on conditions of service as now performed) at the rates provided in the space bill incorporated in the Post Office appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1917, as it passed the House February 28, 1916, is	68,723,668

The first reference in the statutes to compensation for mail service performed by railroads is found in the second section of the act of July 7, 1838 (5 Stats. L., 283). This section provided that every railroad within the limits of the United States which then was or thereafter might be made and completed should be a post route, and directed the Postmaster General to cause the mails to be transported thereon, provided he could have it done upon reasonable terms, with the further limitation that he should not in any case pay more than 25 per cent over and above what similar transportation would cost in post coaches. The following year, by the act of January 25, 1839 (5 Stats. L., 314), a maximum of $300 per mile per annum was placed upon the amount that could be allowed by the Postmaster General for the transportation of mails on railroads.

Congress next touched upon this subject in 1845, when, by the act of March 3 of that year (5 Stats. L., 738), it provided as follows:

SEC. 19. And be it further enacted, That to insure, as far as may be practicable, an equal and just rate of compensation, according to the service performed, among the several railroad companies in the United States for the transportation of the mail it shall be the duty of the Postmaster General to arrange and divide the railroad routes, including those in which the service is partly by railroad and partly by steamboats, into three classes, according to the size of the mails, the speed with which they are conveyed, and the importance of the service; and it shall be lawful for him to contract for conveying the mail with any such railroad company, either with or without advertising for such contract: Provided, That for the conveyance of the mail on any railroad of the first class he shall not pay a higher rate of compensation than is now allowed by law; nor for carrying the mail on any railroad of the second class a greater compensation than $100 per mile per annum; nor for carrying the mail on any railroad of the third class a greater compensation than $50 per mile per annum. And in case the Postmaster General shall not be able to conclude a contract for carrying the mail on any of such railroad routes at a compensation not exceeding the aforesaid maximum rates, or for what he may deem a reasonable and fair compensation for the service to be performed, it shall be lawful for him to separate the letter mail from the residue of the mail and to contract, either with or without advertising, for conveying the letter mail over such route, by horse express or otherwise, at the greatest speed that can reasonably be obtained; and also to contract for carrying over such route the residue of the mail, in wagons or otherwise, at a slower rate of speed: Provided, That if one-half of the service on any railroad is required to be performed in the night season, it shall be lawful for the Postmaster General to pay 25 per cent in addition to the aforesaid maximum rates of allowance: And provided further, That if it shall be found necessary to convey over any railroad route more than two mails daily, it shall be lawful for the Postmaster General to pay such additional compensation as he may think just and reasonable, having reference to the service performed and the maximum rate of allowance established by this act.

It will be observed that under this act the Postmaster General was directed to arrange and divide the railroad routes into three classes, and he was authorized to contract with any railroad company, either with or without advertising for the carriage of mails on the routes, at a rate within the stated maximum for the three classes.

The oldest classes of mail transportation service are those known as the "star" and steamboat services. Star service includes the carriage of mails over the highways in coaches, by mounted carriers, and so forth, and, as its name implies, steamboat service is the carriage of mails via lakes, rivers, and streams in power boats. It has been the practice for many years for the Postmaster General to have general lettings of these services and enter into contracts therefor for periods of four years. This practice antedated the inauguration of the carriage of mails by railroads and in entering into arrangements with the railroad companies for the service performed by them the Postmaster General adopted the plan of making four-year contracts at an agreed price, but within the maximum fixed for the different classes of routes.

No further legislation occurred until 1873, except that the act of 1872, revising the statutes relating to the Post Office Department, brought forward the provisions of the act of 1845. During the period from 1845 to 1873 the mails carried on railroads were transported under the provisions of the act of 1845, largely under contracts for four years made by the Postmaster General with the respective roads.

This is referred to in the annual reports of the Postmaster General for the years prior to 1873. In the report of 1867 the Postmaster General refers to the statute of 1845 and states that he had made arrangements to have weighed the mails carried by the railroads, in order to determine their size, and that such information would be used in making changes in the terms of the service as the then existing contracts should expire.

Again, in 1868 he speaks of the department, in anticipation of the close of the contract term for the transportation of the mails in certain States, entering upon a systematic revision and readjustment of the rates of pay on railroad routes in those States based upon returns from the weighing referred to in the previous report. He recites that "wherever the returns required or justified a change from the former rate a circular was addressed to the proprietors of the route submitting the offer of the department and explaining its purpose. In many instances the terms offered have after considerable correspondence been accepted and contracts made accordingly. In others, though formal contracts are not executed, the department has proceeded to settle for the service for the first quarter of the new term at the rates offered."

In 1869 he speaks of having ordered a weighing on the railroad routes in certain States in anticipation of the close of the contract term in such States and declares it to be the purpose of the department to have a similar weighing "near the close of the contract term in each of the four contract sections into which the country is divided, so that the readjustment of pay in every case may be made upon new and corrected returns."

In the report of that year the Postmaster General alluded to the complaints made by some of the principal railroad companies in relation to the alleged inadequacy of their compensation for carrying the mails and recommends a careful revision and readjustment by Congress of railroad compensation and the establishment of such rates as will be just and equitable to all concerned.

The following year, 1870, the Postmaster General refers to the readjustment of pay on railroad routes in certain States following the receipt of the returns from the weighing of mails carried thereon, and explains the increase in the cost for this service as being due to the increase in the size and importance of the mails in the section where "the new contract term commenced with the current fiscal year."

He again calls the attention of Congress "to the necessity of a revision and readjustment of the rates of compensation established by law for the transportation of mails on railroad routes," reciting that many carriers refuse to enter into contracts with the department, "alleging that they will not bind themselves by a permanent arrangement at the present prices," and concluding with the statement that "after a careful consideration of the subject I am satisfied that the compensation fixed by law is not a fair return for the important services rendered by railroad companies, and hence I repeat my recommendation that a readjustment of their pay be made by law, and that at the same time they be required to enter into contract with the department as a condition precedent to drawing any increase of compensation."

In 1871 the Postmaster General notes the readjustment of pay for the new term on railroad routes in certain States in which the "regular four-year term of contracts" has expired, and refers to the recommendation in previous reports for a revision and readjustment of rates for raiload mail transportation, which he renews, stating that the act of 1845 should be so amended "as to allow a fair and reasonable increase of the compensation of railroad companies, upon condition that they shall enter into contract with the department for the prompt and faithful performance of their duties."

These recommendations precede the act of March 3, 1873, providing for a general readjustment of pay on railroad routes. The primary purpose of this act is clearly stated in its first sentence as follows: "For increase of compensation for the transportation of mails on railroad routes upon the conditions and at the rates hereinafter named." This is the answer of Congress to the many recommendations by the Postmaster General that the compensation for Railway Mail Service be increased. But in no part of the act, which, among other things, expressly provided that a weighing of the mails shall be had before a readjustment of pay was made on a route, is there any language indicating an intention by Congress to depart from the then existing and long-established practice of contracting for or fixing compensation on the routes for terms of four years following a weighing.

The weighing mentioned was ordered to be had after June 30, 1873, "and not less frequently than once in every four years thereafter." This general weighing began October 1, 1873, and in the report of 1874 the Postmaster General refers to it as follows:

> By act of Congress approved March 3, 1873, the Postmaster General was "authorized and directed to readjust the compensation hereafter to be paid for the transportation of mails on railroad routes" upon conditions and at rates prescribed in the act. The principal consideration upon which the rates of pay were to be determined was the average weight of the mails, to be ascertained by an actual weighing for a number of successive working days, not less than 30, the law directing the weights to be taken "after June 30, 1873," so as to avoid including therein the mass of free matter sent through the mails for the few months preceding the expiration of the franking privilege at the date named. A call had been made in February, 1873, upon the railroad companies in the New York and New England section for a weighing in March, 1873, with a view to the readjustment of their pay for the new contract term commencing on the 1st of July of that year. The new act rendering the returns submitted under that call useless, another weighing was asked for, to commence October 1, 1873, not only in New York and New England, but throughout the country.

In the report of 1875 following the general weighing and readjustment required by the act of 1873 the Postmaster General notes the weighing and readjustment of pay on the routes in the States on which the new contract term commenced July 1, 1875, and in the report of the following year, 1876, he refers to the weighing and readjustment of pay on routes in the States in which the new contract term commenced July 1, 1876.

Congress, by the act of July 12, 1876, ordered a reduction of 10 per cent, effective July 1, 1876, from the pay of railroad companies for carrying the mails, and in the report of that year the Postmaster General refers to this act and states that at the date of its approval a number of railroad companies were under contract, duly executed in accordance with law, to carry the mails during a period not then expired at a rate of compensation which had been fixed by the provisions of the act of 1873, and that the Assistant Attorney General had held that such contracts were not affected by the reduction act.

At that time it was the practice of the department to enter into formal written contracts with the railroad companies for periods of four years, whenever it was possible to do so, and where such action could not be taken the department would state the pay on the routes for terms of four years. These formal contracts and the informal arrangements were considered by the Supreme Court of the United States in suits growing out of the action of the department in applying the act of 1876 reducing pay. The cases are the Chicago & North Western Railroad Co. against The United States, reported in One hundred and fourth United States, at page 680, and the Eastern Railroad Co. against The United States, reported in One hundred and twenty-ninth United States, at page 391.

In the report of 1877 the Postmaster General refers to the readjustment for the regular contract term of four years, commencing July 1, 1877, on routes in certain States, and in the report for the following year, 1878, he refers to the similar readjustment on railroad routes in certain States for the regular term of four years, commencing July 1, 1878. In the last-named report he also refers to the dissatisfaction on the part of railroad companies with the act of Congress of June 19, 1878, making a further reduction of 5 per cent in the compensation allowed railroad companies.

CONCLUSION.

From the foregoing it is established that at the time the act of 1873 was passed it was the practice of the department either to enter into formal written contract for terms of four years or to fix the pay on the routes without such contracts for similar terms, at rates of compensation agreed upon between the department and the carriers in the case of formal contracts or stated by orders of the Postmaster General in cases where such contracts were not entered into, such rates being within the maxima provided by the act of 1845. It is further established that this practice was continued without interruption after the passage of this act, and that it was not intended by Congress by the legislation of 1873 to change this long-established practice, but that this act was merely designed to provide new maxima for the different classes of routes and to require that the routes be weighed before concluding contracts or fixing the pay within such maxima.

The conclusion that Congress did not intend by the act of 1873 to sanction annual weighings with the large increase in pay which would result therefrom is inevitable when it is considered that after an experience of only three years under this act with quadrennial weighings in effect, Congress saw fit to reduce the pay of the carriers 10 per cent, and two years later to order a further reduction of 5 per cent.

The joint congressional committee, known as the Bourne committee, of which Senator BANKHEAD, chairman of the present Post Office and Post Roads Committee, was a member, reported to Congress as follows upon space:

While one's first impression is that weight is the chief factor in determining all transportation costs and charges, a more careful consideration of the subject will show that this is not the case.

The bulk of the freight business is carried in what are known as carload lots. In the carload freight business space is taken into consideration in that a minimum weight per car, varying with the bulk of the commodity, is fixed, and the shipper must pay at least the minimum carload rate regardless of the amount of freight in the car. In fixing rates upon different commodities shipped in less-than-carload lots, the bulk of the commodity, as well as its weight, receives consideration. For example, a carriage or furniture that is taken apart and packed into a crate will be transported at a less charge than the same article shipped set up. The reason for the difference, although the weight be identical, is that in one instance less space is occupied than in the other.

The same principle obtains, in general, in fixing passenger rates. The charge is so much per passenger, whether the passenger be a heavy man or a light man. The same is true in the fixing of Pullman fares. A certain amount is charged for the use of a berth whether it be occupied by one or two persons.

The justification for this consideration of space in fixing transportation charges in the passenger service is that the car itself weighs more than its contents. This is also true in the case of mail. A storage car contains the largest quantity of mail which it is possible to ship in one conveyance; yet the steel storage car weighs about 50 tons, while the mail it carries usually would not exceed 10 tons. In the ordinary post-office car, however, so much of the space is used for the distribution of mail that on an average only 2 to 3 tons of mail matter is carried, while the car itself, if of steel, weighs some 60 tons.

It will readily be seen, therefore, that if the railroad company is required to haul 60 tons of car and only 2 to 3 tons of mail therein, the chief source of expense is in the transportation of the car, not in the transportation of its contents. If the Government, for the purpose of facilitating the rapid distribution of mail, chooses to load a car with only 2 to 3 tons of mail, it should pay the railroad on a basis that will afford a reasonable compensation for the hauling of both car and contents.

Heretofore the railroads have received their compensation in two classes: First, for the transportation of a certain quantity of mail ascertained by weight; and, second, a charge for space in and haulage of railway post-office cars 40 feet or more in length utilized for mail distribution in transit. This is an express recognition of the right of the railroads to compensation for hauling the working space. We are already on a partial-space basis.

It is to the interest of the Government, however, to fix the compensation on such a basis as will encourage the department and its employees to utilize all the space it is practicable for them to use. Naturally, it will be the desire of the department to make as good a record as possible for economical management. If the entire compensation be based upon a standard of space, the supervisory officials in the department will encourage and require their employees to utilize that space as fully and economically as possible. The judicious expenditure of public money will thus be encouraged and economic waste minimized.

ADVANTAGES OF SPACE BASIS.

We favor the adoption of space rather than weight as the basis for measuring the service rendered for the following reasons:

It permits fluctuation of mail pay with every material fluctuation in the service.

It eliminates the cost and inconvenience of the quadrennial weighing.

It eliminates the temptation for dishonest efforts to either deplete or pad mails during the weighing periods, because it abolishes all weighing.

It minimizes waste by encouraging the Post Office Department to utilize as nearly as possible all the space it pays for in mail cars.

It constitutes a system of compensation so definite, simple, and clear that any citizen can understand it and can know exactly what service each railroad is rendering, its rate of pay, and the amount of annual compensation.

Rapid development of the Parcel Post Service furnishes another strong reason for the substitution of space for weight as a basis of railway mail compensation. Since expansion of the parcel post the quadrennial weighing has become much more unsatisfactory as a means of determining the compensation to be paid for transportation.

The Department says, and these committees have said, that, knowing just what is done along the line of mail carrying, we can tell what that service is worth; that is not open to conjecture in the least. As I say, by reports, they could tell every mail car that is being run in the United States and know just how long that car is, how high it is, how broad it is, and how far it runs on any given day. That is not an unusual way of ascertaining railroad rates. Packers and brewers and refrigerator-line owners, for instance, are all paying on that basis; they pay so much per car, whether it is loaded to the maximum or not, and they pay, as I understand, upon a mileage basis and a space basis for a car so long for so many miles. That is the basis of their payment. Express cars, where they are used exclusively for express business, as I understand, are run on the same basis. They could figure on exactly just how much we would have to pay if the mail carrying were on a space basis now.

Because of some of the remarks made by the distinguished junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] as to the unfairness of this method of trying and hanging a man before he is heard, I merely want to read some of the statistics compiled by the Post Office Department, to show what to-day, under the present method of running cars, if the mail-pay system were reduced to a space basis, it would cost the Government compared with the other system.

The appropriation for the transportation of mails by railroad routes and for railway post-office car pay for the fiscal year 1915, under the existing weight plan and rates was $61,600,000.

The appropriation for the same items included in the post-office appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1916 under the existing weight plan and rates, but which failed of passage, was $62,874,000.

The estimated cost of the service under the provisions of the space bill (based on conditions of service as then performed) as it passed the House in the appropriation bill making appropriations for the fiscal year 1916 * * * is $65,772,369.

That shows that under the present system, under the present service rendered, if computed on a space basis, the railroad companies would be receiving $3,000,000 more per annum than they are now receiving. Consequently no injustice would be done the railroad companies, because they would be receiving, as I say, $3,000,000 more than they are now receiving.

It may be asked, Why do the railroads object to the space basis if they would receive more compensation under the system proposed? The answer to that is that while it is a fact that running the number of cars that they are now running, of the size that they are now running, and running unnecessarily, they would receive $65,000,000 compensation a year. The fact of the matter is, however, that because the mail pay is on a weight basis no particular attention is paid to the number of cars that are being run and to the fact that the railroads are unnecessarily hauling up and down the line, or will be in the course of time, more cars than are really needed for the proper expedition of the mails. In other words, they fear that if this space system goes into effect, it will lie within the hands of the Postmaster General, in the transportation of the mails and their expedition, to put off cars and to put on cars in such a way that, properly attending to our business, we yet can make a saving of three or four or five million dollars a year. That is the reason why the railroads are objecting to it; but so far as fairness is concerned, for the service rendered to-day upon the number of cars they are actually running, they would receive more pay under the space basis than they are receiving under the weight basis.

Why should the railroad companies want to unnecessarily run cars up and down the lines that are not necessary to be run or why should the Post Office Department want it done? That brings us right down to this fundamental proposition, and that is why I think the position of the Postmaster General should be taken into consideration and the report of the committees, which have made a study of this proposition, should be considered. It will enable the Postmaster General to institute rules and regulations and methods of transporting the mail which, in the long run, will bring us results in millions of dollars of saving every year.

Something has been said here to the effect that this question is not very well understood; and perhaps that is true; but committees have passed upon it, and I have here a brief outline of what has been done by such committees on this question.

POSTAL COMMISSIONS THAT HAVE REPORTED FAVORABLY ON THE SPACE BASIS FOR ADJUSTING COMPENSATION TO RAILROADS FOR CARRYING THE MAILS.

The question of the proper basis for adjusting railroad mail pay has been before a number of congressional commissions from time to time, who have reported more or less favorably to the space basis, as follows:

The Hubbard Commission submitted its report, which is published in Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 14, Forty-fifth Congress, first session, December 14, 1877. There was a difference of opinion among the members of this commission, but the only report submitted was that signed by Mr. Hubbard and declaring in favor of the space basis.

The Elmer, Thompson, and Slater committee investigated the matter and made their report December 3, 1883, recommending in favor of space, with weight as a modifying element.

The Walcott Commission investigated the matter, and in its report in 1901, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, House Report No. 2284, stated that while recognizing that the question of space must be considered as having strong influence upon the question of the reasonableness of the present railway mail pay, the commission felt unwilling to recommend it as the controlling standard because of the impossibility with the evidence before it of applying the space basis.

The last Joint Congressional Committee on Postage on Second-Class Mail Matter and Compensation for the Transportation of Mail, commonly referred to as the Bourne Committee, made its report August 31, 1914, and after long and exhaustive inquiry, extending over a period of two years, recommended unqualifiedly the space basis. This committee consisted of Senators Bourne, Bankhead, Richardson, and Weeks, and Representatives Lloyd and Tuttle.

I understand an investigation was made by the distinguished chairman of this committee, who was then not the chairman, but the committee was headed by former Senator Bourne, of which the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] was also a member. They decided in favor of the space proposition. I think the RECORD will show that the House of Representatives in the first session of 1914 passed a space basis bill substantially in the form in which it now is, and that in the session of 1915 it was passed in the House, brought over to the Senate, and recommended by the Senate committee. At least I have here a committee report favorable to it, which is signed by the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], advocating this space plan. It certainly must have been clear to those committees then. It has twice passed the House of Representatives; it has been reported favorably to the Senate, and did not pass the Senate only because it was not reached in the short session and the Senate adjourned without passing upon the bill. It seemed, however, that it was reasonable and clear to those who then considered the question that the space system was the better basis, and I have not heard any sufficient reason—at least I have not heard a reason that appealed to me, or, in fact, have not heard it stated—why there has been any change in the attitude of the committee upon this proposition, or whether or not any new light has been thrown upon the subject. The RECORD shows, however, that it was clearly the opinion of two separate Houses of Representatives and of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads of the Senate at the last session that this space method should be adopted.

I have here a pamphlet entitled "Railway Mail Pay—An Outline of the Post Office Department's Position," containing in a brief but very thorough way the reasons why the space basis ought to be adopted.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEWIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HUSTING. Yes.

Mr. LANE. If the Senator from Wisconsin will allow me, he is a man who has made a study of this subject and has had experience along this line. He has information which would be of value to the Senate, and they are acting, to my personal knowledge, without considerable information which they need. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum being suggested, let the roll be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Harding	Myers	Smith, Md.
Borah	Hardwick	Norris	Smoot
Brady	Hitchcock	O'Gorman	Sterling
Broussard	Husting	Overman	Stone
Bryan	James	Page	Taggart
Clapp	Johnson, Me.	Pittman	Thomas
Clarke, Ark.	Jones	Poindexter	Tillman
Culberson	La Follette	Pomerene	Townsend
Cummins	Lane	Reed	Underwood
Curtis	Lea, Tenn.	Shafroth	Walsh
Fletcher	Lewis	Sheppard	Warren
Gallinger	McLean	Sherman	Williams
Gronna	Martine, N. J.	Shields	Works

Mr. CUMMINS. May I announce that my colleague [Mr. KENYON] is absent from the city on account of illness in his family? I desire the announcement to stand for the day.

Mr. MYERS. I am requested to announce that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] are necessarily absent on account of important official business.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] on account of important public business, and also the absence of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The Senator from Wisconsin will proceed.

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President, I was about to say that the Post Office Department has put itself on record in favor of the space plan. The pamphlet of the department gives many excellent reasons why that plan should be adopted, and it gives them so very well and so concisely and convincingly that I should be pleased to have them placed in the RECORD as part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hearing no objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE WEIGHT BASIS.

AN ANTIQUATED, COMPLEX, UNBUSINESSLIKE, INEQUITABLE SYSTEM.

The law now governing railway mail pay provides for pay on the basis of the average daily weights of mails carried over authorized routes. It dates back to 1873.

Maximum rates of pay are prescribed in the law. These are applicable to the average daily weights carried upon authorized mail routes ascertained by weighings held once every four years. On each route the mails are weighed for a period of 105 successive days. The rates are arranged on a sliding scale, whereby, as the weights increase, the rates decrease.

The country is divided into four contract sections and the mails weighed successively in each section. That is to say, while a weighing occurs once in every four years on each particular route and in each contract section, a weighing occurs in one section each year. The average annual cost to the department for weighing the mails is $250,000.

In addition to the pay for weights the present law authorizes additional pay for railway post-office cars, 40 feet and more in length, at specified rates. This constitutes partial recognition of the space principle as a proper factor in making mail transportation rates.

The plan of 1873 has never been changed, although the rates were somewhat reduced by Congress in 1876, 1878, and 1907.

The weighings are costly and annoying, and interfere seriously with the operation of the service in the field. Compensation thus determined is not fairly distributed according to service rendered. The system lacks the elasticity to meet changing conditions and fluctuations of traffic that, with the growing of the parcel post, have been frequent and far-reaching.

Computation of pay under the old law with its several amendments is a complex process, little understood, and productive of endless and vexatious disputes.

The whole plan is unscientific inequitable in results, and needlessly complex.

THE SPACE BASIS.

A SIMPLE, PRACTICAL, ACCURATE, JUST METHOD.

As far back as 1876 so much dissatisfaction with the weight system of determining railway mail pay existed that Congress provided for a commission, to be appointed by the President, to investigate the subject. A succession of inquiries by congressional commissions, by appointive commissions, and by the Post Office Department have followed.

Practically every such investigation, including that made by the joint committee of Congress which reported in 1914, resulted in the conclusion that the present system is inadequate, complex, cumbersome, and unbusinesslike, and in recommendations for the substitution either in whole or in part of the space basis for the weight basis.

HAULING A CAR 1 MILE MADE "UNIT OF SERVICE."

The space method now proposed by the Post Office Department adopts the "car-mile unit of service" as the basis upon which to make authorizations of and payments for the major part of the Railway Mail Service. This would mean rates of pay—which have been ascertained after thorough inquiry to be fair rates—for hauling standard full railway post-office, apartment, and storage mail cars 1 mile.

The new plan contemplates additional compensation in the form of terminal allowances for services not covered by the space payment, representing charges for loading mails, and for heating, lighting, cleaning, and switching mail cars at the terminals of car runs and provides for the retention of the weight basis for "closed-pouch service." The latter comprises a very small per cent of the mail traffic and requires so little space in trains and fluctuates in quantity to such an extent that the space system could not be easily adapted to it. By far the bulk of mail pay would be determined by the space-and-distance gauge.

DIFFERING RATES FOR VARIOUS TYPES OF CARS.

The standard mail car is 60 feet long and is usually 9 feet wide and 8½ feet high, inside measurements. Only the length is to figure, however, in determining pay.

There are two kinds of full mail cars—railway post-office cars and mail-storage cars.

The former, as the name signifies, are traveling post offices in which the mail is "worked"; that is, opened, distributed, assembled in packages or bags for individual post offices, other railway routes, and for stations and carrier routes in large cities. When an entire car is thus utilized it is called a "full railway post-office car."

The storage cars, as the name also implies, are traveling storehouses in which the mail is stored before and after being worked or for through carriage.

The railway post-office cars are equipped by the railroad companies, and must be heated and lighted while en route at the expense of the railroads. These expenses do not apply in the same degree to storage cars, which require only light and heat in a limited degree and provision for making stall separations. Hence for railway post-office car service, as it is called, a somewhat higher rate of pay should be allowed than for storage-car service. This is amply provided for in the scale of rates proposed.

APARTMENT CARS GET PROPORTIONATE RATES.

The volume of mail passing over the thousands of railway mail routes varies. On the heavy routes—New York to Chicago, New York to St. Louis, etc.—a number of full cars and storage cars are needed each trip. On other routes one full car, with or without a storage car, meets the need. On the majority of routes a half car or a quarter car suffices. To fit this condition a third class of railway mail car service is operated, known as apartment-car service. This requires combination cars, used in part for mail and in part for baggage or other railway business. At present these are of various lengths, but the proposed law provides for two standard sizes, viz, 30 feet and 15 feet.

Under the space system apartment-car service would be paid for at a rate proportionate to the full-car rate; for a 30-foot apartment, one-half the full-car pay; for a 15-foot apartment, slightly more than one-fourth the full-car rate.

CLOSED-POUCH SERVICE RETAINS WEIGHT BASIS.

"Closed-pouch" service is the carriage of United States mail pouches, locked or sealed, containing letter and paper mail, or sacks containing paper mail only, transported over a route without breaking bulk. As performed by the railroads, this service consists of the transportation of one, two, three, or more closed mail bags over routes or on trains upon which the mail traffic is not heavy enough to require special accommodations for distribution en route. These mails are in the custody of the baggageman, who receives and delivers them without the intervention of postal employees.

Manifestly, because of its fluctuating character and the fact that in many cases the mail involved consists of simply a pouch or sack, c mputation of pay for closed-pouch service on the space basis would be exceedingly difficult; hence the retention of the weight basis for this class of business. It is provided that the weighings of closed-pouch mails a id readjustment of pay for their carriage shall be made annually instead of quadrennially, as at present. The annual weighing, it is estimated, will cost the Post Office Department about $100,000.

NEW PLAN FAILED LAST YEAR BY A NARROW MARGIN.

The desirability of a revision of the laws governing railway mail pay has been recognized by postal administrations for many years, but no definite proposition was presented to Congress until August, 1911, when the department reported the results of an exhaustive inquiry commenced in 1907, and submitted a tentative plan for revising the laws upon the basis of space, with rates based upon the cost of the service to the companies plus a reasonable rate of profit.

Subsequent study and further information obtained during the progress of the investigations of the joint congressional committee having demonstrated that the cost basis was impracticable under present conditions, the department changed its view and submitted a new plan, essentially identical with the proposed law now advocated.

In June, 1914, this plan was presented by the chairman of the House Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, Hon. JOHN A. MOON. Hearings on this bill were had before the proper committees of Congress.

PASSED THE HOUSE TWICE—AGREED TO IN CONFERENCE.

Twice by large majorities the House, in August, 1914, and January, 1915, approved the plan proposed by the Post Office Department. This plan carried the essential features of the recommendation of the joint congressional committee for a change to the space basis, except that it provided for retaining the weight basis for closed-pouch service. The joint committee advocated the space basis for all service. The plan provided for a scale of pay exceedingly liberal in the light of every factor that justly enters into the question of fixing reasonable compensation for carrying the mails, and assured the railroads a somewhat larger revenue per car-mile for carrying the mails than they are now receiving.

On the occasion of its first passage in the House, the mail-pay measure was incorporated, along with other needed postal legislation, in the Moon bill. Because of the congestion of legislation during the short session, it became apparent that the Moon bill could not be enacted, and hence the mail-pay section of the Moon bill was incorporated in the annual Post Office appropriation bill.

In essentials the department's plan was agreed to in the conference committee of House and Senate upon the appropriation, but a final vote upon the conference committee's report was not reached in the Senate.

NEW RATES COMPENSATE ALL CLASSES OF SERVICE.

Under the department bill the rates of railway mail pay are divided into two classes: (1) Car-mile line rates; (2) initial and terminal rates.

The former provide compensation for hauling the different sizes of standard mail cars and will constitute the bulk of the pay. The latter cover expenses of loading and unloading mails, switching, heating, lighting, and cleaning cars and other station expenses at the termini of the car runs.

This division of compensation into two parts, one of which provides special allowances for costs of terminal station service at points of origin and destination on all runs regardless of distance, for the first time allots pay with equitable recognition of long and short hauls. Initial and terminal costs vary little, whether the car run is 100 miles or 1,000 miles. The terminal allowances, which are the same regardless of the length of car run, will increase the pay per mile according to the length of run, the longer the trip the smaller the increase per mile.

Car-mile line rates.

Class.	Unit.	Car-mile rate.
Full R. P. O. cars	60-foot cars	$0.21
Apartment cars	30-foot apartment	.10½
Do	15-foot apartment	.05¼
Storage cars	60-foot cars	.20

Initial and terminal rates.

Class.	Unit.	Initial and terminal allowance per single trip.
Full R. P. O. cars	60-foot cars	$4.00

PASSENGER REVENUE LESS 10 PER CENT IS BASIS OF RATES.

The car-mile line rates are based primarily upon the average car-mile revenue earned by the passenger service of the country as reported to the Interstate Commerce Commission, with a suitable reduction to offset the difference in character between passenger and mail services. Many considerations applying to the carriage of the mails do not apply to the carriage of passengers, and facilities furnished by the railroads for passenger service differ materially from facilities furnished for mail service.

There is no justification for the claim that the mail service should participate fully in the enormous costs of elaborate terminals and station structures. The mails neither seek nor need housing in $100,000,000 buildings; in fact, the least expensive parts of stations are devoted to the mails, and very rightly so.

The initial and terminal rates are based upon estimates of the initial and terminal costs—loading, unloading, switching, etc., as stated above.

THE NEW SCHEDULE IS RESULT OF LONG STUDY.

The determination of the rates was a most difficult problem. Numerous bases were suggested, considered, and rejected.

The conclusion was reached after long and thorough inquiry that a 10 per cent reduction would approximately represent the proper difference between the passenger-service revenue and an adequate mail revenue.

Applied to 25.43 cents, the passenger-car-mile revenue for 1911 (the latest figure available at the time the rates were constructed), the 10 per cent reduction produced 22.89 cents as a fair mail revenue per 60-foot car mile. Applied to the passenger-car-mile revenue for 1912, 24.29 cents, the result is 21.87 cents. The 60-foot car-mile revenue received by the railroads at the rates provided in the department bill, based upon the service estimated as being necessary for the fiscal year of 1915, would be 22.96 cents.

TOTAL PAY WOULD BE INCREASED BY CHANGE.

The total mail pay upon the present basis, including both pay for weight and pay for space, for the fiscal year of 1915, was more than $59,000,000. The rates carried in the proposed law would have resulted in a payment for that year of about $62,000,000, estimated on the basis of the service in operation. For service as of present date the expenditure would probably be somewhat greater, although legitimate economies in the way of concentrated loading and dispatches and along other lines would, it is believed, tend to reduce such increase materially.

Although the facts would warrant a reduction of railway-mail compensation, the Post Office Department has not advocated this action.

"NOT EXCEEDING" CLAUSE IS UNJUSTLY ATTACKED.

The proposed law authorizes the Postmaster General to pay not exceeding the rates specified in it.

The railroads have contended that this and other phraseology of the bill give the Postmaster General arbitrary rate-making power which, it is insinuated, he would use to compel the roads to carry the mails for less than the maximum rates designated. By inference, the charge is made that the Postmaster General is seeking power he does not now possess, and it has been declared in so many words that he would use this power to oppress the railroads.

In every law enacted by Congress on the subject of railway-may pay since Congress first legislated, 77 years ago, in regard to the carriage of mails on railroads—July 7, 1838—the Postmaster General has been given free and full power to contract with a railroad for the carriage of mails at any rate within the maximum rates named in the several laws if he should be able to do so.

During the life of the present railway mail pay statute, passed in 1873, no Postmaster General has arbitrarily reduced rates, though under the law he has had full power to do so. The history of the service for the last 40 years sufficiently refutes the charge that the inclusion of the words "not exceeding" will give the Postmaster General power which he would use in an autocratic or unfair manner.

OPERATES TO PROTECT DEPARTMENT AND ROADS.

The flexibility of the provision "not exceeding" is absolutely necessary for practical administration, and works both in the interest of the Government and many of the railroads. If rates were absolutely fixed, the Government would be compelled to use the short line between the large mailing centers and could not give the competing roads having longer lines the privilege, as is done now, of hauling a part of the mails at the rate for the short line.

Also, if the rates were inflexible there would be innumerable instances in the conduct of the service involving disputes between the railroad companies and the department as to the precise amount due for service, and the usual order of the Postmaster General, which, if it fixes the rate within the maximum prescribed by law, has been held by the courts to be final, would only mark the beginning of numerous and vexatious lawsuits.

WHAT MAIL PAY MEANS TO PARCEL-POST SERVICE.

In little more than two years the parcel post has grown so rapidly that its annual traffic is now estimated at 1,000,000,000 parcels a year. This expansion demonstrates the public need and demand in this country for a service which for years has been provided in every other advanced nation on earth.

This tremendous burden of service has been successfully assumed by the postal establishment and is being performed at a margin of profit for the Government, notwithstanding the inordinately heavy transportation costs—at times amounting to double the transportation costs borne by the express companies upon a great part of their traffic—which the Government has been compelled to shoulder.

In the face of the unequal conditions the Government is doing an enormous parcel business at charges to the public much lower on the whole than were made by the express companies before the coming of the parcel post, and is giving express facilities alike to practically every township, hamlet, village, and city, great or small, in the United States.

Upon the majority of the great mail routes mail and express transportation conditions are practically identical. The cost to the railroads of the incidental services rendered in transporting the mails on these routes is inconsiderable as compared with the great disparity in the returns from the two services. It follows from the inequality of transportation costs that the parcel-post rates to the public, for the higher weights, greatly exceed the express rates. Between New York and Chicago parcel postage is $1.20 for 20 pounds, as compared with an express rate of 68 cents. A more equitable scale of mail pay would make possible a readjustment of parcel postage upon the higher weights and long hauls, would expand the public's transportation facilities, and would still give the railroads adequate compensation under their own standard of what constitutes adequate compensation, to wit, a "commercial rate."

The railroads are receiving from the Government amounts which for hauls of any considerable length exceed by about 2 to 1 the amounts they receive from the express companies for like and similar service.

ADVANTAGES OF THE SPACE BASIS.

INCREASE OF SERVICE IS AUTOMATICALLY PAID FOR—JUSTICE TO ALL THE RAILROADS—BETTER FACILITIES FOR HANDLING PARCEL-POST MATTER ASSURED.

Under the space basis of payment provided in the Moon bill and in the appropriation bill, and agreed to by the conference committee on the latter, fluctuations in service would be promptly recognized and compensated.

If the expansion of the parcel post resulted in need of additional space, it would be paid for. At the same time the department would have opportunity for economies in the utilization of the authorized space to its maximum capacity, which entirely proper action would work no injustice to the railroad companies because they would still be paid for all space provided.

It is the belief of the department officials, and of many railroad officials as well, that the space plan would enable all service furnished according to the needs to be properly compensated; in other words, the department would pay for what it receives, and the railroads would receive pay for all service furnished.

SQUARE DEAL ASSURED TO ALL THE RAILROADS.

Under the space plan each company will receive compensation for all service performed by it, and changes in service requiring additional space will be immediately recognized by authorization of additional space and pay. This will eliminate complaints regarding cases wherein heavy diversions of mail are made from one route to another without changes in pay, which are continually occurring under the existing weight system.

Under the present law it is often asserted that the pay is inequitable between companies, in that there may be two routes carrying the same weight of mail upon one of which the space and facilities required may greatly exceed those required on the other route, notwithstanding which each company receives the same pay. The new plan will correct inequalities of this kind.

EXISTING RATES PAY FOR FOUR-YEAR INCREASE OF MAIL.

Under the present law one of the principal complaints of the companies has been that during the four-year period between adjustments the increased weights of mails carried by them are transported without compensation. The railroads advance this as their principal argument for annual instead of quadrennial weighings, asserting that it is inequitable and unjust to require them to carry the accretions without additional pay.

The department has taken the position that the rates provided in the existing law were fixed high enough to cover the increased regular mails to be carried during the term. Nevertheless cases have arisen where schedule changes or unusual conditions have resulted in diverting to a line a considerable quantity of mails not theretofore carried and not weighed on that line, with a corresponding reduction in weights carried on the line from which diverted. Unless the weights diverted equal at least 10 per cent of the average daily weight on any of the routes involved, the department is without authority to restate the pay and correct the inequity.

The proposed law corrects these inequalities, and the administration of the service under its provisions will enable the department to compensate the railroads for all service performed. Fluctuations in the volume of mail which require the furnishing of a greater or lesser amount of space than regularly authorized can be met by the authorization on lines where such conditions obtain of a certain amount of space beyond the regular authorizations to be used and paid for when needed. This extra space would, of course, not be used if surplus space is available on another line affording equal service for the mails involved.

SAVES $600,000 A YEAR ON RETURNING EQUIPMENT.

There is usually a preponderance of mail tonnage in one direction, and the space required in that direction is necessarily greater than is needed in the return movement. Under the provisions of the proposed law the maximum space needed in either direction is to be determinative of the space to be paid for in return.

On account of the heavier movement of mails in one direction the equipment used to inclose the mails naturally accumulates after use at points remote from the centers where the mails originate. Under existing law this equipment is returned to points where needed by freight at considerably less expense than if returned by mail. The annual cost of such service aggregates about $600,000.

Under the new plan, which specifies that the companies shall be paid for the round-trip movement of a car of the maximum size needed in either direction, there will probably be a surplus of unused space available in the return movement which may be utilized for the carriage of a greater part, if not all, of this returning empty equipment without additional cost and with a saving of its transportation cost by freight. Other opportunities for the use of return empty space paid for and not needed for mails will no doubt present themselves in the carriage of supplies and stamped paper for the service and of periodicals now sent by fast freight.

CARS WILL BE USED TO THEIR CAPACITY.

The tendency under the space plan will be to load authorized cars to the maximum consistent with the conditions required for distribution and handling. Under the weight basis, where the weight is paid for, no matter whether transported in postal cars, baggage cars, or storage cars, the tendency is to relieve the distributing cars wherever possible and carry mails in baggage or storage cars.

Under the space basis the space in the authorized railway post-office cars will be utilized to capacity before authorizing additional space in storage or baggage cars, thus relieving the baggage cars of their loads. The new plan also affords opportunity for consolidating mails for transportation between large centers where more than one line is available and the utilization of all authorized space to capacity before it will be necessary to authorize additional space for additional mails.

In cases where several partly loaded cars are now carrying the mails, it will be practicable to concentrate the mails in a less number of cars, thus securing the most economical loading and reducing the car mileage to be paid for to the minimum. This will provide an entirely proper economy with no burden on the railroads.

POSTAL EXPRESS SHIPMENTS.

EMPTY MAIL BAGS SHIPPED BY EXPRESS TO AVOID THE HIGH MAIL RATE.

The department is authorized by law to ship by mail, from November 15 to January 15, empty mail bags ordinarily sent by freight. Mail bags may go by express at any time, but are customarily shipped by freight unless an emergency arises, as the express rate is usually more than double that of the freight rate.

During the recent holiday period it was found that shipments could be made by express at a lower rate than by mail between many points, and the express service was utilized to a considerable extent at an average saving of 37½ cents per hundred pounds over the cost had they been sent in mail trains, and the railroad companies get only 50 per cent of the express rate.

The following table shows some of the points between which the department shipped mail bags by express during the holiday season of 1915, the mail and express rates, and the amount saved in each case by using express:

Keen competition leads roads to take less than maximum pay.

To share in mail transportation between competitive points many railroads enter into "equalization agreements" with the Post Office Department under which they perform service for less than the maximum pay under the law. Under these agreements, the companies accept the low rate in order to retain the carriage of the mails.

The following table shows the companies now carrying mail under "equalization agreements," the points between which mail is carried under these agreements, the maximum pay authorized by law in each such case, the pay accepted by the carriers to meet competition, and the resulting per cent of reduction from the maximum pay.

THE SPACE BASIS

Eliminates troublesome and expensive weighing;
Provides a system of rates definite and understandable;
Utilizes facilities paid for to a maximum capacity;
Pays for service actually rendered and for space furnished; and
Will enable the department to proceed with its plans for the expansion of the parcel post.

Mr. HUSTING. I have already gone over the reasons why I think, and why the Post Office Department thinks, and why the committees who have investigated this matter think, the space basis is the proper plan. It makes for efficiency; it makes for certainty; it makes for equity; and in the long run it is going to put the Post Office Department upon a basis where the Postmaster General can have a voice in the matter of expense.

How is it to-day? Congress provides how much postage shall be charged for a given service; it prescribes how much shall be paid to the railroads per pound, and virtually takes out of the Postmaster General's hands the instituting of economies in the service. Every time the Postmaster General renders his report and we read it and find a deficit in his department, what do we do? We blame the Postmaster General. He is the man upon whom the responsibility rests; he is the man who has got to stand the responsibility and take the blame for such deficit every time; and yet when it comes to running that department, when it comes to saying what shall be done, what do we find here? Do we find a disposition to help the Post Office Department in the running of its business? Do we find here any respect for the ideas of the Postmaster General or for his recommendations concerning a matter of so vital importance as this? No; we find only condemnation. There has been some very severe condemnation of a public official—the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General—who in his zeal probably exceeded the bounds of respect due to the Senate and to Senators, but who, nevertheless, in his letter, a copy of which I have here, at least discloses a desire to serve the people and the public. It is true he has said something in the letter that I do not think was necessary to be said, yet he has pointed out certain facts, and the facts are these, as I understand—and I should like to be corrected if I am wrong—that the Post Office Department's suggestions were overruled in every instance upon this question before us and the recommendations of the railroads were accepted instead.

Are those the facts? If they are, I feel that the recommendations of the Postmaster General should have been entitled to greater weight than those of the railroads.

I can not get myself into the frame of mind where I could regard the Senate as a judicial body, as a body which sits in judgment upon every department of the Government and passes upon the recommendations of Cabinet officers and other officials from a judicial standpoint. The Supreme Court is a judicial body, but, as I understand it, the Congress of the United States is a legislative body. I believe it has been elected to represent the people of the United States and to legislate in their interest. I can not understand why, whenever matters of importance of this kind, affecting the very welfare of the people themselves, come up, a department should be put upon trial, should be made to stand almost as a culprit before the people. I can not understand why this department should be thus confronted by its persecutors, the railroads, and should be called upon to defend itself against the awful charge of trying to save some money for the people of the United States, and of trying to run the Post Office Department in such a way that the people will get the most benefit out of the mails at the cheapest rate.

I have heard considerable said here about regulating railroad rates. I have listened to one distinguished Senator say here yesterday, in effect at least, that, even if we paid the railroads too much for the service rendered in the carrying of the mails, yet, after all, it was reflected in the lowering of rates to the public at large on other commodities. I should like to suggest that if we had proceeded upon that theory years and years ago we might still be paying 4 or 5 cents for a letter and at least a cent an ounce for newspapers. I think a sounder proposition is that if the price of carrying the mails is reduced it will be reflected in lower postage. Whom would you rather trust about the benefits that are going to dribble down to the public—the railroads, which we pay more than they are entitled to receive and who thus, as it is claimed, will lower the rates to the public at large, or the Post Office Department, which is striving, as I am sure its officials have been striving, to economize in the service, to make the service efficient, and to give the people the best service at the lowest possible expense?

But reverting once more to this proposition that when we save somthing for the railroads in one field we are going to feel it correspondingly in another field, I was very much impressed with what my colleague, the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], said yesterday about the raising of the rates 5 per cent in 1913. I think this raise was made unjustly. I think he showed that it was done without any good provocation or excuse. However, let us say it was justly done. We know the rates were raised, and we also know that business has increased. The net earnings have increased, as was shown by my colleague, 45 per cent. The net earnings of the railroads have increased 45 per cent in the last year. Now, according to the theory advanced here, we ought to be now enjoying cheaper rates, because the earnings of railroad companies have increased 45 per cent. Has anybody seen any notices posted anywhere to the effect that the railroads have lowered their rates? Have they even taken off this 5 per cent that was put on top of their rates in 1913? We have got prosperous years now, and the treasuries of the railroads are to-day in a very prosperous condition.

I will tell you how it appears to me that this scheme works, and I am not going to ask the Senate to take my word for it, but only the story of experience. When rates are raised in the lean years they stay fixed and the public continues to pay those advanced rates no matter what the later earnings of the railroad companies are.

I point to this fact to prove it. Notwithstanding the fact that rates were raised 5 per cent in 1913, there has been no disposition shown on the part of the railroads to take off the increase now, when they admit that they are earning 45 per cent more than they did when the 5 per cent was put on. That gives them a margin of at least 45 per cent more earnings than they were getting in 1913.

I say it does not work out that rates are lowered when profits increase, and I can not follow the line of argument at all which proceeds on the theory that the scales are so adjusted by the Interstate Commerce Commission that every fluctuation of the earnings of a railroad company is reflected in the rates. There is no such elasticity as that in rate making. In fact, it seems that when rates are determined at any time they become a rigid, immovable thing, and the only time they are ever changed at all, as this 5 per cent increase will be changed, I take it, is when some more lean years come on, and another boost will be given, because the railroads are not earning then as much as they think they ought to be.

I say that this bill puts us in the attitude of trying the Postmaster General. His worst offense, as I understand it, is that he is trying to make a bargain with the railroads to carry our mails at a price that is fair and compensatory, and under a system that will give the people the best service for their money. Instead of that, we are going to take the whole matter out of the realm of contract, and we are going to burden the Interstate Commerce Commission with a new question for them to solve. It is a question between the sovereign itself, the United States, and one of its servants, one of its creatures to which the sovereign itself has given life. The proponents of this bill are going to put us, the sovereign, on the same plane with the railroads, and try us both before the Interstate Commerce Commission.

For years the matter of railway mail pay has been a matter of contract pure and simple, a contract between the Postmaster General and those with whom he was doing business. He was acting for the United States. Of course, the matter crept into legislation more or less, but even to-day the carriage of mails is a contract proposition, nothing less and nothing more. The business manager of our Post Office Department comes here and tells us what is the best way of doing our business and how to get the cheapest rates, and he backs it up by arguments. Not only does he back it up by arguments, but his space system is supported by committee reports, one of which is signed by the distinguished chairman of the Post Offices and Post Roads Committee himself. These reports say that the space system is the best way of doing this business. He comes here and presents this matter to us, presents his arguments, his reasons for knowing that is the best thing to do. Now, whose advice do we take? Why, we take the advice of the railroad companies themselves, their representatives who appeared before the committee, and we let them dictate the business policy of the United States in its post-office dealings.

What is our business here in the Senate, in this Congress? One of our chief concerns, as I see it, is to run our post-office business on that basis which will bring the best results, and I, for one, want to look at it from the standpoint of the United States itself, and not from the standpoint of those who are either going to profit or lose by whatever method we adopt. If the United States, through its representatives, is not going to look out for the interests of the department and the interests of the United States, whom do we expect is going to do that for us? Have we any right to presume that the railway companies, who are themselves interested parties, are safer and better advisers to this body than the Postmaster General himself?

It has been said here that this is an abstruse proposition, that we can not all go into it, that we can not all understand it. Very well; let us grant that. Grant that we do not understand it clearly, and grant that we have got to go to somebody for advice. Where should we go? To whom should you want to go for advice? Men that have made this a particular study? Men who are intrusted with this business, like the Postmaster General himself? Men who do know its details, because they have made it their business to be informed concerning railway mail carriage? Or should you go to the other parties interested from a private viewpoint and ask their advice?

I think the reasons advanced by the Post Office Department are sufficient and good reasons for the adoption of the space basis. It is clear that under the space system we would know just where we are. Every day the Superintendent of the Railway Mail Service could order his cars. We would know every day just exactly how many cars are running, how long they are, and how much it is costing us to carry the mails. When times of light mail come, we could pull off the cars and run the service on a schedule of less cars. We could increase the number of cars and their capacity when times of heavy mails come. We could do this as every other business does it—like the packers do it, for instance. They do not send out a dozen cars when they can fill up only 10, and pay on the basis of the use of 12 cars. They regulate their business, and they do business with the number of cars that they need.

It seems to me that that is a plain business proposition. The space system is certain; it is equitable. The railway companies will get pay for every car they run, for every car that is actually needed. Why should they get any more?

I think that we would be right in giving the Post Office Department the benefit of the doubt in its demand for this basis; and I also think that when the department shows by the rates actually incorporated in this bill that it would produce $65,000,000 for the railroads for the year 1915, it proves that there is no chance for any unfairness at all. The carriers would get, even under the present number of cars that are run, more pay than they are getting under the weight system. But what the space system would do is this: Hereafter, in the expansion of mails, we are going to take care of the number of cars that we need, and not run more cars or more crews than the business warrants; and, therefore, we are going to put our post-office business on a plane where everybody can understand it and where the country will save a sufficient amount to make it appear to everybody that this is the proper way of doing business.

Now, coming down to the question of the Interstate Commerce Commission passing upon this question of pay. That is left in the amendment of the Senator from Florida. The most radical and important difference between the amendment of the Senator from Florida and the amendment of the Senator from Iowa is that in the amendment of the Senator from Florida annual weighings are not permitted; and if annual weighings are not permitted it is going to save us between two and three and four million dollars a year. In the second place, the amendment of the Senator from Florida would permit the Post Office Department to put into effect its basis of railway pay, and to fix a rate and still leave to the Interstate Commerce Commission the right to change that rate by way of increasing it or decreasing it.

To recapitulate, I say that the provision in the Senate amendment which does not permit the present weighing system to obtain, but which adds two or three or four million dollars a year to railway pay for increases to which they are not entitled, because they are already reflected in the rate, in my opinion can not be successfully defended on any ground, either of fairness to the railroads or of fidelity to the public service. I say, in the second place, that the Postmaster General, who is invested with the authority to manage our postal affairs and who is going to be charged with the responsibility for any deficit that may obtain, should be given the benefit of the doubt, if there is any doubt, and his recommendations should be accepted unless there are grave reasons why they should not be accepted. When he comes in and tells us, and, as I say, these committees have told us, and I repeat again that the chairman of the present committee signed those reports and recommended this very system, it seems to me that there should be no good reason why the Senate should not adopt that recommendation and let it stand as a business policy. Then, if you want to leave to the Interstate Commerce Commission this question concerning the rate of pay, you can leave it to them.

I share somewhat the feeling that others appear to have here in this body as to whether they are better able than the Post Office Department to judge what the United States ought to pay. There are certain reasons why the United States mails should be given a rate that is, if anything, lower than the ordinary rate. We are the largest customer of the railroads. The amount of material which they carry for us is certain. This amount can be estimated almost to the pound every day. A good many of the railroad trains could not run at all unless they got our business.

The railroads are our creatures. They are public-service corporations. They are engaged in the business of serving the public. In carrying the mails they are rendering a public service. The United States is not making any money out of its mails. It is trying to serve the public, all of the public, every man, woman, and almost every child in the country, in the way of carrying the mails as expeditiously and as cheaply as possible. We are not in the same situation as men or corporations who are running their business for profit, because the profit goes into their pockets; but here the carrying of the mails is something that is beneficial to everybody, including the railroads themselves. In times of strikes, as we know, the presence of the United States mails has placed the seal of sanctity upon the trains, and the Government has stood back of its mails and prevented strikes. There are a great many things that the railroads enjoy and a great many things that they have to do with us in our business that is far different from what they have to do with private parties.

I presume that if we had put in their charters originally, when they were first organized, provisions that they should carry the mails for a price far below what others paid for the carrying of commodities, they would have been glad to have obtained the charters on that basis, and anxious to carry the mails on that basis. Even now the provision appears in the bill that roads that received empires of land as subsidies are cut off 20 per cent. Some Senators say that it is confiscatory to make them receive less than others. It is not confiscatory if it is fair; and it is fair, purely on a dollars-and-cents proposition, to charge the United States for a service less than others are paying for a like service. Everybody knows that when things are carried in carload lots it is done more cheaply. But the truth of the matter is not only are we not paying less than everybody else but I venture to say that we are paying more for the same service than the railroads charge private parties for the same service. In fact, the railroads are charging us more than they are charging ordinary individuals. Right here in this pamphlet that I have are some things that show the truth of this statement. It appears that we can do business to-day with the express companies cheaper than we can do it with ourselves. The United States can ship mail matter by express cheaper than it can ship it over its own mail routes. Here in this pamphlet, that I am going to have printed in the RECORD, I will just mention a few of them.

The table I have here shows some of the points between which the Post Office Department shipped mail bags by express during the holiday season of 1915, the mail and express rates, and the amount saved in each case by using the express.

Here is the rate from Burlington, Vt., to Boston, Mass., the rates being per hundred pounds: Express rate, $1.15; mail rate, $1.52; amount saved, $16.17.

Cincinnati, Ohio, to Washington, D. C.: Express rate, $1.90; mail rate, $2.07; amount saved, $4.07.

Corinth, Miss., to Mobile, Ala.: Express rate, $1.55; mail rate, $2.08.

Corinth, Miss., to Nashville, Tenn.: Express rate, $1.55; mail rate, $2.79.

I could go down the list here, but here is one I will mention: Salida, Colo., to St. Louis, Mo.: Express rate, $4.65; mail rate, $7.40; amount saved, $81.36.

We are talking about the United States getting cheaper rates. We frank our official material; we do not pay postage rates; and yet when it comes to hauling mail pouches on our own mail routes we save money by patronizing the express companies. They can haul our own mail cheaper than we can haul it ourselves. I understand that you can take the amount per hundred pounds on the express tariffs, and you will find that almost without any exception the amount of express returns to the railroad companies are away below what the United States, the railroad's biggest customer, has to pay for the same service. I understand the railroads haul the express at certain rates and divide. I think there are some tables here—I have them somewhere here—showing that they divide the amount charged, the express company taking half and the railroad company taking half. But these same railroads charge the United States, as shown here in this table, more, and a great deal more, for hauling material in the Railway Mail Service than they charge private corporations hauling express.

So there is no need of feeling alarmed that the railroad companies are going to be underpaid. I say that in all these discussions I have not learned anything and I have never seen anything by which it can be shown that the railroads ever performed any service for the United States for which they charged the United States as fair a rate as they are charging the public for the same service.

Senators get up here and say that we must be fearful, we must be careful, in legislating that we do not exercise the power of a czar or a tyrant to compel these poor railroads to do service for us at a price that is going to put them in the hands of receivers. They are simply putting the railroad companies upon the same plane and par with the United States itself, and putting every officer, every department, on trial, so that it almost has become a matter of great courage for any men who are connected with any department to appear before any committee or any body here and try to uphold the United States Government itself. It appears as though it were a matter not to be commended, but to be frowned down upon, for anyone to come and say that they want to try to do business for the United States on a fair plane to the United States. In all the discussions I have heard here the main question has been, "Are we treating these railroad companies fairly?" I say a burning question in this country and in all the United States is, "Are the railroads treating the people of the United States fairly? Are they treating the Government fairly—the Government that created them, the Government that subsidized them, and the Government that ought to regulate them?"

For every hundred voices that are raised in behalf of any railroad company, I do not believe there is one raised in the interest of economy of government. I say I do not think this is a judicial body that ought to go into session and consider this thing merely from a judicial standpoint. I venture to say that the interests of the United States ought to be considered from the representative standpoint. The courts will take care of other phases of these propositions, and the courts do take care of them; but there is no need to fear of doing injustice to any of these institutions. No injustice has ever yet been done them. Through all the decades of legislation the most solicitous care has been taken not to invade the rights of the railroads or any other institution of that kind. The tendency, I say, is too strong in this direction, and there is no need of being so fearful about the railroads being underpaid.

We talk here as though taxes and the expenses of running the Government were taken from nowhere; but every dollar saved, for instance, by the Post Office Department, saves that dollar in somebody's pocket from which it otherwise must come.

I feel that in this matter the department should be upheld. I want to say, for the Post Office Department and this administration, that the only criticism I have ever heard about this department is that it has been too careful of the people's rights in this matter. Whatever criticisms have gone out against this department have been directed against it because it is trying too hard to lop off some of the dead limbs, to improve the service, and to vitalize it, to systematize it, to bring it into something resembling a business institution. The department is trying to do these things now. They come here with this railway mail pay space proposition and say, "This is a good thing to do. These are our reasons for it. If you want to put us in a position where we can save money for the Government and where we can promote the efficiency of the service, here is an opportunity for you to do so." I say, whose advice shall we take—those who are intrusted with this important business or those who have a business interest in it?

Upon my request the Post Office Department submitted to me the following facts on the subject:

The question of railway mail pay, stated in the plainest terms and stripped of the technical terminology of the service, may be explained thus:

All railroads are paid for carrying the mails on a weight basis and certain roads, where a large amount of space is required for the purpose of distributing mail in transit, are paid additionally on a space basis for the operation of distributing cars over 40 feet in length.

The rates of pay on a weight basis are on a sliding scale, from $42.75 per mile per annum where the average weight of mails per day carried over the whole length of the route does not exceed 200 pounds, up to $171 per mile per annum where the average weight of mails per day carried over the whole length of the route is as high as 5,000 pounds, after which limit of weight the pay is $20.30 additional for each additional 2,000 pounds per day up to 48,000 pounds per day, and $19.24 per mile per annum for each additional 2,000 pounds in excess of 48,000 pounds per day. Allowances are also made for intermediate weights. Land-grant railroads are paid but 80 per cent of the foregoing rates. These rates are allowable under the acts of March 3, 1873, July 12, 1876, June 17, 1878, March 2, 1907, and May 12, 1910.

The foregoing rates apply to all mail carried on trains, whether in pouches carried in baggage cars, thrown off by a railway employee (which constitutes what is known as "closed-pouch" service), in storage cars in bulk, or in cars in which mail distribution is performed by traveling post-office employees. The railroads must furnish space for receiving, handling, and distributing mail on their trains. If the amount of mail worked on the trains can be accommodated in less than 40 feet of space no additional compensation for the space is paid to the roads, but when the space required for distributing mail is greater than can be accommodated in less than 40 feet of space the railroads are paid for the use of the postal cars at the rate of $25 per mile per annum for a 40-foot car, $27.50 per mile per annum for a 45-foot car, $32.50 per mile per annum for a 50-foot car, and $40 per mile per annum for a car 55 feet or more in length for a daily round trip of service.

The history of the legislation fixing rates for mail pay on a weight basis shows several marked decreases in the rates of pay by various acts of Congress since 1873. By the law of that year the rate for 200 pounds average daily weight was fixed at $50 per mile per annum and for 5,000 pounds at $200 per mile per annum. The law of July 12, 1876, made a flat reduction of 10 per cent in each of the weight rates established by the law of March 3, 1873, and also provided that land-grant railroads shall be paid only 80 per cent of the regular rates. The law of June 17, 1878, made a further reduction of 5 per cent in the weight rates, and the law of March 2, 1907, made a still further reduction of 5 per cent in the weight rates on all routes carrying a daily average of more than 5,000 pounds and a reduction of 10 per cent in the rates on routes carrying a daily average weight of more than 48,000 pounds. Finally the act of May 12, 1910, reduced land-grant rates on routes carrying over 5,000 pounds daily.

The rate of pay on the weight basis under existing law is based upon the average daily weight of mails carried over the respective routes, the average daily weight being ascertained by an actual weighing of the mails for 105 consecutive days once in every 4 years. These weighings are held in the spring of the year, which has been generally conceded to be an average mail-moving period. The sole exception to this spring weighing is in the New England States, where the mail is weighed in the fall. The country is divided into four sections, and each year the mail in one section is weighed. The cost to the Government of weighing the mails is approximately $300,000 a year. The law (act of Mar. 3, 1875) stipulates that the mails shall be weighed by employees of the Post Office Department. Under the practice the weighings are conducted by the Railway Mail Service, the expense being borne by the department and paid out of the railroad transportation appropriation, as provided by law. The railroad companies furnish the scales and the weight cards upon which to report the weights and provide additional help to handle the mails where needed.

With the rate of pay and the determination of the pay thus stated, the attached table showing the classes of routes according to the average daily weight carried, their number and length, transportation pay per annum on a weight basis, ton-miles per annum handled, and pay per ton-mile for the entire service will be clearly understood.

The service required of the railroads consists of the carriage of the mails on the trains and the transportation of the mails between the post office and the station at all post offices which are terminal points of mail routes, except where the Post Office Department maintains screen-wagon service for that purpose, and at post offices along the routes where the distance between the post office and station is 80 rods or less by the shortest practicable route, and an agent is employed and other provision is not made by the department. Where the post offices are more than 80 rods from the station the Post Office Department carries the mail. The delivery of the mail by the railroads to post offices at terminal points or stations en route within the 80-rod limit is known as "side-and-terminal service," and compensation for this service, as expressed by the Court of Claims, must be regarded as having been taken into consideration in the rates of pay fixed by the various acts of Congress for the hauling of the mails. In the administration of this side-and-terminal service the Post Office Department has been steadily absorbing more and more of it and is constantly relieving new and short lines of this service within the discretion allowed by the law. The railroads are also required to transfer mails at junction points to the station of a connecting railroad whose station is not more than 80 rods distant and an agent is employed; to furnish space and facilities at stations for the handling, storage, and transfer of mails; to load mails upon trains and to unload them from trains; and to erect mail cranes for the exchange of mails from moving trains at way stations. They are also required to construct, fit up, heat, light, and maintain all cars used in the Postal Service at their expense and to construct them according to plans approved by the Post Office Department. Railroads carrying the mails must carry them on any train they operate when directed by the Postmaster General, together with the persons in charge thereof, and suitable penalties are provided for refusal.

Where changes in the routing of mails occur between the weighing periods involving as much as 10 per cent of the mail taken from a line and added to another line, it has been the practice to weigh the mails affected and readjust the compensation in accordance with the act of August 24, 1912. Under legislation just passed readjustments under these circumstances may be made regardless of the amount of mail involved.

The new plan of adjusting railway mail pay advocated by the department and passed by the House of Representatives substitutes space for weight as the basis for measuring the service performed, supplemented by initial and terminal charges to cover expenses incurred by the railroads in loading and unloading mails and for heating, lighting, cleaning, and switching mail cars at terminals of car runs. The "car-mile" is made the unit of service, and rates of pay are named for each mile of service of standard sized mail and storage cars and of trains carrying closed pouch mails, the latter class being those carried in baggage cars in the custody of railroad employees. The car-mile line rates are graduated so as to slightly increase pay as the sizes of cars decrease, as will be seen from the schedule following. The initial and terminal rates are similarly graduated.

The following is a schedule of rates carried in the bill as it passed the House of Representatives:

Car-mile line rates.

Class.	Unit.	Car-mile rate.
Full R. P. O. cars	60-foot cars	$0.21
Apartment cars	30-foot apartment	.11
Do	15-foot apartment	.06
Storage cars	60-foot cars	.21
Closed pouch service	7-foot space	.03
Do	3-foot space	.01½

Initial and terminal rates.

Class.	Unit.	Initial and terminal allowance per single trip.
Full R. P. O. cars	60-foot cars	$4.25
Apartment cars	30-foot cars	2.75
Do	15-foot cars	2.00
Storage cars	30-foot cars	4.25
Closed pouch service	7-foot space	.50
Do	3-foot space	.25

The car-mile line rates are based principally upon the average car-mile revenue earned by the passenger service of the country as reported to the Interstate Commerce Commission, with a reduction to offset the difference in character between passenger and mail services. Many considerations applying to the carriage of the mails do not apply to the carriage of passengers, and facilities furnished by the railroads for passenger service differ materially from facilities furnished for mail service. Thorough inquiry led to the conclusion that a 10 per cent reduction would approximately represent the proper difference.

Applied to 25.43 cents, the passenger car-mile revenue for 1911—the latest figures available at the time the rates were constructed—the 10 per cent reduction produced 22.89 cents as a fair mail revenue per 60-foot car mile. Applied to the passenger car-mile revenue for 1912, 24.29 cents, the result is 21.87 cents. The 60-foot car-mile revenue received by the railroads at the rates above set forth, based upon the service estimated as being necessary for the fiscal year of 1917, would be 23.89 cents.

The division of rates into two parts, one of which provides special allowances for costs of terminal-station services on all train runs, regardless of distance, gives recognition to long and short hauls. Such costs are practically the same for all trains, whether they run 50 or 500 miles, and the spreading of the terminal allowances over the mileage of the trains serves to increase the pay per mile, according to the length of run, the longer the trip the smaller the increase per mile.

The services required of the railroads under the provisions of the bill are practically identical with the requirements under present law. There has been expressed in the proposed law all necessary existing laws and regulations relating to the railroad mail service in a clear and definite manner, so as to leave no room for conjecture as to the terms under which service will be performed by the railroads.

The Post Office Department favors the space basis as the measure of railroad mail service, because it will eliminate the troublesome and expensive weighings necessary under existing law; because it provides a system of rates definite and understandable in lieu of the present complex schedule of rates; because it will enable the department to utilize the facilities paid for to their maximum capacity, with resulting economy; because it will pay for service actually rendered and for all space furnished; and, finally, because it will provide the needed elasticity to meet changing conditions and fluctuations in service, which the present system lacks, by automatically increasing pay as the space required increases. It constitutes a method at once simple, practical, accurate, and just—one that will compensate fully all railroads for all the service they perform.

The objections of the railroads to the space-basis plan briefly summarized are that the measure of pay as provided by the bill is too low; that the rates can not increase under its provisions; that the rates are not compensatory for the service rendered; that possible economies in loading and dispatches effected by the department will be against the interests of the railroads; that the space plan reverses service conditions; that it will admit of the wholesale transfer of freight and express business to the mail business to the railroads' disadvantage; and that the administrative difficulties are so many as to render the measure impracticable. The department claims that each of these criticisms is amply met by the provisions of the bill itself. With reference to the first claim—that the measure of pay is too low—the answer is that it is based upon the average car-mile revenue received from passenger service by the railroads throughout the United States and is only about 5 per cent lower than that average revenue. The joint committee of Congress seriously considered a reduction of 10 per cent below that average revenue as being proper.

The claim that the rates can not increase is met by the provision of the bill which provides that the rates fixed therein are subject to review by the Interstate Commerce Commission upon application of the roads or of the department. There is an elasticity in this respect in the proposed bill that does not exist under present law under which there can be no increases in the rates without legislation. With reference to the claim that rates are not compensatory for the service rendered, it is only necessary to point out that they are higher than express rates per unit of service, more than double the freight rate per unit of service, and very close to the average car-mile revenue for passenger service, which the joint committee concluded was a fair measure of payment for mail service rendered. As to the claim that the space plan reverses service conditions, it appears to be based upon the theory that the railroads are now paid 90 per cent on weight and 10 per cent on space, and that if the space basis be adopted those conditions will be reversed. As a matter of fact, the amount they are paid on weight and space is no criterion whatever, because 96 per cent of the service is now on the space basis, although, for the purposes of payment, 90 per cent is based on weight and 10 per cent on space. All of the mail service, excepting closed-pouch service, is performed in authorized space, or space called for by the department, which is the same thing as authorization. The effect of this bill is to properly transfer the pay so that the measure of service shall be upon the space basis instead of upon the antiquated weight basis.

Referring to the claim that the bill will result in the wholesale transfer in freight and express to mail, attention is invited to the fact that this complaint is based upon the wrong premise that the very large increase in mail resulting from the establishment of the parcel-post system would be accentuated under the space basis, and that under it the departmet would be able to carry very heavy loads in mail cars at a very low rate, so low, it is alleged, as to compete with the freight business. It is only necessary to compare freight rates and parcel-post rates charged to the public to demonstrate the fallacy of this premise, as it is shown that in order to secure the business to compete with freight it will be necessary to reduce parcel-post rates charged to the public very greatly, in some cases more than 200 per cent, as were shown by specific instances presented to the Senate committee at its hearings. Furthermore, the physical conditions in the mail cars are not such as to admit of any such degree of loading as it is claimed would result under this bill. The cars can not carry such loads of mail and the quantity of mail would not be sufficient to accumulate the quantities claimed.

As to the administrative difficulties, it may be said that the department's officers do not anticipate any insuperable difficulty in the administration of the service upon the space basis, inasmuch as the service now is practically upon the basis of space, and the change in method provided by this bill merely changes the measure of service for the purpose of payment from weight to space.

MEMORANDUM RELATING TO PROVISION REGARDING WEIGHINGS AS CONTAINED IN BILL REPORTED BY SENATE COMMITTEE.

The bill provides that annual weighings are to occur only on the routes where the railroad company shall do the weighing. In other cases the mails are to be weighed quadrennially. This would establish two systems of adjustments for railroads carrying mails in the same territory; one for a period of one year and the other for a period of four years. It is well known that it is necessary to authorize diversions of mail from one route to another on account of changes in schedule. It might result that by reason of the schedule changes mails that are weighed upon one class of routes might thereafter be diverted and carried and weighed upon the other class of routes, and thus result in double payment for those particular mails in all cases where it would be impracticable to identify them.

Furthermore, it is a fact that there will be decreases in weights of mails carried on a route after it has been weighed, and where the pay has been adjusted and such decreases occur, the railroad company, being aware of it, would not seek a weighing the following year, but would defer it and thereafter be paid on a higher basis than the actual conditions on the route justify.

It has been suggested also that under this double system of adjustments competing railroad companies operating between important cities would be able to so arrange their schedules that one company might secure the weights of the competitive mails during the annual weighing and thereafter change its schedule, causing a diversion of such mails to the competing line. After this had occurred, the former carrier could decline to pay for the weighing and the department would be compelled to defer the weighing of this route until four years had elapsed, but in the meanwhile would be under the necessity of weighing and readjusting pay on the competing line, thereby paying twice for the carriage of this mail.

The merits of the space basis as against the weight basis and the ampleness of the rates prescribed in the bill passed by the House and rejected by the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads are set forth with great positiveness and detail in the report of the joint commission of Congress, commonly known as the Bourne commission. This report was signed by Senators Bourne, Bankhead, and Weeks and Representatives Lloyd, Tuttle, and Richardson. In a memorandum published on page 7 of the Bourne Commission report, signed by Senator Bankhead and Representatives Lloyd and Tuttle, appears this paragraph:

"As the investigation progressed nearly every one connected with it changes his views, and no one should be criticized for doing so. The country has the benefit of the most exhaustive, thorough, and conclusive investigation that has ever been made on the subject of railway mail pay, and full credit should be given to all who have contributed to this result."

In reading the Bourne commission report in connection with the bill passed by the House of Representatives at this session of Congress fixing the space basis and the rates of pay, it should be borne in mind that the bill is the plan of railway mail pay advocated by the Bourne commission and is essentially the bill passed by the House at the previous session of Congress and favorably reported by the House and Senate conferees composed of Senators BANKHEAD, SWANSON, and PENROSE and Representatives MOON, FINLEY, and MADDEN.

It is this bill that the department is urging, upon such high authority and after such careful consideration given to it by the joint commission of Congress, by the House of Representatives, and a conference committee of the two Houses, as the basis and rate of pay pending an investigation of the reasonableness of the rates therein fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission upon the application either of a majority of the railroads or of the Postmaster General. As you know, the railroads are opposing legislation on this basis and in lieu of legislation are asking for another investigation of the subject so thoroughly covered by the joint congressional committee.

The Post Office Department, upon my request, has submitted the following estimates on the cost of carrying mail:

It is estimated that the proposition to weigh the mails simultaneously on all railroad routes for 30 successive working days, as provided in the Post Office appropriation bill for 1917, would involve an additional expenditure for the fiscal year of 1918 of approximately $5,000,000 for railroad transportation of the mails in excess of the cost for the same service under present law. The method of arriving at the estimate is detailed below:

For the fiscal year of 1919 the estimate of additional expenditure is $3,900,000. No estimate for subsequent years has been made, but it is believed that it will be about $4,000,000 a year for two years beyond 1919, after which the annual increase will probably be from 4 per cent to 5 per cent per year.

It is difficult to estimate the cost of conducting the weighings. If the provision of the bill requires the railroad companies to bear that expense, the only cost devolving upon the department will be that for the clerical work connected with the tabulations and adjustments, the annual cost of which would probably not exceed $100,000. For the reasons expressed in another memorandum, the department does not favor the proposition to require the companies' employees to weigh the mails under Government supervision and direction, and if Congress directs an annual weighing at the expense of the companies the suggestion is made that the weighing be performed by sworn employees of the Government, as prescribed in present law, and the expense thereof to be charged back to the companies.

Estimate for fiscal year 1918.

First section (term 1913–1917), July 1, 1913	$11,092,271.25
No additional cost in that part of first section which would ordinarily be weighed in spring of 1917, including the States of New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, and West Virginia. If the annual weighing period should be fixed in spring of 1917 there will be a six months' increase in weights on routes in New England, on which the regular quadrennial weighing is due to be held in the fall of 1916. Annual rate on those routes July 1, 1913, was $1,871,608.26. Figuring 16 per cent increase for four years, the rate following the weighing in fall of 1916 will be $2,171,065.58 ($1,871,608.26×0.16=$299,457.32+$1,871,608.26=$2,171,065.58). Two per cent of $2,171,065.58=$43,421.31.
Second section (term 1912–1916), July 1, 1912	5,552,710.83
Weighed in spring of 1916. A new weighing in spring of 1917 will give one year's increase in weight with corresponding increase in pay. Estimating that the increase in pay resulting from the weighing of 1916 will equal 15 per cent, the annual rate on July 1, 1916, will be $6,385,617.45. It is estimated that subsequent increases in this section will not exceed 3 per cent a year, therefore a weighing in spring of 1917 will increase the annual rate 3 per cent, or $191,568.52.
Third section (term 1915–1919), July 1, 1915	20,011,333.46
Weighed in spring of 1915. A new weighing in spring of 1917 will give two years' increase of weight, with corresponding increase in pay. Nineteen hundred and fifteen weighing showed an increase of 18.81 per cent, or 4½ per cent a year. This increase, however, based on annual rate, including parcel-post allowances. Based on annual rate, September 1, 1911, following previous weighing, the increase was 19.88 per cent, or about 5 per cent a year. For two years, therefore, the increase would be 10 per cent of $20,011,333.46, or $2,001,133.34.
Fourth section (term 1914–1918), July 1, 1914	20,088,355.29
Weighed last in spring of 1914. A new weighing in spring of 1917 will give three years' increase in weight, with corresponding increase in pay. Nineteen hundred and fourteen weighing showed an increase of 16.74 per cent, or 4.2 per cent a year. This, however, was increase over annual rate, including parcel-post allowances. Based on annual rate July 1, 1910, the increase was 17.91 per cent, or 4½ per cent a year. For three years, therefore, the increase would be represented by 13½ per cent of $20,088,355.29, or $2,711,927.96.

RECAPITULATION.

First section	$43,421.31
Second section	191,568.52
Third section	2,001,133.34
Fourth section	2,711,927.96
Total	4,948,051.13

For 1919.

First section:
Annual rate July 1, 1917 (estimated)	$12,867,034.25
4 per cent increase for one year	515,681.38
Second section.
Two years' increase on annual rate shown in 1918 estimate	383,137.04
Third section:
Three years' increase on annual rate shown in 1918 estimate	3,001,700.01

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, it seems to me there is a good deal of confusion between the advocates of the Government's paying for space and those who advocate its paying on a schedule based upon weight. It is a good deal like the "pot calling the kettle black." Either way is fair if it is honestly handled. Both methods lead to injustice if they are not handled on a basis of fairness and honesty. The fact is, I think the Government should contract upon the basis of a classification which will include both methods.

Anyone who has ever handled freight or weighed it or measured it knows that if you are transporting heavy materials, the transportation companies charge by weight. If they are lighter articles, they charge for space. That may be fairly adjusted in either case, and in either case it may be unfair. A ton of pig lead occupies but a small amount of space. A ton of cotton or some other light material, such as baled hay or cordwood, that are carried by the transportation companies, occupies a great deal of space. You can base all of the schedules alike, either upon weight or upon space. Either can be taken advantage of by a transportation company; and it depends upon who does the weighing and who does the measureing in either case as to whether or not the rates are fair. The Government is entitled to a fair rate in transportation, and so is the railroad company.

Paper is heavy. It is almost as heavy as some mineral ores. If the railroad company is to be compelled to carry a car full of that kind of material and pack a car full of it it will lose money unless an enormous space rate is paid. Much depends upon the way freight is loaded on a car or the way the measurements are made as to whether or not the freight rate is fair.

I have known men who could make 15 cords of wood out of every hundred cords by the manner in which they piled it, and to the average man who would glance at it it would look as though it were piled properly on the space occupied. I have known transportation companies who would measure up bulky articles such as wagons, and measure from the rear to the tip of the pole or tongue, and gain over half a ton of freight by the transaction.

If the Government compels the railroad companies to furnish cars of so many cubic feet dimensions and then is allowed to pack that car themselves to the limit of its capacity, that is perfectly fair if the rate paid for the space is also fair, if the rate is based justly on what is due the railroad company. If on the other hand, the mail is loosely spaced and thrown in promiscuously the Government might easily lose by that method.

I think perhaps the Government has had to pay too much on the present weight plan. I have bought material and had it transported in railroad cars where if the Government had the space rate fixed upon the car it would lose 2 or 3 tons on every car for the reason that the capacity of the car was overestimated. The subject is not a hard one to deal with. Anybody who is familiar with space and weight rates, any traffic manager, any purser on a steamboat, any stevedore or freight agent who is familiar with classifications can almost measure it up with the naked eye. It is easy. There is much confusion here on the subject. If the Government wishes to buy space on the cubic contents of a car with fair packing, bearing in mind also the weight of the articles shipped, it is perfectly fair. You can ship pig lead if you please or pig iron by space rates, and it is fair if the weight of material is considered. You can not fill up a car to the limit of its space with pig iron or ore without wrecking it. It will not carry over 30 to 40 tons. You can load it to its limit in one-fifth of the space that would be required for carrying wheat or baled hay or loose mail bags. There is no reason why there should be any contention over the subject at all. The Government can buy on either plan with perfect safety if the transportation companies will measure fairly and weigh fairly and that is not hard to do.

Mr. President, the whole thing hangs upon honest dealing by both parties—the shipper and the transportation company. In some instances the railroad companies, the smaller lines and shorter lines which have to carry their freight over mountains or heavy grades, have lost money through the business of carrying the Government mails. There is one such road in our State. The railroad company should be relieved from such injustice, and that can be done without any trouble whatever. On the other hand, other railroad transportation companies have carried the mail matter of this Government at enormous and extortionate rates, and that should be stopped. The whole question should be submitted to experts. They are not hard to secure. In this matter it is the easiest problem to solve that has come before this body since I have been a Member of it, so far as I can recall. If they will go at it justly and honestly with a pair of scales and a measuring stick, it will not be hard to ascertain the average weight and cubic measurement of the mail which is shipped over the railroads. First weigh it and then measure it, or vice versa, and an average can be struck which will not vary 1 per cent in five years.

Neither the Government nor the railroad company need lose money. And the railway company can be paid a fair and just rate, and one in regard to which they would have no right to protest, if that simple method were adopted. There is no mystery about it. I have had to stow freight on the deck of a steamer. And later, when I acted as purser, I have measured and weighed it, and I know what I am talking about in this respect. I have bought thousands of cords of wood by measurement and have seen it shrink from 10 to 25 per cent in repiling. The proposition is not a hard one. There is, however, to my mind a more serious objection to this provision, and that is having to rest the price to be paid to the decision of a commission which is entirely aloof from and out of reach of the people. It is unfair to the Postmaster General to compel him to carry on the business of the Post Office Department under a limited appropriation, and at the same time put some one in authority over him to set the price he must pay for a large part of the service attached to his department. It is unjust to him and it ought not to be. They can make or break him at will. It makes him responsible for rates to be paid which he has no voice in fixing. It fixes a charge upon his department from which he can not escape, and that is not fair.

If the Postmaster General is a business man capable of carrying on the affairs of the Post Office Department—and if he is not he should not be appointed—he is capable enough and intelligent enough to employ people to ascertain the actual facts in relation to the charges to be made and paid for the conveyance of the mails throughout the country, and he ought to have the right of a voice in the matter. It is unfair to hold him responsible if you do not give him that liberty. We are treating him unjustly.

We are binding his hands and holding him responsible for the acts of others, and it is unfair, and nobody could hold the position under those circumstances for a quarter of a minute and retain his self-respect. No self-respecting man could afford to do it. He would merely tell the Government, "You have put before me unknown conditions which I may be able to fill or may not, and I refuse to be held responsible for the acts of a set of gentlemen whom the people never see and who never see the people, who sit in inclosed quarters out of reach and touch of the people who can not recall them or hold them responsible." No man who wishes a good name for himself and his family ought to be asked to accept such a position. It is unfair to him to bind him to the decision respecting freight rates to be paid by him by a set of gentlemen, if you please, who, to our personal knowledge, a short while ago allowed certain railroads in this country to fix and collect rates based upon millions upon millions of watered stock, washed off upon the people by a set of crooks, for which they had not expended one dollar to purchase so much as a tie or a steel rail, fixed upon the people at a rate by which they must pay a 5 per cent increased freight rate, fixed and legitimatized, if you please, by a set of gentlemen to whom are to be referred the rates which the same people and others are to pay for the transportation of the mails of this country. I seriously object to it. There is too much bureaucracy, too much autocratic power vested in bodies which are far removed from and out of reach of the people who have to pay the price.

A better plan, in my opinion, would be to refer it to them for their consideration for hearings and for findings and then have that information submitted to the Postmaster General and to Congress to render the decision which is to be final.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will pardon me, that was the original recommendation of the committee.

Mr. LANE. Yes; I favor that. This other amendment does not provide for that. The amendment goes on further and allows the commission to say whether or not certain postal routes may be established and where, if at all, and that is delegating the authority of Congress, the authority of the Senate, "the greatest deliberative body in the world"—they themselves acknowledge it—to a body that is entirely aloof from them and out of their reach and beyond the power of recall. I do not favor that type of Government.

We are having a little too much government by autocratic bureaus, if you please, where the laws of this body laid down in plain and simple language are buried, or rendered nugatory, or vetoed by some rule of some department or other which overrides the laws of Congress.

I would hesitate a long, long time before I would place the final decision in the hands of a body which had fastened unfair rates onto the little homes of the men and women who live on the hillside and are clearing out the brush and timber and digging out stumps and working for their families half fed and half clothed, earnestly working to build a home and to educate their children. I would prefer to leave the decision in the hands of Congress. It makes mistakes and makes them often, yet it and its acts can both be recalled.

You need not bother about which rate—weight or space—is adopted. In either case it can be adjusted so as to be entirely fair to both parties. I have felt myself almost in despair in regard to this amendment and other amendments which have been offered here to see the trend of this body in this respect and the helplessness of the people whose welfare is involved in the subject.

So easy of solution, so simple to refer it to that commission for their findings and advice, without empowering them to make a decision, however, that be binding and final. With hundreds and hundreds of men in every large city, where even the drayman and the truckman knows what his load weighs and its measurements, it will be no trouble to check it up without prejudice to anyone and settle it on its merits. That is what I should like to see done.

There is one provision in here which partly provides for that course, and if that one could be adopted you would have the right plan. You will never get it on a measurement or space or weight rate unless you go to the foundation of the subject. Everybody knows what a ton of iron weighs, but not everyone knows what it measures or how much space it occupies; but the solution is easy. A carload of mail bags can be piled so as to occupy twice as much space or half as much space, depending entirely on whether they are piled loosely or in a shipshape manner, such as a good stevedore would use if he wanted to save space.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I am sure now that all of us thoroughly understand this question. It seems to me that we ought to be permitted to vote upon this amendment. I wish to remind the Senate that to-morrow is virtually a holiday; that we can do no business to-morrow. That carries us over until Monday. In a little more than another week the fiscal year will have come to a close. While I have no disposition to limit reasonable debate that goes to the merits of this measure, I do believe the Senate ought to be willing now to vote on the amendment of the Senator from Florida, and I hope we may have a vote. To that end I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me to say just a word?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly; I withhold the demand for the present.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I sympathize with the Senator in his desire to have a vote not only on this amendment but on the bill. I think the Senator must feel very kindly toward those of us who have not consumed any time in this debate, which has seemed to some of us to be almost interminable.

Mr. President, I am not responsible, nor is this side of the Chamber responsible, for the legislation of the Senate, but I chance to be a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and my time has been given almost entirely to the consideration of appropriation bills. I want to say to my Democratic friends that in the 25 years I have been here I do not recall any instance when the appropriation bills were in as bad a shape at this date in the session as they are at the present time. Some of those bills will fail so far as being approved by the end of the fiscal year is concerned; there is no question about it. I sincerely hope that at least the great appropriation bill for the conduct of the Post Office Department will not be in that number. The Senator has managed it with consummate kindliness and generosity to all the Senators who wished to speak, and I think we all ought now cooperate with the Senator to get a vote not only upon the pending amendment but on the bill itself as speedily as possible.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I thank the Senator very much for his suggestions. They are certainly timely and go to the very marrow of the situation. I now renew my suggestion of the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Gronna	Lippitt	Sheppard
Brady	Harding	McLean	Sherman
Brandegee	Hardwick	Martin, Va.	Smoot
Broussard	Hitchcock	Martine, N. J.	Sterling
Bryan	Hollis	Newlands	Taggart
Clark, Wyo.	Husting	Norris	Thomas
Culberson	James	Oliver	Townsend
Cummins	Johnson, Me.	Overman	Underwood
Curtis	Johnson, S. Dak.	Page	Vardaman
Dillingham	Jones	Pittman	Walsh
Fletcher	La Follette	Poindexter	Weeks
Gallinger	Lane	Pomerene
Gore	Lea, Tenn.	Ransdell

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty Senators have answered the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. BRYAN. I ask for the yeas and nays on agreeing to my amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. JONES. Let the amendment be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 54 it is proposed to strike out all of lines 6 to 26, both inclusive, as the committee proposes to do, and in lieu thereof to insert:

The Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby directed to hold hearings and to make a thorough investigation of the justness and reasonableness of the rates of railway mail pay fixed under this section, and if it finds that they are not just and reasonable for the service performed for the Government by the railroad mail carriers it shall make findings of what rates are just and reasonable and shall certify such findings to the Postmaster General, who shall adopt such rates, and, where greater or less than the rates fixed under this section, shall readjust the compensation of the carriers in accordance therewith. No change shall be made in the rates fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission except by the commission after investigation, which shall be made only upon application of the Postmaster General or the representatives of railroads with an aggregate mileage of at least 25 per cent of the mileage of the railroads carrying mails.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. In the absence of that Senator, I withhold my vote.

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). I have a pair for the week with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LODGE (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], who is absent. I have, however, authority from him to vote on this question, so I shall let my vote stand.

Mr. ASHURST. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Arizona] is absent from the Senate because of illness in his family.

Mr. HOLLIS. I have a pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], but I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] and vote "yea."

Mr. OLIVER (after having voted in the affirmative). I have ascertained that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] has not voted. I have a pair with that Senator, and I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. GALLINGER (after having voted in the negative). I have voted, but I feel constrained to announce that I have a tentative pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN]. While I very likely would be at full liberty to vote, I feel it safer to transfer that pair to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], and let my vote stand.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. In the absence of the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], with whom I have a pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SIMMONS (after having voted in the negative). I wish to inquire whether the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] has voted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. SIMMONS. I transfer my pair with that Senator to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN], and will let my vote stand.

Mr. BECKHAM. I transfer the pair I have with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] to the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN], and vote "yea."

Mr. HARDWICK. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Georgia]. This announcement may stand for the day. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], with whom my colleague is paired, was especially authorized to vote on the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN].

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I am requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY];

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN];

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]; and

The Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE].

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 34, as follows:

YEAS—25.

Ashurst	Hitchcock	Lee, Md.	Thomas
Beckham	Hollis	Norris	Thompson
Bryan	Husting	Page	Walsh
Cummins	James	Pittman	Williams
Fletcher	Johnson, S. Dak.	Pomerene
Gore	La Follette	Sheppard
Harding	Lea, Tenn.	Smoot

NAYS—34.

Bankhead	Hardwick	Newlands	Smith, Ga.
Borah	Johnson, Me.	Overman	Smith, Md.
Brady	Lane	Poindexter	Smith, Mich.
Brandegee	Lewis	Ransdell	Smith, S. C.
Broussard	Lippitt	Shafroth	Stone
Culberson	Lodge	Sherman	Sutherland
Curtis	McLean	Shields	Swanson
Gallinger	Martin, Va.	Simmons	Tillman
Gronna	Myers	Sterling	Wadsworth

NOT VOTING—36.

Catron	Fall	O'Gorman	Taggart
Chamberlain	Goff	Oliver	Townsend
Chilton	Hughes	Owen	Underwood
Clapp	Jones	Penrose	Vardaman
Clark, Wyo.	Kenyon	Phelan	Warren
Clarke, Ark.	Kern	Reed	Weeks
Colt	McCumber	Robinson	Works
Dillingham	Martine, N. J.	Saulsbury
du Pont	Nelson	Smith, Ariz.

So Mr. BRYAN's amendment was rejected.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, in view of the discussion this morning concerning the proper interpretation of the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] I desire to modify the amendment which I have offered, and which I understand is now the pending question. It has been doubted whether the amendment just voted upon adopted the space basis; whether the Interstate Commerce Commission in the consideration of the question would be bound by that plan in fixing the rate of compensation. It has been my purpose in the amendment that I have offered to leave the whole question to the Interstate Commerce Commission. I want it to be free to adopt or to proceed upon either the space plan or the weight plan, or upon both, according to its judgment of the most accurate and effective way of reaching the final result. I therefore ask that my amendment be modified by inserting after the word "therewith," in line 2, on page 2, the language which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The modification of the amendment suggested by the Senator from Iowa will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 2, after the word "therewith," it is proposed to insert the following:

Prescribing the method or methods by weight or space, or both, or otherwise, for ascertaining such rate or compensation.

Mr. CUMMINS. I also ask that immediately before the word "the," in line 16, page 3, there be inserted the words "for the purposes of this act." I do not think they are strictly necessary, but I believe the amendment will be a little clearer with those words in it. The beginning of the paragraph would then read:

For the purposes of this act the Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby vested with all the powers which it is now authorized by law to exercise in the investigation and ascertainment of the justice and reasonableness of freight, passenger, and express rates to be paid by private shippers.

I also ask that lines 1, 2, and 3, on page 4, be stricken out. They become unnecessary in view of the fact that an amendment has been adopted to my amendment limiting its application to railways. With those suggestions——

Mr. HARDWICK. I hope the Senator will yield to me. I have a couple of amendments to his amendment to suggest that I think will be acceptable.

Mr. CUMMINS. Just a moment. With those suggestions, I am quite ready to have a vote upon my amendment with just this word. I will not prolong the debate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Iowa a question for information. I want to see if I understand the situation. The only difference, then, between the bill as reported by the Senate committee and the amendment of the Senator from Iowa is that the committee propose to leave the Interstate Commerce Commission to inquire and make a report to Congress, whereas the Senator from Iowa proposes to leave the Interstate Commerce Commission to determine the rates.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is the whole difference. I desire to point out the difference between the amendment which I have proposed to the committee amendment and the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] to the House bill. I voted for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida because, if the House plan is to prevail—which I hope it will not—but if it is to prevail finally I believe that the amendment of the Senator from Florida will better the bill. Therefore I voted for it.

The difference between the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida and my amendment is practically that there was committed by his amendment to the Interstate Commerce Commission simply the rates which should be paid for the space occupied by the Government in the transmission of mail. One of the great, vital questions of dispute, one that must be settled by somebody, is whether the space plan or the weight plan or a combination of both shall be used in order to ascertain the proper compensation. I have proceeded upon the theory that the question I have just named ought to be answered by the Interstate Commerce Commission. I do not believe it can deal intelligently and adequately with the problem unless it has the authority to adopt the space theory, if it likes to and if it thinks best, or the weight theory, if it thinks proper, or a combination of the two.

I have already said that in my opinion there can be no just and final and reasonable solution of the question without adopting both the weight and the space plans for the ascertainment of compensation. I now yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I want to suggest two short amendments, which I hope the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] will accept. First, on page 3 of his amendment, I propose to strike out from line 21 to line 24, inclusive, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

The Interstate Commerce Commission shall allow to railroad companies whose railroads were constructed in whole or in part by a land grant made by Congress on condition that the mails should be transported over their roads at such price as Congress should by law direct only 80 per cent of the compensation paid other railroads for transporting the mails and all service by the railroads in connection therewith.

That is the substance, if not the exact language, of the existing statute. If the Senator will pardon me, the reason why I offer the amendment is that I am afraid if this provision were left in the bill as the Senator has drawn it the Interstate Commerce Commission could not undertake, or would not undertake, to determine those rates until they could complete the valuation of all railroad properties, and that might delay the matter indefinitely.

Mr. SHAFROTH. May I ask the Senator from Georgia a question, Mr. President?

Mr. HARDWICK. The Seantor may do so, with the permission of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], who has the floor.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Why does the Senator from Georgia fix the compensation at 80 per cent?

Mr. HARDWICK. Because that is the amount now fixed by law, and it has been so for many years.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That has been the compensation which the railroads have been paid in the past?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes, sir. That is the law; and, by the way, it was upheld by the Supreme Court of the United States in One hundred and forty-seventh United States Reports. The court said these contracts authorized that to be done.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I have great doubt about the proposal made by the Senator from Georgia, and I accept it simply because I believe that the criterion which he proposes would probably give to the Government a lower rate than the plan which I have suggested.

The part of my amendment which the Senator from Georgia seeks to strike out is this, that in the ascertainment of the value of the property which renders the service the donations or grants which have been made by the public to the railroad companies shall not be considered. I think that is just and fair and right; but I have no idea that the plan I have suggested, which seemed to me to be the more logical one, would result in as great deduction as the amendment suggested by the Senator from Georgia. Inasmuch, however, as we are all anxious to have a vote, I am willing to accept that amendment.

Mr. HARDWICK. I understand the Senator accepts that modification. Just one other suggestion. On page 4, line 4, I suggest that there be inserted, after the word "pay," in the Senator's amendment, the words "except as herein modified."

Mr. CUMMINS. That simply accommodates——

Mr. HARDWICK. It makes it plainer.

Mr. CUMMINS. It simply accommodates the amendment to the alteration which I have just accepted.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes, sir.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have no objection to that.

Mr. President, upon the amendment as modified I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat, I should like to ask him a question. I think I was under some misapprehension with regard to his amendment. I was mistaken in the part of the Senate committee amendment it struck out. I announced that I was favorable to it, and that I expected to vote for it, but I notice now, in reading the heading of the amendment as it is printed, that it does not strike out any of the committee amendment on page 55. Is that true?

Mr. CUMMINS. My amendment begins with line 1, on page 56.

Mr. NORRIS. I was under the impression that it commenced on line 6, page 55, and was a real substitute for the whole Senate committee amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS. I did not include that in my amendment because it relates to a different subject. I am opposed to that part of the committee amendment on page 55, and if any Senator moves to strike it out, I shall vote for the motion.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator had included it in his amendment, it would be stricken out if his amendment should be adopted.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is not properly part of my amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. Why not?

Mr. CUMMINS. Because it does not relate to the same subject.

Mr. NORRIS. But if the Senator's amendment is agreed to and enacted into law, I want to ask if the result will not be that the Interstate Commerce Commission will begin an investigation not only of rates but as to the space and the weighing systems, and from that investigation it will approve one or the other or both in modified form, and thereafter that procedure will be followed? Is that right?

Mr. CUMMINS. I assume that whatever rule or plan fixing compensation is adopted by the commission will be followed, because that is the intent of the amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. That is the way I read it. The point I want to make is that the portion of the committee amendment on page 55 not being stricken out, it will still leave in the amendment the provision that the present system shall continue and that the weighing of the mails shall be undertaken once every year instead of once every four years. If the Senator is going to provide by his amendment for an investigation by the Interstate Commerce Commission to ascertain which method is proper, it seems to me he ought to strike out of the committee amendment which he seeks to amend the provision for the weighing of the mails every year; in other words, his amendment permits a continuation of the system, although the Senator says he wants to leave to the Interstate Commerce Commission the determination of the question whether or not it shall be continued.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think the Senator from Nebraska has probably overlooked the last four lines of my amendment. Whether the words on page 55, if adopted, would be a part of the existing law, I am not sure; but, in any event, the existing law with regard to the ascertainment of railway mail pay continues only until the Interstate Commerce Commission acts.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me ask the Senator, that being true—and I understand that to be the effect of the amendment—why should we, then, in the very amendment by which we are going to submit this question to the Interstate Commerce Commission undertake to amend the law, as does that portion of the committee amendment which the Senator's amendment does not propose to strike out?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not think we should continue it, but I have not attempted to correct every defect in the committee amendment. I have just said that it is open to any Member of the Senate to move to strike out those words on page 55, and if such a motion is made I shall vote for it.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; but the Senator must recognize that the parliamentary situation is such that no amendment offered to his amendment will be in order, because it would be in the third degree, and if we wait until his amendment is voted on, it may be too late. It seems to me that the Senator's position is not a logical one, if I may be permitted to go that far. If I knew, for instance, that that part of the committee amendment would be stricken out, together with the part which the Senator does seek to strike out, I would not hesitate to vote for his amendment.

I think it would be a great improvement; but it does not seem to me that it is logical for us in one part of the committee amendment, which will remain if the Senator's amendment is adopted, to provide for an amendment of the existing law so that the weighing shall take place every year instead of every four years and then give to the Interstate Commerce Commission the right to do away with it all. If we are going to let the existing law stand until that is done, I would not have any objection to that; but I can not understand why the Senator would want to omit from his amendment the striking out of that part of the Senate committee amendment which, to my mind, is very objectionable.

Mr. CUMMINS. I will explain it very fully to the Senator from Nebraska. In the first place, in my opinion the last four lines of my amendment relate to the law that is in existence at the time this bill is passed, and that the Senate committee amendment, found on page 55, would be wholly inoperative; but, if I am wrong with respect to that, and the annual weighing provided for on page 55 should be introduced, it can be continued only so long as the proceeding is pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission, and that plan ends the moment the Interstate Commerce Commission acts.

I assume that in a very brief period—a year or something like that—we will have the decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and, therefore, it does not become very material what weighings are had in that time. These are the things which minimize or reduce the effect of this matter. But I now tell the Senator from Nebraska in perfect candor that I want the question referred to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and I want to confine my proposition within the narrowest possible limits, so as to provoke the least possible objection. I want my amendment to pass, and I do not want to arouse objection to it which, it seems to me, is not relevant or material. If the Senator from Nebraska, the moment my amendment is voted upon, whether it prevails or not, desires that part of the amendment stricken out, he can move to do so, and his motion will be in order. Then we can have a vote of the Senate upon that proposition without impairing the probability of the success of the amendment which I have proposed.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, when the Senator says that I can make a motion to strike out the portion of the committee amendment on page 55, he knows that that motion would come after the adoption or rejection of the Senator's amendment. If the Senator's amendment is agreed to and such a motion as the Senator suggests I can make should then prevail, the result I desire would be accomplished; but if the Senator's amendment should be agreed to and then the amendment he suggests I should propose should be defeated, according to my way of looking at it the provision would be left in a worse condition than it was before.

I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that, as he says, it may be held that the portion of the committee amendment on page 55 is existing law and that it will be in force. Suppose the Interstate Commerce Commission decides, upon investigation, that the weighing system is proper, then the existing law, with this objectionable language in it, will provide that the mail must be weighed every year. That would be what we would have if the commission should reach that decision. If this language should be stricken out, and it was held that the existing law providing for a weighing every four years prevailed—and it could not be held otherwise—there would be that much expense at least saved.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. WEEKS. I should like to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the existing law does not require a weighing every four years, but not less frequently than once in four years; in other words, the Postmaster General may have the mail weighed now every two years or every year under the provisions of the existing law.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; and he does not do so for one reason only, as I understand, and that is the matter of economy. We can weigh the mails often enough so that the expense of weighing the mails and keeping track of this system of paying for carrying them will cost more than the carrying of the mails themselves.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Is that the reason the Senator objects to this amendment?

Mr. NORRIS. That is one objection to it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The amendment provides that the expense shall be borne by the railroads.

Mr. NORRIS. I apprehend the Senator was not present when I addressed the Senate a little while ago. I may be wrong, but my theory is that it does not make a particle of difference whether the weighing is paid for by the railroads or by the Government; the people eventually have to pay the bill anyway. If the railroads pay it, it is one of their legitimate expenses, which very properly can be charged up, and they will either get enough in excess from the Government for carrying the mails or they will charge enough to make up that expense in passenger and freight rates.

I am thoroughly of the belief that we ought to have the space system. Whether or not the Senator's amendment prevails, I expect to vote for the House provision; but, laboring under the impression that the amendment of the Senator from Iowa struck out all of the committee amendment, I had intended to vote for his amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, may we have the amendment stated as modified?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment as modified.

The Secretary read as follows:

All railway common carriers are hereby required to transport such mail matter as may be offered for transportation by the United States in the manner, under the conditions, and with the service prescribed by the Postmaster General and shall be entitled to receive fair and reasonable compensation for such transportation and for the service connected therewith.

The Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby empowered and directed to fix and determine from time to time the fair and reasonable rates and compensation for the transportation of such mail matter by railway common carriers and the service connected therewith, prescribing the method or methods by weight or space or both or otherwise for ascertaining such rate or compensation, and to publish the same, and orders so made and published shall continue in force until changed by the commission after due notice and hearing.

The procedure for the ascertainment of said rates and compensation shall be as follows:

Within three months from the passage of this act the Postmaster General shall file with the commission a statement showing the transportation required of all railway common carriers, including the number, equipment, size, and construction of the cars necessary for the transaction of the business; the character and speed of the trains which are to carry the various kinds of mail; the service, both terminal and en route, which the carriers are to render; and all other information which may be material to the inquiry. The commission may require the statement of any facts which it deems relevant to the investigation. The Postmaster General shall also state what he believes to be the reasonable rate or compensation the several carriers should receive. Thereupon the commission shall give notice of not less than 30 days to each carrier so required to transport mail and render service, and upon a day to be fixed by the commission each of said carriers shall make answer and the commission shall proceed with the hearing as now provided by law for other hearings between carriers and shippers or associations.

All the provisions of the law for taking testimony, securing evidence, penalties, and procedure are hereby made applicable.

At the conclusion of the hearing the commission shall establish by order a fair reasonable rate or compensation to be received at such stated times as may be named in the order, for the transportation of mail matter and the service connected therewith, and during the continuance of the order the Postmaster General shall pay the carrier from the appropriation herein made such rate or compensation.

Either the Postmaster General or any such carrier may at any time after the lapse of six months from the entry of the order assailed apply for a reexamination, and thereupon substantially similar proceedings shall be had.

For the purposes of this act the Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby vested with all the powers which it is now authorized by law to exercise in the investigation and ascertainment of the justness and reasonableness of freight, passenger, and express rates to be paid by private shippers.

The Interstate Commerce Commission shall allow to railroad companies whose railroads were constructed in whole or in part by a land grant made by Congress on condition that the mails should be transported over their roads at such price as Congress should by law direct only 80 per cent of the compensation paid other railroads for transporting the mails and all service by the railroads in connection therewith.

The existing law for the determination of mail pay, except as herein modified, shall continue in effect until the Interstate Commerce Commission under the provisions hereof fixes the fair, reasonable rate or compensation for such transportation and service.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it is not an important matter; but I observe that as the Secretary read the amendment it provides that certain things shall be done "within three months after the passage of this act." I suggest to the Senator from Iowa that "the approval of this act" would be better.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is quite satisfactory to me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That modification will be made.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa if he would have any objection to fixing a date on or before which the commission would conclude the hearings and make the order provided for in this amendment? These hearings and investigations have a tendency to drag their slow length along for a good many years. This is a matter, on account of the Government's interest, that ought to be concluded without delay.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I do not believe we could say to the Interstate Commerce Commission that it must enter its order on or before a particular time.

Mr. GORE. I would suggest that ample time be allowed. It would be in the nature of giving this hearing or investigation precedence over others. For my own part, I should like to see the commission directed to report before the 1st day of next February, so that we could review their order before the passage of the next bill, and certainly before the next fiscal year begins.

Mr. CUMMINS. I very much hope that it will be done before that time, but I have never favored a mandatory suggestion of that sort. I think the Interstate Commerce Commission must do its work in this respect having due regard for all its labor and all its duties. I can not conceive that it will postpone it a single day beyond the time necessary for the investigation.

Mr. GORE. I will say that my idea was that they might permit it to take its regular course, after matters that have been filed before this.

Mr. CUMMINS. I would be perfectly willing, if the Senator from Oklahoma desired to offer an amendment saying that it should be given the preference——

Mr. GORE. That will virtually accomplish what I had in mind. I should be glad if the Senator would accept an amendment of that sort.

Mr. CUMMINS. Does the Senator from Oklahoma offer an amendment?

Mr. GORE. I shall be glad to do so. I should like to have the Senator from Iowa suggest where the amendment should be inserted. I have not the matter sufficiently in mind to determine the point. Would it answer to insert, at the conclusion of this amendment—

That the hearing herein provided for shall be given precedence over other matters pending before the commission.

Something of that sort is what I have in mind.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have not any objection to that, but I do not feel well enough assured of its wisdom to offer the amendment myself.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

Mr. GORE. I am not sure that I would be in order in offering the amendment myself. The Senator could accept it. As the yeas and nays have been ordered, I am not sure that I could offer it now.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I want to ask the Senator from Oklahoma if he would not be satisfied to put in there the words "at the earliest practicable time"?

Mr. GORE. Oh, I think that would substantially accomplish the purpose; yes, sir. I do not want this hearing to have to take the regular course and abide its time, giving ordinary hearings about claims and other incidental matters precedence over this. I think the public interest in this matter ought to entitle it to precedence, but I think the suggestion of the Senator would undoubtedly have weight with the commission.

Mr. HARDWICK. I think it would comply with the Senator's suggestion if there were inserted, right after the word "directed," in line 8, page 1, if the Senator from Iowa will accept the modification, the words "as soon as possible," so as to read:

The Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby required and directed, as soon as possible——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, that same suggestion occurred to me; but upon reading further I observed that the very same line contemplates a continuing proceeding and a number of repeated hearings. They may from time to time do it, and I do not think it would exactly be applicable as the Senator has stated it.

Mr. GORE. I do not think it would be so essential in regard to the subsequent hearings, because we would be operating under the order of the commission; but I think the Senate hearing ought not to be allowed to drift along as the express investigation did.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am quite willing to accept the suggestion of this amendment, "as soon as practicable"——

Mr. GORE. I think that will accomplish the purpose.

Mr. CUMMINS. To be inserted after the word "directed," on line 8, page 1.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 8, after the word "directed," it is proposed to insert "as soon as practicable."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa accepts the modification. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the amendment. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BECKHAM (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the former vote of the transfer of my pair, I vote "yea."

Mr. HOLLIS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] to the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). I have a pair for the week with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], and therefore withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. OLIVER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], but I am at liberty to vote on this amendment. I vote "yea."

Mr. ASHURST (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Arizona was called). My colleague [Mr. SMITH of Arizona] is detained from the Senate by reason of illness in his family.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). Announcing the same pair as heretofore and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Repeating the announcement made upon the last roll call as to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND]. I understand that if he were present he would vote as I intend to vote. I therefore vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] to the junior Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. JONES. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] to the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I desire to announce a pair existing between the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] and the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER]. I am further requested to announce a pair existing between the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] and the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL].

Mr CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY]; and

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN].

The result was announced—yeas, 50, nays, 15—as follows:

YEAS—50.

So Mr. CUMMINS's amendment to the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate now to one or two provisions of the amendment as amended. Part of the amendment now consists of what the committee reported, and part consists of the amendment just adopted, offered by the Senator from Iowa.

In the amendment as thus amended there is this provision about the annual weighing of mails:

Provided, That such annual weighing shall only be had in those cases in which railroad companies carrying the mails shall perform the work of weighing the mails under the supervision and direction of the Postmaster General and without expense to the Government: Provided further, That in case any contractor for a railway mail route shall refuse or fail to perform the work of weighing without expense to the Government, then the mails on such route shall be weighed quadrennially in the manner above provided.

In the first place, Mr. President, at least as I look at it, it makes no difference in the end, as an economic proposition, whether the railroad pays the expense of weighing or whether the Government pays it. The people have to pay it in the end. It will cost a lot of money to weigh the mails and, whoever does it, it will constitute a legitimate and a legal expense that will naturally and properly be chargeable against either the railroads or the Government. The railroads, of course, if they pay it, will have to get enough pay out of the Government in order to make a reasonable compensation for their work. So, economically speaking, it is a dead loss to the people of the country every time they must put up the expense of weighing the mails. Now, what will happen? It is provided that there shall be a weighing every year if the railroads put up the money. If they do not put it up, then there shall be a weighing once every four years.

Now, I want to submit, and I submit it without any criticism—it will be the proper business policy for a railroad to take that course—that in a case where the mails have decreased—and the railroads could have a good deal to do with the decreasing and diverting of the mail from one route to another by taking off trains or something of that kind, making it necessary, for the proper handling of the mails, for the Post Office Department to dispatch the mails by some other route—when that occurred, and the mails were very materially reduced over any route, the railroad company would have the right to have the mails weighed on the line to which they had been diverted, where they had been increased, or on the other line, for that matter. They would have the right to have them reweighed every year on every line if they wanted to, but they would have them weighed on the line where there was an increase, and get pay on that basis; but where there was a decrease, and they were getting paid for a larger amount of mail than they were actually carrying, of course they would not have any weighing. We could not expect them to do so.

It seems to me that if this provision were enacted into law, that result would happen; and one or more lines of railroad owned by the same company or controlled by the same interests could bring it about, if they desired to do so, by a change of schedule of their passenger trains. The Post Office Department would divert the mails to put them on the line where they could carry them the most expeditiously, and then, when they were transferred, the railroad company getting the mails and getting the increased amount of business would have them weighed. There would be nothing wrong that far; but the other railway company that did not carry them afterwards, and was getting paid on the basis of the time that it did carry them, of course would not have them weighed.

The result would be, it seems to me, an extravagant proposition for the Government, always. It would be paying for the carrying of the mails twice in many instances—once where they had first been weighed by the Government, and subsequently after they had been diverted and weighed again upon the application of the railroad companies.

It seems to me, therefore, that this amendment, as now amended, containing this kind of a provision, ought to be defeated, and the provision of the bill as passed by the House, providing for a space system of weighing, ought to prevail.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I recognize that it is very easy to criticize any measure, if one desires to do so; and the arguments of the Senator from Nebraska indicate, to my mind at least, that he is searching for some objection.

This provision for annual weighing was put into the bill largely at the suggestion of representatives of the railroads, because of the complaint they had that the quadrennial weighing did not deal justly with them; that the mails were constantly increasing, and that this had been especially so since the parcel post was established. They thought, and the Postmaster General agreed with them, that compensation based upon quadrennial weighing of the mails, increasing rapidly as they had been during the last few years, was not as just as would be that based on annual weights.

The committee did not feel, however, inasmuch as this was a matter largely to accommodate the railroads, that the Government ought to be put to the expense of paying the bills. The Senator from Nebraska says it makes no difference to the people in the end whether the railroads pay for the weighing or whether the Government pays for it. That has not been the common understanding in reference to this and other similar matters. The railroads have objected in all instances to regulations being placed upon them, because of the expense. They have felt that they could not get from their patrons the whole expense imposed upon them by legislation.

This provision was put in the bill, as I say, for the purpose of trying to deal equitably with the railroads in reference to the mails, and was not objected to by the department; indeed, it asked the Congress to pay extra railroad compensation for the parcel-post increase of mails. It is clear that if we want to be just, and if we are paying the railroads for the weight of mails carried, we ought to know what the weight is.

It should make no difference in our legislation whether we are dealing with a railroad or with a citizen of the Government; it is entitled to justice. Now, maybe we are paying the carriers too much. Annual weights will determine whether that is so or not. Maybe we are not paying them enough, as they contend we are not, under the weight system now in existence. Annual weights will more nearly determine that question.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. I concede the Senator's good faith. I want to suggest to him, however, that when he suggests that I am looking for something to find fault with, he is going a good way in questioning my motive in objecting to this. Now, I want to ask him a question.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Very well.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator suppose that if this provision becomes a law a railroad company will ever ask for an annual weighing unless there is an increase in the mail that is carried?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I suppose not.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator believe, then, that if they should have a reweighing in that case—and I concede they should—the same rule should not apply to the Government, and that if there is a decrease, and they are getting paid for something they do not carry, that the Government ought not to have the right to get a reweighing also?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I can not imagine a case where there would be a decrease. Now, the Senator has suggested that the railroads can materially divert the mails. I do not believe that can be done. No weighing can be had without the consent and approval of the Postmaster General and under his direction. This amendment provides exactly how it shall be done.

Mr. NORRIS. The Postmaster General can not control the trains that a railroad company will run.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Oh, but the Postmaster General can control the routes. He can control the trains upon which the mails shall be carried.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me ask the Senator a further question.

Mr. TOWNSEND. All right.

Mr. NORRIS. The New York Central and the Nickel Plate—of course, I am not assuming that they would do this—are both owned by the same company, and run from Chicago to New York City. Suppose that there was a mail train on the Nickel Plate road running between Chicago and New York carrying a large amount of mail, and it was a fast train; and then, after the mail was weighed on the New York Central, which runs parallel to the Nickel Plate and belongs to the same company, and the compensation agreed on in the case of that road and the other road, too, was fair, and everything done right, suppose that the Nickel Plate company should take off its fast train or make a local train of it, and instead of going from Chicago to New York City in 24 or 30 hours, it should take three days to get there, would not the Postmaster General have the mail that was being carried on that train diverted to the New York Central train? When that was done, the New York Central could immediately ask for a reweighing on that line; and the Government would have no right and no authority of law to give a reweighing on the other road, from which the mail was diverted.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, of course the Senator could imagine that the moon was made of green cheese. He can imagine a proposition here that could not and would not exist under any circumstances. A proposition such as he suggests is unthinkable to me. The railroads are not going to manipulate things in that way. The weighing can not be had whenever the railroads demand it, but can occur only once a year and under direction of the Postmaster General. This is only a temporary provision which the committee proposed for the purpose of tiding over a condition between now and the time when the Interstate Commerce Commission should have made its investigation and reported to Congress. All agreed that it was right. There was not a dissenting voice, even from the department, against the proposition. It was believed to be equitable, fair, and just to both the Government and the carrier. The only objection to it at all was the cost. The committee thought the Government ought not to be put to the expense.

I have replied to the Senator's argument by saying that the extra cost of annual weighing would not come out of the people. The great expense now to the Government in weighing the mail is in the employment of weighers. The railroads have already men in their employ who can, under the direction of a Government employee, weigh the mails. The expense, therefore, will not be great to the carriers; it will be practically nothing to the Government. Now I yield again to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. Does not the Senator think that the Government ought to have the same right to reweigh every year that the railroad companies are given?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Certainly, if it wants that right. I have no objection to that at all.

Mr. NORRIS. But that is not in the law. The Government has no authority under this bill to do such a thing.

Mr. TOWNSEND. No; and the occasion will probably never arise for it.

Mr. NORRIS. But the Senator knows because the railroad wants an opportunity to weigh it is given. He wants to give them the opportunity when the mail is increased.

Now, I want to ask another question. Does not the Senator know of his own personal knowledge, of his own experience, of many instances where the mails have been diverted on account of a change in the schedule of trains where it has practically all been diverted from one route to another?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I know that.

Mr. NORRIS. That is what I claim, and this will enable the railroad companies to do that. The Senator answers by saying it is imagination, that it might be similar to imagining that the moon is made of green cheese.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The unthinkable part of it, though, is that that would be done for the purpose of increasing weight at weighing seasons. An emergency case might arise when the mails would be diverted from a single line, but what was added to one line must be taken from another. The average would remain the same. The Postmaster General could prevent such attempts to defraud the Government, even if the railroads were foolish enough to make them.

Now, if the Senator thinks that the mails are going to grow less with our enlarged and increasing postal system, let me tell him he is mistaken. The mails are going to grow greater every year. If he can imagine a case when the mails will be less next year than they were this his apprehensions can be overcome by inserting a provision that the Government can weigh every year if it wants to do so.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the Senator from Nebraska think that any number of railroads can divert the mails from one road to the other at their own free will without the order of the Postmaster General giving permission to make the diversion?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have stated that they could not. I answered the Senator that the railroads could not make a permanent diversion of the mails, because they are under practical contract with the Government to carry over certain routes, which can not be changed at the will of the railroads.

Mr. NORRIS. Not only can they do it, but they have done it to my personal knowledge. There is no green cheese in that. It can not be answered by saying that I am a dreamer or that I am imagining something. I have had a talk with Post Office Department men. I can point the Senator to the record and demonstrate it to him. Although I may have an imaginative mind, there is something that has been done, and the Post Office Department said, and I think properly, that they had no control over the trains that could be operated on railroads.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Senator's experience has been quite different from my own. My attention was called to several cases, when I was in the House of Representatives, where an attempt had been made to divert the mail and discontinue service, and the Second Assistant Postmaster General prevented it. He ordered that it should not be done, and it was not done.

But I repeat, if the Senator can imagine that there will come a time when the railroads would not want an annual weighing on account of decreased mail, and he desires to insert in the bill a provision that the Government can take annual weighings whenever it desires so to do, I certainly would have no objection to his doing it.

I did feel that if annual weighings were had the railroads ought to pay the expense of them. Nobody before the committee raised the objection that the Government or anybody else could suffer from such a provision. Therefore it seemed to me that what we propose is entirely proper, but I think it is really of little importance now that the Cummins amendment has been adopted, whether the mails are weighed annually or quadrennially. There probably can be but one weighing, anyway.

I simply rose, however, for the purpose of replying to what I felt was an indefensible objection, something that was not founded in fact.

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President, I do not understand that there is an amendment to the amendment pending. If not, I will move to amend by striking out lines 6 to 24, inclusive, on page 55. That is the part that is objected to by the Senator from Nebraska.

I have already spoken upon this part of the bill. I do not propose to go into it at length again except that I want to recapitulate the point I tried to make a little while ago.

This matter now has been referred to the Interstate Commerce Commission. It is proposed by the Senate to be taken out of the hands of Congress and taken out of the hands of the Postmaster General and put in the hands of the Interstate Commerce Commission upon the ground that they are better able to judge of the fairness or unfairness of the compensation now received by the railroads. But in doing so and so declaring they have amended the present method of compensation, and it is inconsistent with the general policy that is now adopted to leave this paragraph in the bill. In other words, the bill as now framed does not propose to leave the method as it now is. It proposes to amend it by providing for annual weighing. When you put that in the bill you might just as well put in there the provision that we hereby appropriate between three and five million dollars annually over and above what the railroads are now receiving. If we do that we say we do not know whether they receive a fair compensation or not.

You are legislating into this bill something that is going to cost the Government between three and five million dollars, according to the figures I have just given from the Post Office Department, and you are going to pay the railroads between three and five million dollars more annually than they are now receiving, and you are doing that in the same bill where you say the Senate does not know whether they are receiving fair pay or not, and the Postmaster General does not know, and that we are going to leave the whole matter to the Interstate Commerce Commission. Yet you are not leaving it to the commission. You do not leave the contract as it is. You amend the contract by adding between three and five million dollars more a year to the compensation of the railroads than they are now getting.

I say either one theory or the other is correct; and, if that matter is going to be left to the Interstate Commerce Commission, why not leave it all to them for them to say whether it shall be decreased or increased, whether we shall proceed along the lines of a quadrennial weighing or whether we shall proceed upon the space basis? I say it is inconsistent with the spirit of the amendment adopted.

As far as the diversion of mail is concerned, I have heard the remarks of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] and the remarks of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. I think perhaps each from his own point of view is correct, and that perhaps no mail train can be taken off or a line of mail substituted without some acquiescence on the part of the Postmaster General, but here is where the diversion of the mail occurs. No one, I think, will claim that the fast trains of any line can not reduce their time an hour or two or that another line can not increase their time an hour or two; and the moment you do that you are diverting a certain line of mail between certain points, and will gain an additional hour or two by reason of the change. So the Postmaster General will be compelled to instruct his postal clerks to throw that mail over to such a train as will go an hour or two faster than another train. Take thousands and thousands, yes, hundreds of thousands, of pieces of mail, and you have an absolute diversion of a certain line of mail leaving certain points at a certain time and consequently there is such a diversion, and, as the Senator from Nebraska says, this matter has occurred over and over again.

I make that statement not only on my own responsibility but on the responsibility of the head of the department, who says that not infrequently the train time is increased or decreased between certain points. The railroads increase or decrease the time at will or as expediency demands. So it not infrequently occurs that railroads which during a time are running on fast schedule during weighing time, some time within the next four years change their time in such a way that they are not carrying the mail that they did before, diverting it to some other source, or they are carrying more obtained from some other source.

The idea is just this. We need not close our eyes to it. I said before, and I say again, when the mails are weighed at the end of each quadrennial period the rate per ton-mile or per 100 pounds per mile is made with reference to the natural and probable increase of those four years. That is the reason why they are getting so much per 100 pounds per mile. It is because of the expected increase in the mail during the next four years.

The Senator says on account of the parcel post there has been an unusual increase in the mail. That is true no doubt, but that has existed for four years, and the probable increase is already in mind and was at the last weighing.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will pardon me, will he yield for an interruption?

Mr. HUSTING. Certainly.

Mr. HARDWICK. I think the Senator is mistaken. The committee was informed that there had been no weighing since the inception of the parcel post, and the two sections of the bill which we put in were put in at the request of the department, because they had to compensate the railroads in some way for that service.

Mr. HUSTING. The Senator certainly must be mistaken when he makes the broad statement that there has been no weighing. There is a weighing every year, and in four years every section has been reweighed since the institution of the parcel post, and that went into effect before the present administration.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator will let me modify the statement. On the bulk of the railroads there has been no weighing.

Mr. HUSTING. Again I say that on every quarter there is an annual weighing in some part of the United States. Now, I do not know just when the parcel post went into effect. It certainly went into effect before the present administration. Can the Senator enlighten me? If my recollection is correct, it went into effect during the Taft administration. There has been weighing every year since that time in a different quarter section of the United States, and if there have been four weighings there has been a complete reweighing on every railroad in the United States, because in four years they cover the entire field. I do not think anyone will deny that, and I think the records of the department will show it.

Mr. HARDWICK. I will not interrupt the Senator, of course, unless he is willing.

Mr. HUSTING. Certainly, I yield.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is not the fact. Both the railroads and the department officials stated to Congress that since the parcel post went into effect it has been done on a part—possibly half—of the railroads; never on all of them.

Mr. HUSTING. I know from my experience that there was a weighing of one-quarter part of the United States mail every year. I am informed that there has been no change in that practice.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator is right about that. There is no dispute about it.

Mr. HUSTING. Consequently there was a weighing in 1913, in 1914, and in 1915, and, if a weighing has not already been had, the mails are now to be weighed in 1916. Four quarters make a whole, and if a quarter of the United States mail has been weighed each year, as has been the practice since time immemorial, then, as a matter of fact, there has been a weighing on all the roads throughout the United States.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, the parcel post went into effect January 1, 1913, if I recollect.

Mr. HUSTING. I do not know just the exact date.

Mr. HARDWICK. In 1913 there was very little parcel-post mail, so that is not reflected upon that year.

The 1916 weighing has not yet occurred; so there have been only two out of the four quarter sections weighed, according to my understanding, that reflected at all the parcel-post matter.

Mr. HUSTING. One is being weighed now or has been weighed. Three-fourths of it at least has been weighed. In four years there have been four weighings, including the first.

The point I want to make clear is that in making those weighings we took into consideration—and it was reflected in the rate—the natural increase of railway mail, and that in voting for an annual weighing of the railroad mail you are paying cumulatively, you are compounding your payments and paying over again for something already paid in the original standard. You are not paying it once over, but you are paying it four times over before the end of the year. Not only that, but, as a matter of fact, leaving out all inference, leaving out all theories, you are voting additional pay to the railroads of between three and five million dollars a year, when the committee is insisting they are letting the railway mail pay proposition alone, and they propose to submit it to the Interstate Commerce Commission. It does seem to me that if we are going to leave it to the Interstate Commerce Commission—to which I am opposed, and I shall vote against the amendment—I do not believe in foreclosing our rights to question the results they are going to reach. I say if that is the theory of the Senate—and that, I understand, is the theory taken by the vote—and the overwhelming desire, then it does seem to me to be consistent we should let the compensation stand where it is and let the Interstate Commerce Commission fix it, if they are going to fix it without our meddling with it in the least.

I can not understand why in saying that we do not understand enough to pass upon the fairness of the compensation, that we do not know enough to legislate in regard to it, that we must put it into the hands of the Interstate Commerce Commission, we at the same time put into this bill an appropriation of from three to five million dollars, saying that they are not getting enough, and that is the reason why we are going to give them three to five million dollars, when at the same time we are saying we do not know whether they are getting enough or not.

Mr. WEEKS. The Senator has frequently referred to giving the railroads from three to five million dollars in addition to what they are receiving. On what estimate is that statement based?

Mr. HUSTING. On figures given me by the department, which will appear in to-morrow's RECORD or probably——

Mr. WEEKS. Who connected with the department gave the information?

Mr. HUSTING. The gentleman I referred to is Mr. Praeger, the Second Assistant Postmaster General.

Mr. WEEKS. How long has Mr. Praeger been Second Assistant Postmaster General?

Mr. HUSTING. The Senator will have to ask some one else; I do not know.

Mr. WEEKS. Does the Senator suppose that those figures are correct?

Mr. HUSTING. Yes, sir.

Mr. WEEKS. I think I could demonstrate if I had time to do it that they are probably not correct. I wish to ask the Senator on what authority were they based?

Mr. HUSTING. They are based, I understand, on the increase of the weight of mails in the past and the probable amount of increase in the future, each having relation to the other.

Mr. WEEKS. Does the Senator know what the increase has been annually in years past?

Mr. HUSTING. I have no doubt that the reports show just what the increase is. I understand it is between 5 and 10 per cent a year—something of that kind.

Mr. WEEKS. If the Senator thinks that this increase amounts to from three to five million dollars, he is quite inaccurate.

Mr. HUSTING. The Senator is stating his opinion, and perhaps he is correct. I am stating my opinion on the authority of the Post Office Department. They give the figures and the reasons for it. I do not claim to have any personal understanding of it, but the Senator from Massachusetts knows one thing, and we all know one thing, that there is an increase of mail from year to year. The argument was made only a few moments ago on the floor by one of the Senators that there could not be any such thing as a decrease, because we are increasing every year from year to year. We all know that. But assuming that it is not $3,000,000 or $5,000,000 a year, but assuming that it is two and a half million dollars, assuming that it is $2,000,000, you are still voting an appropriation of $2,000,000 over and above what they are receiving now, when we admit by our vote that we are not competent to legislate upon the question of fair compensation.

I again suggest that this be stricken from the bill. It is entirely inconsistent with the idea of referring the matter to the Interstate Commerce Commission. I therefore move to strike out from line 6 to line 24, inclusive, on page 55.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I hope that motion will not prevail.

Mr. HUSTING. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Harding	McLean	Shafroth
Bankhead	Hardwick	Martin, Va.	Sheppard
Beckham	Hitchcock	Martine, N. J.	Sherman
Borah	Hollis	Myers	Smith, Md.
Brady	Husting	Nelson	Smoot
Brandegee	James	Norris	Sterling
Bryan	Johnson, Me.	O'Gorman	Thomas
Clark, Wyo.	Johnson, S. Dak.	Oliver	Thompson
Culberson	Jones	Overman	Townsend
Cummins	La Follette	Page	Vardaman
Fletcher	Lane	Poindexter	Walsh
Gallinger	Lee, Md.	Pomerene	Weeks
Gore	Lewis	Ransdell	Williams
Gronna	Lippitt	Saulsbury	Works

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-five Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The pending amendment is the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. HUSTING] to the amendment of the committee, on which he has asked for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr HOLLIS (when his name was called). I announce my pair and its transfer as before and vote "yea."

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). Again announcing my pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] I withhold my vote.

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] to the junior Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. ASHURST (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Arizona was called). I again announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Arizona] on account of illness in his family. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] and vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). Announcing the same pair and transfer as before I vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have a general pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (after having voted in the negative). I desire to ask if the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Having a pair with that Senator I withdraw my vote.

Mr. OLIVER. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] to my colleague [Mr. PENROSE] and vote "nay."

Mr. HARDING (after having voted in the affirmative). I notice that the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] has not voted. I therefore withdraw my vote, because of my general pair with him.

Mr. REED. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 35, as follows:

YEAS—20.

Ashurst	Gore	Johnson, S. Dak.	Poindexter
Brady	Gronna	La Follette	Reed
Bryan	Hollis	Lane	Sheppard
Cummins	Husting	Lee, Md.	Thompson
Fletcher	James	Norris	Vardaman

NAYS—35.

Bankhead	Lodge	Page	Sterling
Borah	McLean	Pomerene	Thomas
Brandegee	Martin, Va.	Ransdell	Townsend
Culberson	Martine, N. J.	Shafroth	Walsh
Hardwick	Myers	Sherman	Warren
Hitchcock	Newlands	Shields	Weeks
Johnson, Me.	O'Gorman	Simmons	Williams
Lea, Tenn.	Oliver	Smith, Md.	Works
Lippitt	Overman	Smoot

NOT VOTING—40.

Beckham	Dillingham	Lewis	Smith, Ga.
Broussard	du Pont	McCumber	Smith, Mich.
Catron	Fall	Nelson	Smith, S. C.
Chamberlain	Gallinger	Owen	Stone
Chilton	Goff	Penrose	Sutherland
Clapp	Harding	Phelan	Swanson
Clarke, Ark.	Hughes	Pittman	Taggart
Clark, Wyo.	Jones	Robinson	Tillman
Colt	Kenyon	Saulsbury	Underwood
Curtis	Kern	Smith, Ariz.	Wadsworth

So Mr. HUSTING's amendment to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended. The committee amendment has not yet been disposed of.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Excuse me, I did not understand that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

Mr. TOWNSEND. What is the question, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the committee amendment as amended.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Let the amendment be stated.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If the question is on the committee amendment as it now stands, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the committee amendment as amended by the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS].

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask for a record vote on that.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. HARDING (when his name was called). I note the absence of my general pair, the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], but I understand he would, if present, vote as I am about to vote on this amendment, and therefore I vote "yea."

Mr. HOLLIS (when his name was called). Announcing my pair and its transfer as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). Again announcing my pair for the week with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], I withhold my vote.

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I announce my pair and withhold my vote.

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I make the same transfer as that announced on the previous vote and vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (when his name was called). Transferring my pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], I vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I announce the same pair and transfer as before and vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Transferring my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator to whom I transferred my pair has entered the Chamber since I announced my transfer. I withdraw that announcement and transfer my pair to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. BECKHAM. Transferring my pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], I vote "nay."

Mr. PITTMAN. I understand that I have been paired by transfer. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. HARDWICK (after having voted in the affirmative). Has the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. HARDWICK. I have a general pair with that Senator, but I understand that if he were present he would vote the same way that I would, and I will therefore let my vote stand.

Mr. REED. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] and vote "yea."

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to announce that the Senator who is paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. SMITH of Michigan] would, if he were present, vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I withdraw the transfer that I made and will vote without a transfer, knowing that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], if present, would vote as I vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. PITTMAN. I vote "yea."

Mr. GRONNA (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON]. As I can not get a transfer, I am compelled to withdraw my vote.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON].

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL].

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF].

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] with the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND].

The result was announced—yeas 44, nays 12, as follows:

YEAS—44.

Bankhead	Lea, Tenn.	Overman	Smith, Md.
Brandegee	Lippitt	Page	Smoot
Bryan	Lodge	Phelan	Sterling
Culberson	McLean	Pittman	Thomas
Cummins	Martin, Va.	Pomerene	Thompson
Fletcher	Martine, N. J.	Ransdell	Townsend
Harding	Myers	Reed	Walsh
Hardwick	Nelson	Shafroth	Warren
Hitchcock	Newlands	Sherman	Weeks
James	O'Gorman	Shields	Williams
Kern	Oliver	Simmons	Works

NAYS—12.

Ashurst	Hollis	La Follette	Poindexter
Beckham	Husting	Lane	Sheppard
Gore	Johnson, S. Dak.	Norris	Vardaman

NOT VOTING—39.

Borah	Curtis	Kenyon	Smith, Mich.
Brady	Dillingham	Lee, Md.	Smith, S. C.
Broussard	du Pont	Lewis	Stone
Catron	Fall	McCumber	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Gallinger	Owen	Swanson
Chilton	Goff	Penrose	Taggart
Clapp	Gronna	Robinson	Tillman
Clark, Wyo.	Hughes	Saulsbury	Underwood
Clarke, Ark.	Johnson, Me.	Smith, Ariz.	Wadsworth
Colt	Jones	Smith, Ga.

So the amendment of the committee as amended was agreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I desire to say that the amendment just agreed to, for which I voted, is, in my judgment, faulty in that it does not preserve the right of the Government to weigh the mails oftener than once in four years if it sees fit so to do. I desire to give notice now that I reserve the right to amend the section in the Senate; but in the meantime I intend to submit the amendment to the committee, in the hope that they will accept it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads was, on page 58, after line 7, to insert:

SEC. 17. That the act of June 6, 1900 (ch. 801, 31st Stat., p. 660), be amended to read as follows:

"All periodical publications issued from a known place of publication at stated intervals as frequently as four times a year by State departments of agriculture and of labor and industry and of State boards or departments charged with the enforcement of laws regulating the distribution and sale of food, dairy, and drug products, or any of these, shall be admitted to the mails as second-class mail matter: Provided, That such matter shall be published only for the purpose of furthering the objects of such departments: Provided further, That such publications shall not contain any advertising matter of any kind."

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I desire to offer, on behalf of the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], who is absent, the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. To this amendment?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; to this amendment, section 17.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 58, line 16, after the word "food," it is proposed to insert the word "poultry."

Mr. HARDWICK. The committee has no objection to that amendment, and I accept it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I desire to return to page 19, line 20 for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 19, after line 19, it is proposed to insert:

That section 16 of the act entitled "An act to amend the act approved June 25, 1910, authorizing the postal savings system, and for other purposes," approved May 18, 1916, be and the same is amended by striking out the words "on and after July 1, 1916."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there further committee amendments?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator having the bill in charge what the effect of the amendment will be?

Mr. BANKHEAD. This amendment was sent up by the Post Office Department, and there is a letter accompanying it. It is rather long. Perhaps it would be well for the Secretary to read the letter to show what it is.

Mr. THOMAS. I think that would be desirable.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to have the amendment stated, so that we may understand what it is.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is not any amendment pending. The Chair has already declared it adopted. We are just finding out whether or not there are any more committee amendments.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, in order that the matter may be understood, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted. The Senator from Colorado wishes to know what it contained.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Mississippi.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Now the amendment is pending.

Mr. HARDWICK. Now, let the Secretary read the letter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado has requested that the amendment be read. The Secretary will read it.

The SECRETARY. On page 19, after line 19, it is proposed to insert:

That section 16 of the act entitled "An act to amend the act approved June 25, 1910, authorizing the Postal Savings System, and for other purposes," approved May 18, 1916, be, and the same is, amended by striking out the words "on and after July 1, 1916."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Now, Mr. President, I ask for the reading of the letter. That will explain the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read the letter.

The Secretary read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., June 19, 1916.

Hon. J. H. BANKHEAD,
Chairman Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The department urgently recommends that section 16 of the postal savings act, approved May 18, 1916, be amended by striking out the words "on and after July 1, 1916." The said section is as follows:

"That on and after July 1, 1916, when the total compensation of any postmaster at a post office of the fourth class for four consecutive quarters shall amount to $1,000, exclusive of commissions on money orders issued, and the receipts of such post office for the same period shall aggregate as much as $1,900, the Auditor for the Post Office Department shall so report to the Postmaster General, who shall, in pursuance of such report, assign such post office to its proper class, to become effective at the beginning of the next succeeding quarterly period, and fix the salary of the postmaster accordingly."

The same provision appeared in the bill making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917 (H. R. 10484, 64th Cong.), as it passed the House of Representatives. It was, however, eliminated from the bill when reported to the Senate by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The Comptroller of the Treasury has advised informally that the said section will not accomplish the purpose intended, and I so informed the Senate committee by letter dated April 24, 1916.

The act of Congress approved March 3, 1883 (22 Stat., 602), provides, among other things, that when the compensation of a fourth-class postmaster, exclusive of the commissions on money-order business, shall amount to $250 a quarter for four consecutive quarters, and the gross receipts for the same period shall amount to $1,900, the Auditor for the Post Office Department shall so certify to the Postmaster General, who shall assign the post office to its proper class and fix the salary of the postmaster accordingly.

There are upward of 200 post offices where the compensation of the postmasters amounts to $1,000 each for four consecutive quarters, but not to $250 for four consecutive quarters each, which can not be advanced to the presidential grade under the law approved May 18, 1916, until October 1, 1917.

It is therefore recommended that the following clause be inserted on page 19, line 20, of the Postal Service bill now pending before the Senate:

"That section 16 of the act entitled 'An act to amend the act approved June 25, 1910, authorizing the Postal Savings System, and for other purposes,' approved May 18, 1916, be, and the same is, amended by striking out the words 'on and after July 1, 1916.'"

Respectfully,

A. S. BURLESON,
Postmaster General.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, after the word "department," at the end of line 22, on page 22, the following:

And provided also, That when railway mail clerks are arbitrarily detached from train service and assigned to service in terminal railway post offices their salaries shall not be reduced, and they shall be entitled to the same salaries and promotions as if retained on road duty.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask the chairman of the committee if he will not accept that amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have no objection to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I believe the committee will not object to the amendment which I offer and send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 34, after line 24, it is proposed to insert at the bottom of the page the following as a separate paragraph:

The Postmaster General is hereby authorized to conduct experiments in three or more communities for the purpose of determining the most practical means of extending the operations of the parcel post in the direction of promoting the marketing of farm products and furthering direct transactions between producers and consumers. Such investigation will further include the consideration of the effects on the Rural Free Delivery Service such extension of the parcel-post system will have, and report of conclusion reached shall be made to Congress. For the purpose of pursuing such experiments and investigations the sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated, to be paid as other appropriations in this act.

Mr. HARDWICK. I will suggest to the Senator that the amendment ought to come in after the conclusion of line 18, on page 34.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have no objection to that.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert the amendment just read after line 18, page 34.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEEKS. I offer the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 34, beginning with line 19, the item reads:

For village delivery service in towns and villages having post offices of the second or third class, $250,000.

It is proposed to add the following proviso:

Provided, That letter carriers employed in the village delivery service shall be paid at the same rate and in accordance with the provisions of the act or acts governing compensation for letter carriers and substitute carriers in the city free delivery service.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have no objection to that amendment, Mr. President.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I desire to offer an amendment to be inserted on page 14 after line 13.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 14, after line 13, insert:

Provided, That the act approved August 24, 1912, an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, amended to include post-office laborers in the list of those to receive compensation for overtime, as well as to be allowed compensatory time on one of the six days following the Sunday on which they perform service.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I raise the point of order on the amendment that it is a private claim and not estimated for.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey claim that the amendment is in accordance with any law?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I do not know that it is.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is just a private claim?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. That is the position taken.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It goes out on a point of order.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. It is a just and proper amendment, it seems to me. I am not prepared to argue with the Senator from Florida upon the question of the point of order, nor do I care to say anything, but it does seem to me that every reason of propriety and good sense requires its insertion in the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is a private claim.

Mr. NORRIS. I offer the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Insert a new paragraph at the end of section 1, page 35, after line 9, as follows:

That on and after July 1, 1916, upon all mail matter of the first class, when deposited in any post office or branch post office for delivery within the limits of said post-office delivery district, or on any star or rural free-delivery route emanating from said post office, the rate of postage chargeable shall be 1 cent for each ounce or fraction thereof.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am compelled to raise the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. I will ask the Senator if he will withhold the point of order for a few moments.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Very well; I will withhold it.

Mr. NORRIS. I hope that the Senator from Alabama will not raise the point of order. I admit that the amendment is subject to a point of order. The effect of the amendment, if adopted, would be in substance to provide for 1-cent postage on sealed letters—drop letters, so called—ordinarily delivered in the city where they are deposited in the post office. It seems to me, in the first place, that if this were adopted it would mean such an increase in this kind of postal business that instead of decreasing the revenues of the Post Office Department it would increase them. The only objection I have ever heard to this kind of a proposition is that it would decrease the postal revenue.

A letter now deposited in a city of free delivery in order to be delivered in the city must have a 2-cent stamp on it if it is sealed. As a matter of fact, the profit the Government makes on a drop letter is greater than on any other activity of the Post Office Department. These letters are not carried on railroad trains. Hence they are never handled more than once, and that is at the post office where they are deposited. There is a good deal more than half of the work eliminated in this kind of letters than with the ordinary mail that is carried on trains.

There is no expense by the carrying of these letters by a railroad, because they are not handled on railroads, and moreover it would not increase to any perceptible degree the expense of the local post office, because the machinery is already in existence for handling this kind of mail. The postal employees are already there. The Government is making and would make at 1 cent an immense profit on this kind of business.

It is only fair, it seems to me, that the business men of the country, who want to take advantage and who would take advantage of this kind of a law, if it were a law, having the advantage of 1-cent postage upon drop letters, ought to be allowed the privilege by law of doing it.

As I said, as far as I know there has never been an objection made to it except decreases in the revenues that are anticipated on account of such a step, but, as a matter of fact, I believe that the enormous increase in this kind of business would be so great that instead of decreasing it would increase the revenues of the department.

Men would use the Post Office Department in a thousand ways that they are not able to use it now on account of being compelled to pay 2-cent postage.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I renew my point of order with the statement that this very identical question was submitted to the Post Office Department and they advised the committee that it would affect the Post Office revenues by many million dollars.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. LEWIS. May I tender an amendment and ask the attention of the chairman of the Post Office Committee to the amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 14, at the end of line 2, insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That section 5 of the act approved August 24, 1912, entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes," be, and is hereby, amended to read: "In cases of emergency, or if the needs of the service require, clerks in first and second class post offices can be required to work in excess of eight hours a day, and for such additional services they shall be paid at a rate 50 per cent higher than their salaries as fixed by law.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, the object of this tendered amendment——

Mr. BRYAN. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, I desire to raise the point of order that it is general legislation on an appropriation bill, and I want the point of order to be pending. Of course, I withhold it that the Senator may submit his views.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, of course with the point of order made, my remarks are ostensibly addressed to the point of order. Pending a point of order, therefore, I wish to state my purpose.

The post-office men in the city of Chicago sent this matter to me, with the following explanation, that in the Government Printing Office here at Washington and in the navy yard at Washington and in the general Government service at Washington the rate contained in this amendment is that which applies. They claim that the post-office men in Chicago are working all day, worried and worn, absolutely fatigued, and are compelled by the exigencies of the situation there at Chicago to work all night as well, and yet they are paid only a very small sum in addition to their pay. They request that they shall be allowed the same rate that is paid to the other Government employees in the different departments I have spoken of.

This amendment is tendered to obtain that result. I should like very much to have it submitted to the Senate, and I think on its equities it would be passed. The point of order, I fancy, made by the Senator from Florida is that it is new legislation. Am I right, may I ask the Senator?

Mr. BRYAN. The point of order is that it is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I should like very much to amend the Senator's proposition by adding the word "laborers" as well as "clerks."

Mr. LEWIS. If I understand, Mr. President, the Senator from New Jersey would like to tender his amendment to my amendment adding the word "laborers" where the words "post-office employees" occur.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I suppose it would receive the same fate as did my amendment, for it has the same purpose. The only difference is that I propose to add the word "laborers" to the clerks mentioned by the Senator from Illinois in his amendment.

Mr. LEWIS. I am unable to oppose the point of order on a parliamentary defense. I must recognize that its legal status is well taken. I only wish the committee could withhold it and allow this equity to be done. If, in the prosecution of what they feel to be their necessities, they can not do so, I am unable, upon legal grounds, to oppose the point of order.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the Senator pardon me?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. HARDWICK. The committee could not possibly waive the point of order for this reason: These men work only eight hours a day now and when they work overtime they are paid the same rate of pay. The Senator proposes to increase it by one-half. There has been no estimate for it. We do not know how much it would cost if applied all over the United States. Of course, on the floor we could not agree to such an amendment until we had some idea of the cost and made some provision for the expense. That is the reason, I infer, the Senator from Florida insists on his point of order.

Mr. LEWIS. I can understand the position announced by the Senator from Georgia, and my only justification is that the position I do assert here is the one that is carried out in all the other departments of the Government here. But I must recognize the legal point raised by the committee, and I am unable to defend against it upon any parliamentary rule. I submit it to the Chair for a ruling.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. LEWIS. I shall at a later time revive the subject in a bill.

Mr. WEEKS. After line 2, page 24, I move to insert:

That hereafter the Postmaster General may transfer, under such regulations as he may prescribe, clerks from post offices of the first and second classes to the railway mail service, and clerks from the railway mail service to post offices of the first and second classes, at salaries not exceeding the salaries which the clerks are receiving at the time of such transfers, which are only to be made with the consent of the said clerks.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. WEEKS. I understand the committee accepts it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if there are no further amendments I wish to submit some observations very briefly.

Mr. REED. I wish to offer an amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. REED. I offer the following amendment. I move to add at the end of line 8, section 7, page 36, the following:

Any person who has passed a civil-service examination and has served continuously in any department or departments of the Government in the District of Columbia for more than 10 years shall be eligible for promotion or transfer to any other department in the Government service in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There is no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there are no further amendments as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. OLIVER. I understand the Senator from Arizona has offered an amendment which he expects to call up.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arizona offer an amendment?

Mr. ASHURST. I have an amendment pending, but the hour is so late now that on the whole I have concluded to wait until Monday.

Mr. HARDWICK. We want to finish the bill to-night.

Mr. BANKHEAD. We want to finish it this evening.

Mr. ASHURST. If we are going to finish the bill to-night, I will go ahead now.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator from Alabama that there are a number of Senators on this side who understood that the motion of the Senator from Arizona to strike out section seven would go over until Monday.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Why are they away?

Mr. SMOOT. Because of the lateness of the hour and there was talk of an executive session. I think they have gone now to their offices. They may not have left there, but if we are going to insist upon the conclusion of the bill, then I must, before they leave their offices, suggest the absence of a quorum, so that they can get here.

Mr. HARDWICK. We hope to finish the bill. If the Senator will pardon me, of course the Senator knows the situation.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not talking for delay.

Mr. HARDWICK. I know, but let us make the point of no quorum and, after securing a quorum, proceed to final action upon the bill.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I wish to say that I have no doubt that what the Senator from Utah says is absolutely correct. I have given no assurances to anyone.

Mr. HARDWICK. Neither has the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. I know that to be the case, and for that reason I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. REED. Before the Senator makes the suggestion, as the Senator from Arizona, I understand, desires to make some remarks on his motion, there will be plenty of time to get the absent Senators here without taking the time for a roll call.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator will understand that the only way they could receive notice in time is by having the roll called. We could not telephone to each one of them.

Mr. REED. The Senator from Arizona will take some time.

Mr. SMOOT. I suppose the speech of the Senator will take three-quarters of an hour.

Mr. ASHURST. About 35 minutes.

Mr. SMOOT. Therefore, for that reason, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Johnson, S. Dak.	Overman	Sterling
Bankhead	Kern	Page	Stone
Beckham	La Follette	Phelan	Thomas
Brandegee	Lane	Pittman	Thompson
Bryan	Lea, Tenn.	Pomerene	Tillman
Culberson	Lewis	Ransdell	Townsend
Cummins	McLean	Reed	Vardaman
Gallinger	Martin, Va.	Saulsbury	Walsh
Gronna	Martine, N. J.	Shafroth	Warren
Harding	Myers	Sheppard	Weeks
Hardwick	Nelson	Sherman	Williams
Hitchock	Norris	Smith, Md.	Works
Husting	Oliver	Smoot

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-one Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I submit an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 38, it is proposed to strike out section 7, as follows:

SEC. 7. That so much of section 1 of the "Act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes," approved August 24, 1912, which provides that the Post Office Department shall not extend or enlarge its present policy of sending second-class matter by freight trains, is hereby repealed.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, my personal inclination would be, of course, to postpone this discussion until Monday, but the patience which the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads [Mr. BANKHEAD] has exercised makes it incumbent upon me to proceed now, inasmuch as he says he wishes to complete the bill to-night.

"BLUE-TAG" CONTROVERSY.

Mr. President, I am opposed to section 7 of the pending Post Office appropriation bill, because, if enacted, its effect would be to empower the Postmaster General to determine, in his discretion, what newspapers and magazines may and what may not be carried by the mail trains. In reaching a solution of the question the Postmaster General would be called upon to decide what news and articles were "timely" and what were not "timely," and this would of necessity set up a censorship of the press.

The "blue-tag" controversy arose as follows: On August 22, 1911, the then Postmaster General, Frank H. Hitchcock, promulgated Order No. 5750, which in effect provided that, beginning September 1, 1911, certain periodical mail matter theretofore carried by fast mail should thereafter be carried by freight.

I ask unanimous consent to include in the RECORD Order No. 5750, being the first "blue-tag" order issued.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The order referred to is as follows:

(Order No. 5750.)

AUGUST 22, 1911.

Beginning September 1, 1911, certain publications heretofore carried in railway post offices will be transported by freight, which will involve an advance in mailing by the publishers, a longer time in transit, and more or less irregularity in the time of arrival at the office of destination. The publishers have been accorded the privilege of printing on the wrapper of each copy or bundle of their publications, as a part of the address, directions as to the date on which delivery is desired. Postmasters are accordingly instructed to withhold from delivery until the morning of the date specified any magazine or other periodical publication or bundle of magazines or periodical publications bearing such instructions on their face or wrapper as part of the address.

Mr. ASHURST. On August 26, 1911, another order was issued by the same Postmaster General, directing that beginning September 1, 1911, periodical publications issued monthly, semimonthly, bimonthly, or at longer intervals, should be termed "blue-tag" matter and should thereafter be specially labeled with blue tags attached to each sack. The order refers to various routes and designates the publications, and I will also ask permission to include that in the RECORD without reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

AUGUST 26, 1911.

Beginning September 1, 1911, periodical publications issued monthly, semimonthly, biweekly, or at longer intervals, and sample copies of all publications designated by the department for the different States shown in the list below, will be termed "blue-tag matter" and be specially labeled with blue tags attached to each sack, and when dispatched over railroad lines of the third contract section will be withdrawn from the regular mail and instead be forwarded by fast-freight service in direct cars between the points named below:

Between Buffalo, N. Y., and Chicago, Ill.; Cincinnati, Ohio; Council Bluffs, Iowa (U. P. transfer); Kansas City, Kans.; St. Louis, Mo.; and St. Paul, Minn.

Between Pittsburgh, Pa., and the same points as from Buffalo, N. Y.

Between Chicago, Ill., and Buffalo, N. Y.; Cincinnati, Ohio; Council Bluffs, Iowa (Union Pacific transfer); Kansas City, Kans.; Pittsburgh, Pa.; St. Louis, Mo.; and St. Paul, Minn.

Between St. Louis, Mo., and Kansas City, Kans.

Between Canton, Ohio, and Chicago, Ill.
(To be comprised of To-day's Magazine.)
Between Cleveland, Ohio, and Chicago, Ill.
(To be comprised of Railroad Trainmen and Locomotive Engineers' Journal.)
Between Rock Island, Ill., and Chicago, Ill.; Council Bluffs, Iowa (Union Pacific transfer); Kansas City, Kans.; and St. Paul, Minn.
(To be comprised of the Modern Woodmen of the World.)
Between Springfield, Ohio, and Buffalo, N. Y.; Chicago, Ill.; Council Bluffs, Iowa (Union Pacific transfer); Kansas City, Kans.; Pittsburgh, Pa.; St. Louis, Mo.; and St. Paul, Minn.
(To be comprised of Women's Home Companion.)
When blue-tag matter is dispatched via Buffalo or Pittsburgh, the following States will be forwarded to the respective points named, except that made-up routes and directs for post offices will be forwarded to the nearest shipping point to the point or post office:
To Chicago, send matter for Illinois, Iowa, and Wisconsin.
To Cincinnati, Ohio, send matter for Alabama, Kentucky, Cincinnati, Ohio, and Tennessee.
To Council Bluffs, Iowa (Union Pacific transfer), send matter for northern California, Hawaii, Idaho, Nebraska, Nevada, Oregon, South Dakota, Utah, and Wyoming.
To Kansas City, Kans., send matter for Arizona, southern California, Colorado, Kansas, Kansas City and St. Joseph, Mo.; Mexico, New Mexico, Oklahoma, and western Texas.
To St. Louis, Mo., send matter for Arkansas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Missouri, and Texas.
To St. Paul, Minn., send matter for Alaska, Minnesota, Montana, North Dakota, and Washington.
When blue-tag matter is dispatched via Chicago, Ill., the above instructions will be observed, and in addition thereto the matter for offices in the States named below will be forwarded as follows:
To Cincinnati, Ohio, send matter for Florida, Georgia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia, West Virginia, and Cincinnati, Ohio.
To Buffalo, N. Y., send matter for Connecticut, Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New York, Rhode Island, and Vermont.
To Pittsburgh, Pa., send matter for Delaware, District of Columbia, Maryland, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania.
When blue-tag matter is dispatched via St. Louis, this mail for States directed to be forwarded to Kansas City, Kans., and to Council Bluffs, Iowa, will be sent to Kansas City, Kans.
The rates given, being for freight shipments, contemplate a minimum weight of 20,000 pounds, and cars containing less than this minimum weight should be withheld from dispatch and mails to the amount of 20,000 pounds included before billing and dispatch.
The waybills to be used will be of the Government form, printed in green ink with initial letter "M" prefixing the serial number. These are issued in quadruplicate. The first form, being the bill of lading, will be signed by the agent of the railroad making the shipment and forwarded by mail to the consignee. The second form is the shipping order, and should be delivered to the agent of the railroad making the shipment. The third form should be forwarded by mail to the Second Assistant Postmaster General, Division of Railway Adjustments, Washington, D. C. The fourth form is the memorandum bill of lading to be retained by the consignor.
The cars destined to Chicago, Ill., should be labeled to, and the bill of lading consign the car to, the Union Depot Terminal R. P. O., Chicago, Ill.
For Council Bluffs, to the U. P. Transfer Terminal R. P. O., Council Bluffs, Iowa.
For St. Louis, Mo., to the Union Depot Terminal R. P. O., Annex Station, St. Louis, Mo., care of Terminal Railroad Association, Eighteenth Street yard.
The cars for the other points named will be labeled to and waybilled to the postmaster at the respective offices, and those for Kansas City, Kans., should be in care of Northwestern Garage & Storage Co., Seventh Street and K. C. Northwestern tracks.
The waybills should describe the contents of the cars as "Periodical mail matter (magazines)," giving the number of sacks and gross weight. The blank spaces should be carefully filled out, the routing being in accordance with the established routes named in Daily Bulletin 9598, August 19, 1911.
The railroad companies whose bids for the transportation of this mail have been accepted will assume the cartage charges at the points of shipment and at destinations, to be included in the freight bills at the rates the department has ascertained. Such cartage will be performed by the following transfer companies, but no payments should be made by postmasters on account of such cartage:
At Chicago, Ill.: Joseph Stockton Transfer Co.
At Cincinnati, Ohio: James Buckles Transfer Co.
At Cleveland, Ohio: General Cartage & Storage Co.
At Kansas City, Kans.: Northwestern Garage & Storage Co.
At St. Louis, Mo.: St. Louis Transfer Co.
At St. Paul, Minn.: Frank J. Dunn.
At other shipping points and at other destinations the service will be performed without expense to the department, as the cost of cartage has been absorbed in the freight rates accepted.
The details of conducting the shipping will be invested in the Railway Mail Service. Transfer clerks will be assigned at the different freight depots to perform the necessary duties in connection therewith and to weigh the mails from September 1 on the railroad routes established from that date.
The weights shown on the waybills must be the actual scale weights, carefully taken, at which the railroad companies will have a representative to take the joint weights.
No matter bearing postage stamps affixed will be included in freight shipments.

AUGUST 31, 1911.

The instructions of August 26, 1911, covering the shipment of periodical mail matter by fast-freight service, are hereby modified as follows:
Additional shipments will be made from Kansas City, Mo., to Chicago, Ill., to be comprised of the Household, published at Topeka, Kans.
Also from Omaha, Nebr., to Chicago, Ill., to be comprised of Sovereign Visitor, published at Omaha, Nebr.
In lieu of the cartage charges at U. P. Transfer, Council Bluffs, Iowa, there will be allowed an unloading charge of 25 cents per ton, which will be assumed by the railroad company whose bid has been accepted for the transportation of this mail.
The weights of these shipments will be taken on post-office scales as far as practicable. "Catch" tickets should be given to the transfer company taking the mail from the post office to the railroad depot, showing the number of sacks and the weight of mails. Where weighing upon post-office scales is impracticable and the railroad team scales are used and a charge for the use of such scales is made, an allowance to cover such charge is authorized, and the railroad company performing the transportation will be credited with such charge when added on separate vouchers to the freight transportation bills.
In case a car containing blue-tag matter in transit is disabled or is reported in bad order by the railroad company and it is necessary to transfer the contents to another car, the facts concerning such transfer will be telegraphed by the agent at the point of transfer to the railroad official at headquarters. Such facts will be then reported to the Superintendent of Railway Mail Service at the railroad terminal, who in turn will report the facts regarding the transfer of contents and the number of the new car to this office, Division of Railway Adjustments.

SEPTEMBER 9, 1911.

The blue tags used on sacks containing periodical mail matter to be shipped by fast-freight service must be removed from sacks at time of emptying.
Publishers and others must be cautioned not to use blue labels or blue tags on any sacks except on mail matter designated as "blue-tag" periodical mail.

SEPTEMBER 19, 1911.

The instructions of August 31, 1911, relating to shipments of periodical mail matter from Kansas City, Mo., to Chicago, Ill., are hereby modified to include also the following publications:
Knights and Ladies of Security, Topeka, Kans., and Poultry Culture, Topeka, Kans.
Also modify the instructions of August 26, 1911, relating to shipments of this matter from Springfield, Ohio, to include also the following publications:
Household Journal, Farm News, and Poultry Success (except for States of New York and Pennsylvania).

Mr. ASHURST. Upon these orders, which I have included in the RECORD, and certain other orders of the Postmaster General, arose what was then and is now termed the "blue-tag" controversy. The reasons given by the then Postmaster General for the promulgation of the "blue-tag" orders were—so he alleged—that their operations would result in saving a considerable sum of money to the Government by utilizing less expensive methods of shipment, and he laid especial emphasis upon the suggestion that, in his opinion, the transportation by freight of certain second-class mail would insure a quicker handling of the first-class mail. For a time "blue-tag" matter was carried in the first contract section, but later the method of transporting certain periodicals by fast freight was extended to another contract section, and in this connection it may be mentioned that the country is divided into four weighing sections, one to be weighed each year under the quadrennial weighing system. The first section comprises the New England States—New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, and North Carolina; the second section comprises practically all of the Southeastern States; the third section comprises the States of Ohio, Illinois, Iowa, Michigan, Indiana, Minnesota, and Missouri; while the fourth section comprises practically all of the States west of the Missouri River.

Immediately upon the installation of the "blue-tag" system it was recognized throughout the whole country as giving a distinctive and valuable advantage to one magazine or periodical over another magazine or periodical of the same character, published in the same locality. The "blue-tag" system was the subject of wide discussion, and various arguments were urged against its continuation. Amongst other objections, it was alleged that the "blue tagging" favored one class of publishers at the expense of others in the same class; that the power of the Postmaster General in this respect was practically unlimited; that such power and authority might be applied at his discretion; and that certain magazines and periodicals of a particular class were favored and permitted to go by fast mail while other magazines or publications of the same class were required to go by freight. One of the chief objections made was that the orders of the Postmaster General, directing that certain publications of a particular class should go by fast mail while others of the same class should go by freight, placed in the Postmaster General's hands the power practically to say whether a particular magazine should expire or survive.

The "blue-tag" order was widely attacked as being un-American in character and obnoxious to the principle of "equal rights to all and special privileges to none."

It was asserted with great force that the operation of the "blue-tag" system placed in the hands of the Postmaster General a denial to certain persons of the equal benefit of the law. It was asserted that the "blue-tag" system placed the property, the means of livelihood, and the investment of a magazine owner within the hands of the Postmaster General, and that by virtue of orders "blue tagging" a magazine or periodical and thus requiring such particular magazine or periodical to go by freight instead of the mails, advertisers in the magazine "blue tagged" and thus handicapped would become dissatisfied and complaints would be made from subscribers about the delay in receiving the same. One of the most vigorous complaints was that the "forms" would be required to be "locked" or closed several days in advance of the accustomed or regular date of the magazine's going to press, so that the magazine might be printed and placed upon the freight trains at a date sufficiently early to reach the subscribers at the usual and accustomed time, and that the early going to press, the early "closing" of the "forms," and the delays occasioned by the danger and tediousness of freight transportation would thus render the news and current matters in the "blue-tagged" publications stale, untimely, and of no interest. The "blue-tag" system was assailed by many well-informed and thoughtful persons throughout the United States as a method that savored of an odious bureaucracy instead of representative government, and upon the ground that it placed the Postmaster General in the position of a supreme autocrat, where his mere will or ipse dixit could control the material destiny of any magazine or newspaper which saw fit to criticize the policies of an administration. Now, it must be borne continually in mind that the "blue-tagged" publication, which was required to go by freight and thus be subjected to the delays of freight transportation, was required to pay the same rate of postage as its competitor that was privileged to go by fast mail.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, will the Senator submit to an interruption?

Mr. ASHURST. I will.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to inquire whether the orders to which the Senator refers are general in character and lay down any rule under which the "blue tag" is applied to certain publications?

Mr. ASHURST. They are special. I will read some of them, which I have already included in the RECORD, to give that information. For instance, we will say, amongst other things it was ordered that between Buffalo, New York, and Chicago, Cincinnati, Council Bluffs, Kansas City, and St. Louis, certain magazines should go by freight.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Was the order limited to monthly magazines or did it include weeklies?

Mr. ASHURST. It included monthly magazines. However, it must not be forgotten that the Postmaster General had full power to include bimonthlies, weeklies, or dailies, and I know of some monthlies which were required to rearrange their business affairs and publish as weeklies in order to be exempt from the operation of this "blue tag" order. On this point I will ask the Secretary now to read a statement I have received from the editor of the Rural Free Delivery News. I ask the Secretary to read that statement at this point because it specifically answers the question of the Senator from Nebraska.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

STATEMENT OF W. D. BROWN, EDITOR OF THE "R. F. D. NEWS."

In the late fall of 1911, the "R. F. D. News" was put under a "blue tag" order. My paper at that time was a monthly and was issued on the first day of each month. The December, 1911, issue which was put in the mails on the first day of December, 1911, did not reach my subscribers in Illinois until about the 25th of December, 1911. This was caused by my mail being delayed at Pittsburgh. The papers were forwarded from Washington to Pittsburgh by mail train and there thrown out and held until a solid carload of mail to go by freight toward the West was accumulated. This resulted in the delay above mentioned.

This unusual delay necessitated my changing the periods of publication of the R. F. D. News from a monthly to a weekly, and this resulted in a net loss of $5,000 in advertising contracts by the R. F. D. News during the first year of the change. My contracts for 1912 had all been made up and signed for a monthly issue of twelve numbers, but after the change it was necessary for me to carry the same advertising 52 times in my weekly issue without any additional pay. The R. F. D. News is now a weekly.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I understand that the R. F. D. News changed from a monthly to a weekly in order to escape this proscription.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes, sir.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Can the Senator explain how that change would enable it to escape it?

Mr. ASHURST. Because the weeklies at that particular time were not "blue tagged."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What is the situation now? Does the "blue tag" only apply to monthlies?

Mr. ASHURST. To monthlies. I may not be accurate, but I am not aware at this time that any weeklies are "blue tagged."

Mr. HARDWICK. It only applies, if the Senator will pardon me, to monthlies now.

Mr. ASHURST. I thank the Senator. I thought that was true, but it must be borne in mind that under the law up until 1912 the Postmaster General had plenary power to include monthlies, quarterlies, bimonthlies, weeklies, or dailies.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, Mr. President, as I understand the amendment that was attached to the Post Office appropriation bill in 1912, it prohibited the Postmaster General from extending the "blue-tag" system any further. If he was only applying it to monthlies at that time, I presume he had no power after the enactment of that amendment to extend it to weeklies.

Mr. ASHURST. I think that would be the logical result.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I did not get the information which it seemed to me the question of the Senator from Nebraska was calculated to elicit, and that is, How did this particular magazine come to suffer this discrimination? Did the Postmaster General follow any rule in the selection of magazines, or did he select arbitrarily, upon considerations satisfactory to him, such particular magazines as he desired?

Mr. ASHURST. I do not wish to do the former Postmaster General an injury. He is not a public officer at this time; but during his service as Postmaster General he or his assistants in the department set up, or alleged that they set up, as a rule or standard that would be their guide in determining what should be "blue tagged" what was timely and what was current; that is to say, a magazine which, in the opinion of the Postmaster General did not contain current news—timely news—was "blue tagged."

Mr. President, what is "timely" to the distinguished Senator from Montana might not be of interest or timely to me; and there is where the objection first arose. The publisher said, "Why, my articles are timely and should reach my subscribers promptly."

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. Well, I yield to the Senator.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I ask the question simply for information. I understand the law was changed so that the prohibition against the shipment of publications by freight applies to the first and second mailing divisions in the United States, and that that prohibition has been in operation, so far as those divisions are concerned, for the last year only.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is correct about that.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Now, may I ask the Senator if he has learned of any dissatisfaction arising out of that order, so far as those divisions are concerned?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I have not learned of any recent dissatisfaction.

Mr. REED. The statement which the Senator had read showed some dissatisfaction.

Mr. ASHURST. Of course the writer of the statement that was read described some injury that occurred to him three or four years ago.

To illustrate the absurd, the grotesque, results that were evolved by the workings of this "blue-tag" system, permit me to give a few examples. For instance, the Grocers' Magazine, a monthly publication, was required to go by freight, while the Tea and Coffee Trade Journal, also a monthly publication, was permitted to go by mail; both of these publications dealt with the same general subject; one was published in Boston, the other in New York. There was a publication called Printing Art, one of the finest types of printing papers, which was required to go by freight and thus necessarily subjected to all the dangers of freight transportation and slow delivery as well, while the Inland Printer, also a magazine devoted to the printers' art, was carried by mail. The National Harness Review was compelled to go by freight, while the Hardwood Record was privileged to go by mail. The Monumental News was required to go by freight while the American Stone Trade was privileged to go by mail. The Progressive Age, which dealt with gas, electric, and water supply, was required to go by freight, while the Embalmers' Monthly was privileged to be sent by the fastest mail. The Western Druggist was required to go by freight, while the Metal Industry was permitted to go by fast mail. American Women, American Education, and a publication in Lynn, Mass., called Water Wagon, were required to go by freight, while the Brewers' Journal, the Western Brewer, and the Brewer and Malster were permitted to be carried by fast mail.

Mr. THOMAS. Does the Senator mean to say that the "American Women" was required to go by slow freight? [Laughter.]

Mr. ASHURST. It was; and also the "Water Wagon."

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I suggest, Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I knew I would get a "rise" out of somebody in referring to the "Water Wagon." [Laughter.]

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I suggest that the Senators from Massachusetts be called in. [Laughter.]

Mr. ASHURST. Oh, yes—the "Water Wagon" by slow freight; the "Brewers' Journal" by fast mail. A publication known as Office Appliances was required to go by slow freight, while its competitor, called Business Equipment Journal, was permitted to go by fast mail. The Medical Standard was required to go by freight, while the Bakers' Helper was permitted to go by fast mail.

I ask the especial attention of Senators from the mining States to this: Mines and Minerals, a splendid publication, by Mr. Rufus Foster, of Scranton, Pa., which dealt with mining matters and gave interesting and up-to-date information as to first aid to injured in case of mine accidents, was required to go by freight. This publication, Mines and Minerals, was a monthly magazine with a circulation of about 12,000 copies per month and was necessarily limited to mining districts. Its transportation by freight instead of by the mails, I am informed, proved a serious detriment to its publisher and especially to the subscribers in the States in which that publication was read extensively; that is to say, in the Rocky Mountain and the Pacific Coast States. The forms were required to be locked early, thus rendering the news stale and uninteresting, by reason of the length of time required for freight transportation.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. Do I understand that the Senator objects to having any of these publications go by freight, or is he simply objecting to the fact that an injustice or a discrimination has taken place between the different publications?

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator has my view. I object to the discrimination.

Mr. POMERENE. Has the Senator formulated a rule which would do away with that discrimination, and at the same time not leave the department or the Government under the obligation to give a fast mail service to the publication which might just as well go by freight or by some slow train?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, so far as I am personally concerned, if Congress should require all second-class matter to go by freight that might not be so gross a discrimination. But I do say that where they both pay the same rate—mark you, the man who is blue tagged, and whose magazine goes by slow freight, pays the same rate as the man whose magazine goes by fast mail—they should have the same service.

Mr. POMERENE. I agree with the Senator that there ought to be no discrimination as between these different publications; but I was wondering whether or not the Senator had some amendment to offer which might be just both toward these publications and toward the Government as well.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, my philosophy of life is to make only one fight at a time. My contest now is to get section 7 eliminated, preserve the status quo, and then we may discuss what, if anything, further should be done.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator whether he has any statistics as to the amount of saving there is to the Government by reason of sending this matter by freight?

Mr. ASHURST. I have. Since the blue-tag order went into effect on the 1st day of September, 1911, the Government has saved $5,557,879.60—quite a saving, Mr. President. But for the mere saving of dollars are we going to beat down one of the cherished principles of American Government? Are you going to say to a rich and opulent publisher who has numerous subscribers, "You may go by fast mail," but to the poor man, with slender means and with no opulent subscribers, possibly advocating an unpopular cause, "In order that we may save some money we will require you to go by slow freight at the same rate paid by your competitor who goes by mail"?

Mr. President, while I cheerfully give the figures, I decline to allow this question to descend to the level of how much money we are going to save. An American principle is at stake. Are we, as a Government, going to say to one man, publishing a magazine of a particular class, "You may go by fast mail for 1 cent a pound," and to another publisher, his competitor in the same city, "You must go by slow freight at 1 cent a pound"? It is the discrimination to which I object.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. Does not the last statement of the Senator suggest the real remedy—a difference in charge for the different methods of transportation, thus giving every publisher the opportunity to make his choice of the two methods of conveying his periodicals through the mails?

Mr. ASHURST. That is a very pertinent suggestion, Mr. President.

Another grotesque result worked out was as follows: The Retail Coal Man was permitted to go by fast mail, while the Coal Dealer, being identically of the same character and kind of publication and being also a monthly, was compelled to go by slow freight. Consider, for instance, that the Cement World and the Cement Era were both published in Chicago, were both devoted to the same industry, while one was compelled to go by freight and the other permitted to go by fast mail.

The Review of Reviews, the World To-Day, Current Literature, and the World's Work were required to be carried by freight, while the Wine and Spirits Circular and a series of like publications, the Fur Trade Review, and the Soda Fountain, were permitted to go by mail. The following, among other publications, were exempt from the "blue-tag" system at the beginning of the service; that is to say, were permitted to go by mail:

American Brewer, Bonfort's Wine and Spirit Circular, Brewers' Journal, Cold Storage and Ice Trade Journal, Fur Trade Review, Journal of the American Bankers' Association, Motor Boat, Motor Boating, Playthings, Silk, the Soda Fountain, Toilettes, American Album of Fur Novelties, and American Musical and Art Journal.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I yield, of course.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I should like to ask the Senator what the situation would be if his motion should prevail and section 7 of this bill should be stricken out? That does not give any remedy for the matter that is now being handled under the blue-tag system, does it?

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is correct about that. It simply preserves the status as it has existed since 1912. It keeps it from getting worse.

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask the Senator a further question? If this section were stricken out, then what would be the authority of the Post Office Department over the subject matter?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Postmaster General would then have the same authority that he had when he put this order into effect.

Mr. POMERENE. What was it?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Discretion.

Mr. ASHURST. First, the Postmaster General had unlimited discretion; but the law that was passed by the Sixty-second Congress and approved in August, 1912, restrained him in this way. There is a provision in section 1 reading as follows:

> From and after the passage of this act the Post Office Department shall not extend or enlarge the present policy of sending second-class matter by freight trains.

That is the law to-day. It is now proposed to repeal that provision, so that the Postmaster General will have the discretion which he had September 1, 1911, to wit, plenary power.

Among the magazines that were blue-tagged and were required to go by freight were the following:

American Woman, Hearth and Home, Church Messenger, Little Bible Lesson, Zion Trumpet and Homiletic Magazine, Record of Christian Work, Advocate of Peace, American Primary Teacher, Atlantic Monthly, Christian Science Herald, Christian Science Journal, Christian Science Quarterly, Education, Farm Poultry, Life and Light for Women, Missions, Missionary Herald, Pilgrim Teacher and Sunday School Outlook, Popular Educator, Primary Education, School Arts Book, Woman's Missionary Friend, Water Wagon, Smith College Bulletin, Smith College Monthly, Good Housekeeping, American Education, Longshoreman, American Baby, American Homes and Gardens, American Machinist, American Marine Engineer, American Review of Reviews, American Tailor and Cutter, Bible Class Manual, Blacksmith and Wheelwright, Boilermaker, Catholic World, Good Government, Pearson's Magazine, and B'nai B'rith News.

It should be observed in this connection, however, that while a large number of these magazines and publications were required to go by freight, the editors of some of the "blue-tagged" publications stated that they had no objection to these publications going by freight, and consequently stated that they would adapt themselves to the order of the Postmaster General, would go to press earlier, and thus comply with the orders requiring them to send their publications upon freight trains. Likewise, in the same connection, it must be remembered that the editors of a number of such publications communicated with the then Postmaster General calling his attention to the fact that their magazine had been required to go by freight while their competitors were permitted to send by mail, and many of them set forth complaints to the effect that such order would cause their advertising to dwindle and their subscribers materially to decrease.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WEEKS. I want to ask the Senator if, after all, this is not a question of administration? The statement he has just made leads me to ask that question. I was chairman of the Post Office Committee in the House when this orginal provision was adopted, and it was adopted after talking with a great many publishers of magazines and other periodicals, many of whom said that it would make no difference to them, as there was no current news in their productions.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is correct.

Mr. WEEKS. If the Post Office Department would confine the sending of periodicals by freight to those in which there is no current news, undoubtedly the publishers could adjust themselves to it; and therefore it is entirely a question of administration.

Mr. ASHURST. That is quite true. I am going now to give one more illustration.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask the Senator from Arizona if this is not a statement of the facts relating to the law which is proposed to be repealed by section 7?

The Postmaster General had authority to send any kind of mail on any kind of train he might select. He established a policy, namely, that of sending all mail matter of this character published not more frequently than once a month upon freight trains. That order, however, included some publications which had current news printed in them. Upon application to the Postmaster General several—indeed, I think possibly more than 50—of these publications were relieved from the order which required them to be transported upon freight trains, and they were put back upon the passenger trains. In this juncture the act which is sought to be repealed was passed, and the Postmaster General was required not to enlarge the policy which he had adopted. The result of that was that since that time no other publications have been put upon the freight trains.

If this law is repealed, it will be a declaration by Congress that the Postmaster General can put upon a freight train any publication that he desires to carry in that way. I think it will make a very great difference in the status of the matter if this law is repealed; for, if it is not repealed, there will be no publications sent on freight trains that are not now sent upon such trains or that do not fall within the classification which the Postmaster General adopts.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I do not understand that section 7 is designed to repeal the existing law.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; it does.

Mr. THOMAS. Its purpose is to extend it.

Mr. CUMMINS. No; it repeals the law which contains the prohibition.

Mr. ASHURST. It repeals the existing law.

Mr. THOMAS. I stand corrected.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, is it not a fact that section 7 does not deal with the policy, but, rather, with the scope and application of the present law? It does not intend, as I gather, to provide that there would be an extension of the policy or an extension of the exercise of the functions now authorized by existing law, but it would simply enable the Postmaster General to extend to the whole country the same identical policy that is now being pursued with reference to two sections of the country. That would be my understanding of the application of the law.

Mr. ASHURST. In addition to that, if the Senator will pardon me, the Postmaster General would have the power to place additional magazines—weekly, biweekly, semimonthly, or daily—under the blue tag.

Mr. FLETCHER. He would have no additional power as far as policy was concerned. The power would be simply to extend over larger territory than he is now permitted to exercise that power over.

Mr. ASHURST. And to say what magazines should go over this territory by freight trains.

Now for another illustration of the absurd, grotesque, and illogical results brought about by the workings of this "blue-tag" system: For instance, there was a magazine called The Cavalier, issued by Mr. Munsey. It was a weekly; it was permitted to go by fast mail; it contained fiction purely, without pictures; it was printed on cheap paper, and made no pretense whatever of carrying current news; indeed, it was not even timely in respect to news. But Munsey's Magazine, issued by the same publisher (Mr. Munsey), which was printed on excellent paper, contained topics of timeliness and of interest to the public, with every reason existing why it should promptly be delivered, was "blue tagged" and required to go by mail. One of the issues contained an article entitled "A nation in revolt against political bosses," by Mr. Munsey himself.

I have already stated that a number of publishers of these various magazines that were "blue tagged" commended the decision of the Post Office Department and endeavored to cooperate with the department to the best of their ability, but I am informed and have reason to believe that when some of them offered to cooperate with the Post Office Department they had no idea that the department would be a party to the evolvement of such unfair, grotesque, and illogical results as were brought about. Moreover, some publications were intimidated into agreeing to accept the system by the attempts then being made to increase their postage rates, many of whom would have been driven out of business by such increase. Some of the editors were much harried and perplexed, and saw, or thought they saw, that to bend cheerfully in this instance to the will of the department might in some way relieve them from the danger of having their postage rates enormously and oppressively increased. Moreover, many publishers accepted and acted upon the statement made by the department that a very small delay would be occasioned in transporting their publications; for they assumed, as was entirely reasonable, but which unfortunately was not the fact, that the Post Office Department had entered into actual engagements and arrangements with the railroads by which the railroads were to give these publishers some kind of regular freight service.

It is true that a number of these editors, as I say, consented to this course, and recommended the blue tag; but it is also true that upon a careful reading of the hearings it will be disclosed that many of them believed that the department had already worked out some system of rapid freight transportation by which the dangers and delays of ordinary freight transportation might be obviated. It must be remembered that these publications are dumped out, unloaded, as would be a bale of cotton or a bale of wool, and left there until possibly a carload has accumulated for a particular point. These publications suffer all the dangers and all the delays that are incident to the roughest freight transportation.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have been necessarily detained from the Senate during much of the debate on this bill, and my information concerning it is not very accurate. This particular point is one to which I have not had time to give any special consideration; but I will ask the Senator if I am correct in the supposition that if his motion carries it will not remedy the condition of things that the Senator is pointing out at the present time?

Mr. ASHURST. It will simply prevent them from getting any worse.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes. All that the motion would accomplish would be to prevent the repeal of a law which provides that it shall not be extended? Am I correct in that?

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is correct.

Mr. GALLINGER. I wanted to know, because I think perhaps there are abuses that ought to be corrected, but I have not had time to examine the matter very carefully.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, in the spring and summer of 1912 the heat of popular resentment against this system swelled into a great volume. The Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads held hearings on the question, before which committee a number of the publishers were heard. Considerable testimony was taken. The Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads of the Senate, then as now, was composed of some of the most able, thoughtful Members of the Senate. On the committee at that time was the Senator from Kansas, Mr. Bristow, a man of large experience in matters relating to the Post Office Department. Referring to page 38 of the hearings, we find that Senator Bristow asked the following question:

Senator BRISTOW. I would like for you to tell me why the Printing Art is sent by freight and why the Inland Printer is sent by mail?

Mr. STEWART. I will be glad to refer to my files in which we have sample copies.

Senator BRISTOW. They are two well-known magazines of exactly the same character, and solicit business from the same constituents. I would like for you to tell me why one is sent by mail and one by freight?

Mr. STEWART. Presumably the reason is that one carries matter of a nature which the department believed was timely in its character and the other did not.

Senator BRISTOW. The matter is exactly of the same character. If your distinction as to what is timely and what is not, is no more intelligent than your decision of what is contained in those two magazines, the whole business is a fake. * * *

Again, page 40, Senator Bristow made the following statement:

Senator BRISTOW. The Curtis Publishing Co. practically produces carloads of its publications, so they do not suffer the delay of these men who do not publish such large amounts. I am talking about something I have some personal knowledge of, and that is the reason I bring it up.

You say, "timely matter." I am acquainted with both of these publications and I have received them at my office for many years. They are exactly the same thing, except the tastes of different men are demonstrated in the two journals.

Now, referring to the former Second Assistant Postmaster General:

Now, some clerk in your office decides that one of these shall go by freight and the other by mail, and that is the end of it. These great publications are discriminated against, and no living man can tell why. The next clerk may simply change and put the Inland Printer on the freight list and the other in the mail. You think you can run a department on these big business interests that way without the grossest injustice?

Mr. STEWART. I think the subject is susceptible of improvement in the matter of handling those details, Senator Bristow. We have up to the present time worked the matter out as best we could under existing conditions.

Senator BRISTOW. Again, I want to call your attention to this fact. Men who publish trade journals of this kind have their life's work and their fortunes in them. It is the work of a lifetime to get them up. Can you blame them for feeling extremely bitter when these losses occur—not only the financial loss, but it is their child, it is the creation of their life's work; and to have it destroyed by an order arbitrarily this way undoubtedly causes them to have this bitter feeling. Do you expect men to submit to that without most violent protest?

Again (p. 44), Senator Bristow made the following timely observation:

Senator BRISTOW. Can you formulate a statute so that the publisher could go to some one, if he feels that he himself could not construe the statute, and get a construction of the statute, so that he will know what his rights are without depending on the opinion of somebody in the department whose opinion will vary according to the number of individuals who pass upon these things?

Mr. STEWART. I am inclined to think that can be done as accurately as the administration of other laws.

Senator BRISTOW. We have never had anyone heretofore in my time to make a discrimination. The very thing that endangers the discretion that is necessary to vest in administrative officials is either by improper abuse or an impractical order by some one who has not any conception of what it will result in.

The CHAIRMAN. That is through inattention or through ignorance?

Senator BRISTOW. Yes. But here you are. They are undertaking to do by Executive order a thing that is not practicable under such an order. It menaces not only the country, but causes doubt as to whether it is safe to permit discretion to be lodged in executive officials.

Mr. STEWART. That, of course, involves a much broader question, which has not been discussed at all, as to whether Congress, under all this state of facts, shall say they do not want the matter transported in this way.

On page 139, Senator Bristow referred to certain publications that were blue tagged and said:

Senator BRISTOW. They had to have the current comment up to that time or the paper will absolutely die of a dry rot. You would absolutely destroy your paper.

Mr. STEWART. The Review of Reviews did not submit any evidence to show that they have been damaged in any way.

The CHAIRMAN. They couldn't, General; I do not think your point is well taken, because they did not have an opportunity during the short period of the experimentation to submit such evidence.

Mr. STEWART. They represented to the department that their period of renewing subscriptions was in the fall, from October to January, and stated that injunction only could protect their interests during that period, and yet they came before your committee, notwithstanding the fact that they had been in the freight since the 1st of September, and did not submit to you evidence to show that they ever lost a single subscription.

Senator BRISTOW. That demonstrates, to my mind, that the department does not understand this business. Any man that understands the matter knows that irregularity of circulation will injure the business, and the publisher will suffer next year from the thing that has happened this year in the publication of his periodical.

Mr. STEWART. The Review of Reviews urged the theory of immediate loss.

Senator BRISTOW. Why would Mr. Shaw be so worked up by this matter if he is not injured?

Mr. STEWART. Why doesn't he show his injury, if he is injured?

The CHAIRMAN. He is worked up because he feels that a discrimination has been made against him.

Senator BRISTOW. That demonstrates to my mind that the department has gone ahead in this matter and has no conception of the injuries being done to hundreds of men.

Mr. STEWART. That statement is not warranted by anything in the evidence.

Senator BRISTOW. It almost approaches to the gravity of impeachment of an officer that will do what has been done with regard to these publications.

Mr. STEWART. Unfortunately, Senator, you were not in here to hear the testimony of the department this morning. I think your opinion would be quite different if you had heard that testimony. We have shown that this movement has been urged by members of the committees of Congress and the Postal Commission and has been acquiesced in by the large number of the publishers themselves since we have begun it.

Senator BRISTOW. I can understand how the publishers when they were being threatened with the doubling of the rates would be glad to go into freight or anything else in order to avoid that calamity. I can not understand why the Post Office Department should within the last year or two consider that one of its principal aims is to go after the publication business and try to injure a number of men who have spent their lives in developing worthy enterprises.

The chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, when this hearing was held, was Hon. Jonathan Bourne, whose grasp of the complications and workings of the post-office system was equal to that of any man, and he asked the following questions of Gen. Stewart, then the Second Assistant Postmaster General (see p. 135 of the hearings):

The CHAIRMAN. Do you think that you have satisfactorily solved this problem under your action of September 1, 1911, in initiating what is known as the "blue-tag system"?

Mr. STEWART. I do; with the exception of these difficulties which may be adjusted under the legislation we are asking. Furthermore, we are asking that the plan be specifically authorized as set forth in our proposed amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you avoid the seeming discrimination as between individuals who pay the same rate and expect the same service on the same compensation?

Mr. STEWART. We would not in all cases, but I beg to call your attention to the fact that in most of these cases the patrons of the mails have agreed to and commend the project.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, is it not a discrimination, as a matter of fact?

Mr. STEWART. It is a discrimination, but not in the offensive sense of the word "discrimination." It lays down the rule that we will carry monthlies and semimonthlies on fast freight trains, and we will carry all other second-class matter in the fast mail trains; to that extent it is undoubtedly a discrimination, but not a discrimination in the offensive sense of the word.

The CHAIRMAN. Can you prepare a regulation or rule that will apply to all periodicals and magazines of second-class mail matter which will make a clean line of demarcation as to what portion of second-class mail matter must go by fast mail without any right on the part of the department to decide, and what portion of second-class mail matter must go by freight without any right on the part of the department to decide?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir; and this proposition which I have suggested, with the elimination of this clause, will accomplish that; the clause to which I refer is this:

"And that the Postmaster General may except from this provision those publications which, because of their nature and purpose, require the earliest possible delivery."

The CHAIRMAN. Who is to determine that?

The Senator from Georgia, Hon. HOKE SMITH, then a member of the Senate Post Offices and Post Roads Committee. He is one of the most eminent of American statesmen. He made the following suggestion to the committee (see pp. 114–115):

Senator SMITH of Georgia. Now, the difficulty about your situation is the question of discrimination, allowing some to have one service arbitrarily and others another service at the same charge. The way to remedy that would seem to be to let the blue tag stand at the present charge and permit the use of the mail cars to those who prefer it at a higher charge.

* * * * * * * *

Senator SMITH of Georgia. Still, if the plan were in our minds of working it out so as to let the blue tag stand and charge a different rate for those magazines that go by mail cars, the two would be inseparably connected. I would not myself be willing to leave the situation so that a portion of the mail could be required to use the blue tag and a portion be given the mail cars and charge them both the same rate.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, you want the same service at the same rate?

Senator SMITH of Georgia. If the same rate is charged, it seems to me that they are entitled, if they demand it, to the same——

STATEMENT OF DR. ALBERT SHAW.

Dr. SHAW. My name is Albert Shaw; my occupation is that of editor of a magazine called the Review of Reviews, and I am also president of the company which publishes the Review of Reviews.

* * * * * * * *

You might ask, and reasonably, why we have not made a great outcry about this. You understand that where an administrative order of that kind could not possibly be carried on very long successfully it seemed better not to advertise to our subscribers and to the whole world that we were thrown out of the mail service which had been built up through long years in this country on the plan of expedition.

The CHAIRMAN. Your objection is not to the degradation of being carried by freight, but it is to the discrimination that an individual sees fit to make?

Dr. SHAW. That is my fundamental objection.

So, Mr. President, after careful consideration and investigation by the committee, the Post Office appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, being the bill upon which the hearings were held, and from which I have quoted, was reported by the chairman of the committee, Mr. Bourne, and the bill carried certain appropriations and showed some increases which had been added by the Senate committee. On page 1 of the report the following appears:

The principal item of the increase is $2,598,000 additional for transportation of the mails, because of the recommended restoration of magazines and periodicals to mail trains where now sent by freight.

That committee, after a careful consideration and hearing all sides, added $2,598,000 for additional transportation of the mails in order that equality might again be restored among these various magazines. In other words, the Senate committee was perfectly willing to recommend and did recommend an increase of $2,598,000 as the price of maintaining the immortal principle of equal rights to all and special privileges to none. The committee also made the following recommendation, found on page 5 of the report:

RESTORATION OF MAGAZINES TO MAIL TRAINS.

The Senate amendment which carries with it the largest increase in appropriation is that which requires that second-class matter now transported on freight trains shall from September 1, 1912, be carried in the regular mail trains, as was the practice prior to the establishment of what is known as the "blue-tag" service. This charge will require an additional appropriation of $2,390,000 for inland transportation by railroad routes and $208,000 additional for railway post-office car service, a total increase of $2,598,000.

After giving an extended hearing to magazine and periodical publishers or their representatives, and after hearing the statements and arguments of officials of the Post Office Department, the committee indorsed the principle that all second-class matter paying the same rate of postage should have the same character of service, so far as speed of transportation is concerned. In reaching this conclusion we intend no criticism upon the effort of the department to economize in transportation expenditures, but we are of the opinion that the freight service involves difficulties which the department did not foresee, and we are convinced that it is absolutely impossible for any official to declare that one periodical shall go by freight and its rival shall go by mail train, without doing irreparable injury in many instances. We do not believe that any man should be permitted to exercise the discretionary power over private business which this "blue-tag" service confers upon the Postmaster General.

This conclusion upon our part was strengthened by the consideration of many instances of the sending of one periodical by freight and another periodical, to all appearances of practically the same character, by mail. The department admits that in some instances a wrong was done, and that by reason of the fact that railroads are paid upon the basis of a quadrennial weighing the wrong can not be corrected if suffered during the weighing period and not discovered until the weighing period has closed. No publisher should be required to endure uncertainty as to the continuance of this mail service upon an equality with his rivals who pay the same rate of postage.

When the bill reached the Senate there was some discussion, and on August 13, 1912, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] said (vol. 48, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 62d Cong., 2d sess.):

Mr. President, the Post Office Department undertook to provide a plan for the transportation of periodicals by freight. It undertook to classify them as between those that carried news and those that did not. I do not sustain the classification the Post Office Department made. It caused a good deal of friction.

When the bill returned from conference it contained the following provision in section 1 thereof:

From and after the passage of this act the Post Office Department shall not extend or enlarge its present policy of sending second-class matter of freight trains.

The conference report was adopted by both Houses, the President signed the bill, hence the provision just quoted is existing law.

This question therefore arises by reason of the fact that the bill now contains, to wit, in section 7 thereof, a provision to the effect that said section 1 of the Post Office appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, is repealed in so far as it prohibits the Post Office Department from extending or enlarging the existing policy of sending second-class matter by freight trains.

I have introduced an amendment in the form of a motion to strike section 7 from the pending bill, and in entering my motion and arguing in support of the same it is a happy circumstance that I may do so under such favorable auspices, for I am entirely unembarrassed even by the shred of a suggestion of partisanship or political bias.

The high character of Postmaster General Burleson and his devotion to the public service place him far above and beyond the most remote intimation of a desire to accomplish the enactment of section 7 of the pending bill for the purpose of punishing, penalizing, or destroying any publication or magazine whatsoever. The honorable attempts of Postmaster General Burleson to economize in his department and save every dollar possible are creditable to him to the last degree.

But, Mr. President, the question involved here is a fundamental one running to and searching the very vitals of our form of Government. The power to "blue tag" a publication is practically unlimited and it may be applied at discretion to magazines of one class and not to other publications of the same class. It may be directed to exempt certain favored publications in gross discrimination against an unfavored publication, yet both the favored and the unfavored pay the same rate of postage. Such "blue-tagging" orders would mean that the publication or periodical thus discriminated against would suffer serious handicap, great loss of prestige and circulation, and perhaps financial ruin. Its competitor, shipping by the regular mails, would be given a tremendous advantage and would be required to pay no higher rate of postage than the magazine discriminated against.

So far as I am aware, none of the supporters of section 7 of the pending Post Office appropriation bill has as yet suggested that any Postmaster General would take steps so extreme as to enter an order providing for the transportation of the daily newspapers by freight instead of by mail. Indeed, I doubt if anyone whose opinion is worth while believes that the present Postmaster General would wantonly seek to cripple and hamper any daily newspaper by requiring it to go by freight instead of the mails. Yet, Mr. President, we must remember that if section 7 becomes a law, the Postmasters General of the future would have the power to require daily newspapers as well as monthly and weekly magazines to go by freight instead of the mails. American politics are uncertain. The constituency of Aristides still survives and makes itself manifest at times; the struggle for political supremacy at times waxes hot and transcends the bounds of fair dealing. In order to aid a political party and to assist in bringing victory to its standards men frequently perform deeds of doubtful propriety—deeds that they would scorn to perform for their own advancement or promotion. We must not forget that in political contests men's passions and spirits amid the whirlwinds and tornadoes of politics rise to a high tide, and honest men are frequently moved to extreme resentment against this or that publication which may justly or unjustly, fairly or unfairly, criticize their actions and misconstrue their motives.

I have not the slightest fear that the present Postmaster General could be moved to resentment or moved to do an injustice, but who is there so wise as to say who will be Postmaster General five years from to-day?

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator really think that, at any time, 5 years from now, or 10 years from now, or 1 year from now, any man would be placed in that responsible position who would, for political purposes, discriminate on the matter the Senator is discussing?

Mr. ASHURST. I just said in answer to the distinguished Senator that men may be moved to extreme resentment sometimes by reason of this or that publication unfairly criticizing them. Let us hope that it will never occur.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator must know what would become of that Postmaster General very speedily if he should do that. I think the Senator has undue fear on that point. I am not now saying whether I favor the Senator's motion or whether I favor the blue-tag law or not, but on that point I think the Senator ought not to allow himself to believe that any Cabinet minister would so demean himself as to make a discrimination in publications, whether they are weekly or monthly or daily, for political purposes. I can not conceive it.

Mr. ASHURST. It is a very happy commentary on human nature that our distinguished friend, after a long and useful life, has such great faith in politicians. I wish I had the same faith that he has.

The evolution of politics in the future may—we hope it will not—bring to the Presidency or to the head of the Post Office Department, a man so impatient of newspaper criticism that he would condescend to "blue tag" an opposition daily paper in order to cause delay in its reaching its subscribers, with resultant loss of prestige and revenues to such newspaper. If the people of the United States could be assured that a man of as high a character as the present Postmaster General would forever occupy the position, they might feel that the enactment of section 7 of the present law was a mere brutum fulmen, a harmless thunderbolt; but nevertheless the people would oppose the section on principle because they feel that no man, however high his character, however wise and prudent, should have such absolute power over the distribution of current intelligence. It is not fair to any Postmaster General to tempt him with the power to crush, cripple, or destroy an unfriendly publication, or, through the method of the "blue tag," to dislocate its avenues of reaching its subscribers, especially when we remember that his discretion may not be reviewed or reversed by any tribunal.

I have examined the authorities with some care, and have reached the conclusion that should this proposed section 7 become a part of the laws of the United States and should the Postmaster General under such law issue an order "blue tagging" a publication, and practically annihilating the same, no relief could be obtained on the part of the publication by resorting to a judicial tribunal.

In other words, if the Postmaster General misuses his power, or exercises the same oppressively, the publication discriminated against has no appeal.

I stated a moment ago—and I am not going to weary the Senate by reading decisions bearing upon the law of the case—but if any Postmaster General should enter an order blue-tagging, we will say, any particular publication, be it a daily or a weekly, however unjust such blue-tagging might be, however oppressive that order might be, there is no appeal to a judicial tribunal.

In solving this question the pertinent statutes to be considered are the following:

Section 388, Revised Statutes: Whereby an executive department of the Government is created, known as the Post Office Department, and the head of such department is known as the Postmaster General,

"who shall be the head thereof and shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate."

Section 396, Revised Statutes: Which provides that it shall be the duty of the Postmaster General:

(1) To establish and discontinue post offices; * * *

(9) To superintend generally the business of the department and execute all laws relative to the Postal Service.

Section 161, Revised Statutes: Which provides that the head of each department is authorized to prescribe regulations not inconsistent with law for the government of his department, conduct of its officers and clerks, the distribution and performance of its business, and the custody, use, and preservation of the records, papers, and property appertaining to it.

Section 3964, Revised Statutes: Which provides that all the waters of the United States during the time the mail is carried thereon, all railroads or parts of railroads which are now or hereafter may be in operation, all canals during the time the mail is carried thereon, all plank roads during the time the mail is carried thereon, and the country roads on which mail is carried to courthouses, etc., are all established as post roads.

Section 3965, Revised Statutes: Wherein the Postmaster General shall provide for carrying the mail on all post roads established by law as often as he, with due regard to productiveness and other circumstances, may think proper.

Section 3974, Revised Statutes: Wherein it is provided that, whenever, in the opinion of the Postmaster General, the Postal Service can not be safely continued, the revenues collected, or laws maintained on any post road, he may discontinue the service on such road or any part thereof until the same can be safely restored.

Section 4975, Revised Statutes: Which provides that the Postmaster General may, when he deems it advisable, contract for the transportation of the mails to and from any post office.

Section 3, chapter 180 (30 Stat. L., p. 355; 1 Supp., p. 246): Which provides that the Postmaster General shall, in all cases, decide upon what trains and in what manner the mails shall be conveyed.

Section 4 of the same act: Which provides that all cars or parts of cars used for the Railway Mail Service shall be of such style, length, and character, and furnished in such a manner as shall be required by the Postmaster General.

Section 4000, Revised Statutes: Which provides that every railway company carrying the mails shall carry on any train which may run over its road and without extra charge all mailable matter directed to be carried thereon with the person in charge of the same.

Section 4002 (as amended by 1 Supp., pp. 110, 187, and by the act of Mar. 2, 1907, and Oct. 4, 1910): The maximum rates to be paid to carriers for the transportation of the mails are fixed.

Section 13, act of July 12, 1876 (1 Supp., p. 110): Whereby a reduction of 20 per cent in these rates is made in the compensation of railroads enjoying Government land grants.

Section 3877, Revised Statutes: Whereby second-class mail matter is defined to embrace all matter exclusively in print and regularly issued at stated periods from a known office of publication without addition by writing, mark, or sign.

The provisions of paragraph 4 of the act of March 3, 1885 (1 Supp., 483): Whereby the rate on all such mail matter is fixed at 1 cent per pound or fraction thereof. (Even this 1 cent per pound on publications of the second class is not charged upon the distribution of one copy to each subscriber residing in the county where the same is printed.) (See sec. 26, act of Mar. 3, 1879; 1 Supp., 240.)

Section 3994, Revised Statutes: Wherein it is provided that when the amount of mail matter to be carried on any mail route is so great as to seriously retard the progress or endanger the security of the letter mail, or materially increase the cost of carriage at the ordinary rate of speed, the Postmaster General may provide for the separate carriage of the letter mail at the usual rate of speed; but the other mail matter shall not be delayed any more than is absolutely necessary, having due regard to the cost of expedition and the means at his disposal for effecting the same.

Section 3999, Revised Statutes: Wherein it is provided that if the Postmaster General is unable to contract for carrying the mail on any railway route at a compensation not exceeding the maximum rates herein provided, or for what he may deem a reasonable and fair compensation, he may separate the letter mail from the other mail and contract, either with or without advertising, for carrying such letter mail by horse express or otherwise, at the greatest speed that can reasonably be obtained, and for carrying the other mail in wagons, or otherwise, at a slower rate of speed.

Section 7, act of March 3, 1879 (1 Supp., 246): Wherein mailable matter is divided into four classes; sections 8, 14, 17, and 20 of said act define the four classes of mail matter; section 14 provides that the conditions upon which a publication shall be admitted to second-class matter are as follows:

"(1) It must regularly be issued at stated intervals and as frequently as four times a year, bearing date of issue, and be numbered consecutively.

"(2) It must be issued from a known office of publication.

"(3) It must be formed of printed paper sheets, without board, cloth, leather, or other substantial binding such as define printed books for preservation from periodical publications.

"(4) It must be originated and published for the dissemination of information of a public character or devoted to literature, the sciences, arts, or some special industry, and have a legitimate list of subscribers: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to admit to the second-class rate regular publications designed primarily for advertising purposes or for free circulation or for circulation at nominal rates."

From the foregoing statutes the following may clearly be deduced:

(1) That the Post Office Department is an executive branch of the Government, and the Postmaster General the head of the department.

(2) That the broadest possible discretion is vested in the Postmaster General in the management of the affairs of the Post Office Department.

(3) That substantially every highway, whether by water, by rail, or over the ordinary routes throughout the country, is a post road.

(4) That the Postmaster General is vested with power to determine over which of these post roads mail shall be carried. (Sec. 3965.)

(5) To decide upon what trains and in what manner the mails shall be conveyed (Sec. 3, 1st Supp., p. 246.)

(6) That the only limitation fixed upon him is the maximum amount of money which he shall pay to carriers for handling the mails, and the postal rates which shall be charged upon the different classes of mails.

DISCRETIONARY POWERS OF HEADS OF EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

The Supreme Court has sustained a fraud order of the Postmaster General directing the return to sender of all registered letters directed to a concern operating a plan by which a small number of members would necessarily receive a large profit at the expense of a larger number; the opinion does not, however, indicate clearly whether the court treated the Postmaster General's determination as final, or whether it was passing directly upon the question at issue. (Public Clearing House v. Coyne, 194 U. S., 497.)

The Supreme Court has also upheld a department order that mail directed, without a street address, to a corporate name shared by two concerns located in the same city should be delivered to the corporation having first adopted the name in question at that place; the court declined in this case "to interfere in the administration of a great department like that of the Post Office by an injunction, which directs the department how to conduct the business thereof, where the party asking for the injunction has no clear right to it." (Nat. Life Ins. Co. v. Nat. Life Ins. Co., 209 U. S., 317, 325; Central Trust Co. v. Central Trust Co., 216 U. S., 251.)

The courts will not review the determination of the Postmaster General in a doubtful case that a particular corporation is conducting a lottery; "the settlement of the question undoubtedly involved the exercise of judgment and discretion, and this very fact operates to take his duty out of the mere ministerial class, and therefore beyond the control or review of the judicial department of the Government by means of mandamus or injunction." (Enterprise Saving Association v. Zumstein, 67 Fed., 1000, 1006.)

"The law devolves on the Postmaster General, in the discharge of his executive functions, the duty of determining 'whether or not a corporation is engaged in fraudulent representations,' and the courts will not interfere with his action or reverse his finding where the complaining party has had a reasonable opportunity to be heard in its defense, unless the case on which the head of the department has acted is one where, upon the state of facts laid before the officer, it is legally impossible to hold that the complaining party was engaged in obtaining money through the mails by false or fraudulent representations, so that such a finding, when made, may be characterized not as an erroneous finding but rather as a mistake of law." (Missouri Drug Co. v. Wyman, 129 Fed., 623, 629.)

In the case of a fraud order against a person who had been acquitted on a criminal charge for the same offense, the court held that the acquittal was not res judicata; "there are many acts of executive officials which are not reviewable by the courts, and in a case of this character a preliminary injunction should not issue unless the court is clearly convinced that plaintiff will ultimately prevail." (Sanden v. Morgan, 225 Fed., 266, 269.)

In the case of a fraud order the court will merely inquire whether there was fraudulent or arbitrary action on the part of the Post Office Department, and whether there was an erroneous interpretation of the postal law. "It can not review his decision and substitute its judgment for his upon the questions of law and fact confided by law to his discretion." (Branaman v. Harris, 189 Fed., 461, 464.)

Where Congress had authorized the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to deport an alien in case he "shall be satisfied" that such alien "has been found in the United States in violation" of the immigration laws, the Supreme Court held that since there was substantial evidence on which the Secretary based his order, and "no contention that the hearing was not fairly conducted, the finding of the Secretary upon the question of fact is binding upon the courts," even though the criminal courts had acquitted the alien on the same charge. (Lewis v. Frick, 233 U. S., 291, 300, citing Low Wah Suey v. Backus, 225 U. S., 460, 468; Zakonaite v. Wolf, 226 U. S., 272, 275.)

SECOND-CLASS PRIVILEGES.

A.—SUPREME COURT.

The decision of the Postmaster General refusing to grant second-class privileges to a periodical of which each number was devoted to the work of one of the world's greatest musicians was upheld by the Supreme Court in the following words:

Where the decision of questions of fact is committed by Congress to the judgment and discretion of the head of a department, his decision thereon is conclusive; and even upon mixed questions of law and fact, or of law alone, his action will carry with it a strong presumption of its correctness, and the courts will not ordinarily review it, although they may have the power and will occasionally exercise the right of so doing. Upon this principle, and because we thought the question involved one of law rather than of fact, and one of great general importance, we have reviewed the action of the Postmaster General in holding serial novels to be books rather than periodicals; but it is not intended to intimate that in every case hereafter arising the question whether a certain publication shall be considered a book or a periodical shall be reviewed by this court. In such case the decision of the Post Office Department, rendered in the exercise of a reasonable discretion, will be treated as conclusive. (Bates v. Payne, 194 U. S., 106, 109.)

B.—LOWER FEDERAL COURTS.

Where the Postmaster General had refused second-class privileges to a certain periodical, the court, in refusing "to compel the Postmaster General to disregard the conclusion arrived at in the discharge of his official duty and readmit the publication to the mails as second-class matter," declared: "We think it sufficient to say that from its examination in the light of the arguments addressed to it, we are not convinced that Wiener Chic is a periodical in the ordinary meaning of the term." (U. S. ex rel. Reinach v. Cortelyou, 28 App. D. C., 570.)

Second-class mailing privileges may not be withdrawn without a hearing on that point; it is not sufficient that there has been a hearing with respect to the number of bona fide subscriptions. A determination of the number of bona fide subscriptions is final if made after a hearing, even though "no evidence" in support of the finding is given and "it is impossible for the court to determine how the conclusions were reached by the Postmaster General and whether these conclusions are correct and supported by proper proofs; but, as Congress has seen proper to intrust this entire matter to the Postmaster General, the courts are powerless to interfere." (Lewis Publishing Co. v. Wyman, 152 Fed., 787, 799. In this case the court indicated the belief that the power of the Postmaster General is parallel to that of the Secretary of Labor in immigration cases.)

DISCONTINUANCE OF POST OFFICES.

By the provisions of Revised Statutes 3864, "Congress, by necessary implication, authorized the Postmaster General to discontinue any post office whenever it should appear to him to be expedient and proper; and having exercised that discretion, it is not possible to hold that the discontinuance was unlawful." (Ware v. United States, 4 Wall., 617, 633.)

The Review of Reviews instituted an action. I quote from Federal Reporter, volume 192, page 352 et seq.:

REVIEW OF REVIEWS CO. AGAINST HITCHCOCK ET AL.

Ward, circuit judge. This is a motion for an injunction pendente lite against the defendants, who are, respectively, the United States Postmaster General and the United States postmaster at New York City, prohibiting them from carrying into effect an order of the department dated August 25, 1911. The defendants waive all questions of jurisdiction so that the motion may be disposed of.

The order prescribes that all periodicals issued monthly, semimonthly, or at longer intervals shall be labeled with blue tags and termed "Blue-tag matter," and that the same shall go by fast mail trains to Buffalo and Pittsburgh, and from those points by fast freight trains through a territory called the "Third contract section" to distributing points therein, if destined for points west of Chicago and Cincinnati, and again by fast mail trains if for points farther west.

The average cost to the Government for the transportation of second-class mail matter is 8 cents a pound, for which it charges only 1 cent a pound. The cost for transportation to far west points is much more than 8 cents a pound. The reason for the discrimination which the order makes in the transmission of different kinds of second-class matter is that the Government finds that it costs more to transport monthly and semimonthly periodicals than it does to transport weekly and daily periodicals. The average haul of the former is 1,048 miles, of the weekly 507 miles, and of the daily 271 miles. Curtailment of expense somewhere in the service is necessary, because of the very large annual deficiency. The order is intended to proportion the cost of the service to the Government more nearly to the charge it makes. The Postmaster General estimates that by this division of second-class mail matter the Government will save this year $1,400,000, and within the next three years $3,000,000 a year. The order affects an immense number of periodicals—according to the defendants, some 1,700—published at intervals of more than a week. The complainant publishes such a monthly periodical, called the American Review of Reviews, and its grievance is that the order gives a preference to weekly periodicals competing with it, in that they arrive at destination sooner than its periodical does. It is said that the Review of Reviews will arrive at distant points in the West, not on the 1st day of the month, as intended, but five or six days later, and so its discussion of contemporary events will be proportionately stale, and it will lose subscribers.

I assume for the purpose of this motion that the complainant will suffer irreparable injury, which leaves as the only question, Is the order illegal?

It is true that certain monthly trade periodicals have been exempted from the operation of the order, as to which the defendants say that they contain current market information which the public needs as speedily as possible. It is said, further, that a few monthly magazines which do not need the same speed as the Review of Reviews are also exempted. It is not apparent why these exemptions are made; but they do not injure the complainant in any way, as the periodicals are not competitors, and I have no doubt that upon application to the department they will be withdrawn.

The Postmaster General can not exclude from the mail as second class what is in fact second-class matter. (Payne v. Railway Publishing Co., 20 App. D. C., 581.) Nor can he refuse to deliver mail matter to the addressee, unless expressly authorized by Congress to do so. (School of Magnetic Healing v. McAnnulty, 187 U. S., 94; 23 Sup. Ct., 33; 47 L. Ed., 90.) And, of course, he can not charge more than the legal rate of 1 cent per pound for carrying second-class mail. The order under consideration does neither of these things. The complainant's mail matter is carried as second class and at second-class rates. The order requiring it to be transported in the "third contract section" by fast freight, instead of fast mail, seems to me reasonable. If the Postmaster General unfairly or from an improper motive were to relax the order as to certain periodicals, which is the intimation, no court could be expected to correct this unfairness by striking a reasonable order down, and likewise it would be no ground for securing to the complainant an improper exemption that some one else had been given it. Such a preference would be a pure matter of administration, to be corrected by the President, or, if necessary, by impeachment. (Art. II, sec. 4, U. S. Constitution.) It would not be a denial of the equal protection of the laws to the complainant, in violation of the fifth amendment to the Constitution.

The motion is denied.

That is the only case exactly in point I have been able to find.

Thus, when we perceive that courts are powerless to grant relief to an editor discriminated against, through the medium of the "blue-tag" system, we should refuse further to extend the operations of a system so fraught with possibilities of harm, oppression, and injustice.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does not the Senator recognize that the present law giving monthly magazines the privilege of sending mail matter through the mails at 1 cent a pound, when it costs the Government 5½ cents a pound, is a very great favor to them?

Mr. ASHURST. If we are going to put this controversy on the plane of saving money, let me observe that all the papers in the United States have circulation in their own county free, and I favor it. If you will abolish the free circulation in the county, you will save $700,000 a year. Is there a Senator here who will vote to abolish the county free circulation? No. Why not? Because it would destroy the ancient policy of this Government to encourage the dissemination of literature, so that we may have informed public opinion, because without an informed, enlightened public opinion the Republic is a failure. It is the historic policy of this Government from the days when Benjamin Franklin took charge of the postmastership of the Colonies, it has been our American policy to see that information was distributed, and distributed at a loss if necessary, but distributed to the people. It is better to have an informed public opinion than to have money in the Federal Treasury.

Of course, it would save money. The Army does not pay money dividends, the schools do not pay money dividends, but we have our moral, educated, learned men and women as dividends. The Navy does not pay profits, but it affords security to the country. The dividends of the Post Office are the dissemination of information among the people. It is a part of the policy of our American popular Government.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think the Senator's statement with respect to the circulation is good, and I have always believed in giving a low rate, but it does seem to me that when we have magazines that can be delayed probably only a day or two by reason of it we ought to have some regard to economy in the determination of that question.

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator is correct, let it apply to all classes. If it is deemed wise to increase the postal rates, let it apply to all of a class.

The publishers of the United States who have protested against the enactment of section 7 of the pending Post Office appropriation bill do not charge wrongful intent upon the part of the Post Office Department, or upon the part of those who drafted the bill. They do not believe it is the intention of the present Post Office Department or the present Postmaster General to abuse the power thus proposed to be given him. The publishers have the same confidence in his exalted character and his spirit of fairness that is so generally shared. But the publishers do believe that the lodgment of such vast power in the hands of one man—that man necessarily a member of a dominant political party and subject to the political pressure which can be brought to bear upon a man in his position—is a great injustice to the public, to the press, and to the Postmaster General as well.

They hold that no political party should lay itself open to the shadow of an intimation of a wish to enact laws that may militate against the distribution of free speech upon terms of exact equality.

Mr. President, I am going to conclude. I have already adverted to the efforts of the present Postmaster General to retrench and reduce expenditures to the lowest reasonable point, and have stated that such efforts and desires should challenge our admiration, yet, Mr. President, this is a matter more important than expense. The number of dollars that are to be counted in this question dwindle as so much worthless sand when compared to the principle here involved, and just as there are at times lawsuits that are more than lawsuits, when they become contests for the upholding and sustaining of an American principle or civil polity—just so this proposed legislation towers above the question of dollars, for it issues a challenge to the American principle of government. The issue dwarfs into insignificance the number of dollars that may be saved. I wish again to state that, in my opinion—I am not giving the figures accurately, but approximately—the amount saved each year if all the sections of the country were put under the "blue-tag" system would approximate $1,500,000, and I repeat that the amount saved has been $5,447,879 in a little over four years. But proposed legislation sometimes challenges a governmental system, and I can readily conceive that such legislation may be proposed in the best of good faith. But we can not for any reason depart from our ancient policy of rigidly adhering to the principle that all men are equal before the law, and that if the richest and most powerful newspaper in the land is privileged to go by mail, the small, obscure, struggling daily is entitled to the same privilege. By the same token, if a monthly magazine, with a large number of subscribers, with numerous opulent advertisers, devoted to the support of a certain cause, subsidized by influential and wealthy men, is permitted to go by mail, the struggling magazine, with few advertisers, with slender means, or perhaps on the verge of bankruptcy, advocating another and different, perhaps an unpopular, cause, is entitled to the same right and privilege.

The preservation of American liberty requires ceaseless effort and vigilance on the part of the citizens. The slightest relaxation or violation of the principle of absolute equality before the law may tide us over some slight present embarrassment and in the immediate future lead to some apparent, not real, advance and gain, but in the long future the precedent will arise to vex, plague, and perplex us.

It has been, I repeat, our historic American policy to encourage by low postal rates the easy and frequent dissemination of current intelligence. The extent to which this has proved successful in our American life should never for a moment be overlooked. Many magazine and newspaper enterprises, those with limited and slender resources as well as those which occupy more fortunate situations, have been established on the faith of our policy of low postal rates and easy and equal means of distribution. In this progressive age, when thoughtful persons are taking forward steps, we should do nothing which would in any way seriously hamper the circulation upon equal facilities and terms of useful and current information.

I was talking last Tuesday with a distinguished Senator of the United States, who told me that what to him was current was probably not current to any other Senator, to wit, that in the magazines he always read the advertisements first, and secured much valuable information from them. So what may be palatable to you, sir, or what may be timely to you, would not be at all timely to me. For myself, I do not usually read the advertisements. What some other Senators read, I scarcely read; but are you going to say that because the Postmaster General thinks that a certain particular class of articles is timely they may go by mail and that because he thinks a certain article, which, perchance, may criticize his policies, is untimely, it shall go by frieght? It resolves itself to a question of human nature. There never was a man who could be an impartial judge in his own case. The speeches we deliver here we think are timely. Others may not think so. What we read with avidity we say is timely. We want more of it. Any article praising a Senator he thinks is timely. Others may not give it the respect of a passing glance. I object to having any kind of censorship set up that will delay, impede, or obstruct the distribution of literature upon equal terms. If a change in the postal rates be thought wise, let it apply to all of a particular class. If new means and methods of transportation be thought expedient, let such means be adopted as will secure, without exception, equal opportunities to all. The object of placing on second-class matter a rate much below that of any other class of mail was for the very purpose of encouraging the circulation of news and literature of educational value. We lose money on the transportation of newspapers and magazines, but our returns, compensations, and rewards are reaped in an informed public and an unshackled press.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, would the Senator mind stating how much money we lose?

Mr. ASHURST. Well, I will try to give the figures.

Mr. BRYAN. I will give them to the Senator. The amount is $81,000,000 a year.

Mr. ASHURST. Very well. Will the Senator now vote to require all the magazines and all the newspapers to pay a cent a pound?

Mr. BRYAN. They do that now.

Mr. ASHURST. They circulate in the county of publication free. They do not pay anything when circulated within the county of publication.

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator need not worry about that. I have voted that way several times.

Mr. ASHURST. I know the Senator has. He is usually voting for the best interests of his country. He is a distinguished Senator. He has not only as to this measure but as to all others served the public and served his State and the country in a way and in a capacity that whatever may be his future his service here will afford him and his friends much gratification. He has here rendered valuable public service. I have finished, Mr. President.

I ask unanimous consent to include into the RECORD as an appendix an article by myself entitled—

HOW THE PEOPLE WON A FREE PRESS.

The privileges which the English-speaking people hold to be of inestimable value, to wit, suffrage—based upon patriotism and integrity instead of upon property—a free press, and freedom of religion, have not been easily acquired or easily maintained. The contest for a free and untrammeled press has been just as keen and intense as the contest for a free ballot.

In England, until the expiration of the licensing act, May 3, 1695, it was by no means certain that the publication of a newspaper was not illegal. The Court of Star Chamber delivered an opinion that it was unlawful to publish without license, and, indeed, near the close of the reign of Charles II, the judges pronounced that it was a misdemeanor at common law to publish any news of a political nature without the express approval of the licensors of the King.

Even John Milton's "Paradise Lost" narrowly escaped severe mutilation, and with difficulty obtained "leave to print" from the King's licensors.

A fair sample of the unfriendly attitude of the aristocratic classes toward the newspapers at this time is well disclosed by Sir Roger L'Estrange, who, in May, 1680, in first exercising his authority as licensor and censor of the press, and in explaining the attitude of the privileged and ruling classes, amongst other things, said:

"A newspaper makes the multitude too familiar with the actions and councils of their superiors and give them (the multitude) not only an itch but a kind of colorable right and license to be meddling with the Government."

Article I of the first amendment to the Constitution of the United States was a rampart reared for the protection of the American people against those persons who believed that republican governments were dangerous delusions, and for the security of the people against legislative, executive, and judicial usurpations, just as the Bill of Rights and the Great Charter were reared by the English people for their own protection against the encroachments of the royal prerogative.

PURPOSE TO SHIELD GOVERNMENT.

Even the Congress of the United States once passed a law—act of July 14, 1798—which declared it to be a crime to publish any false, scandalous article concerning Congress or the President, and making it unlawful to stir up sedition against the United States.

The manifest purpose of this sedition law was to shield the Federal Government from damaging criticism and, among other things, to assist in the reelection of John Adams as President by preventing any criticism of his administration. The sedition law was of a transient nature, limited to short duration, and expiration of effluxion of time on March 4, 1801.

The constitutionality of the sedition law was vigorously assailed with great ability and earnestness and was defended with equal vigor. This sedition law was impugned as being directly oppose to the letter and spirit of the Constitution of the United States and as wholly inconsistent with the rights of citizens and the liberty of the press.

It never came before the United States Supreme Court, but Mr. Vice President John C. Calhoun, writing in August, 1832, said that from the date of the formation of the Constitution, in 1787, down to 1832 only one question of a political character had been settled in the public opinion, and that that question was the unconstitutionality of the sedition law.

FREEDOM OF THE PRESS.

In some attempts to vindicate the sedition law of July 14, 1798 it was contended that the freedom of the press guaranteed by the first amendment to the Constitution of the United States was only such freedom as was guaranteed to the press by the common law of England, and that under and by the terms of this amendment to the Constitution Congress was simply prohibited from abridging the "common-law freedom" of the press.

A mere statement of this contention will at once disclose to our view its extreme danger and harmfulness, for had such a construction been adopted it would have guaranteed only a very narrow, restricted, or, rather, no freedom of the press, for, as above pointed out, the judges in England at the close of the reign of Charles II had pronounced it a misdemeanor to publish any news of a political nature without the authority of the duly appointed licensors.

It is difficult to estimate the number of prosecutions conducted under this sedition law, but sufficient it is to observe that each prosecution still further served to swell the tide of indignation against it and its authors, and the heat of popular resentment against the sedition law was undoubtedly one of the features of the campaign which promoted the triumph of Thomas Jefferson and the defeat of John Adams in 1800.

Of course, it will be remembered that "liberty of the press" does not mean that anyone is thereby licensed to print false scandals of other persons, but it simply means that all persons have the right to speak and print their opinions upon any subject whatever, without any prior restraint on or any subsequent penalty for publishing, so long as they do not injure another in his or her person, reputation, or property, and do not attempt forcibly to subvert the Government.

We in this age, who are not restrained to establish and publish a newspaper or print our sentiments therein, and who march in a phalanx on election day to the polling places, there to exercise our great American prerogative, seem to think that these rights were born with us, are inherent in us, and seemingly it never occurs to us that our patriotic ancestors gave up their liberty, shed their blood, and sacrificed their lives in order that we might enjoy these privileges. (New York American.)

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arizona.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I am advised that there are other Senators who desire to speak upon this section of the bill, and I am further advised that if the vote is taken this afternoon a demand for the yeas and nays will be made, which evidently will disclose the absence of a quorum. I fear that we shall not be able to get a quorum during this afternoon, and therefore I am going to ask unanimous consent that the bill may be temporarily laid aside, and I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (H. R. 14303) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask unanimous consent to give notice of a proposed amendment to Rule X of the Standing Rules of the Senate, amending Rule X, Special Orders, by inserting after the second paragraph of clause 2 of Rule X the following clause, to be numbered 3:

3. No Senator shall be permitted to give notice in advance that at a time named in the future he will address the Senate, and it shall be the duty of the Presiding Officer to enforce the provisions of this clause upon his own motion.

LAND IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. VARDAMAN (by request) submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 218), which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

Resolved, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and hereby are, directed to furnish to the Senate information as to the area, the assessed value of the ground, the assessed value of the improvements, and the yearly taxes payable on the following squares: 12; south of 12; 21, 22, 60, 61, 62, 83, 84, 87, 88, 104, 123, 124, 125, 128; north of 128; 144, 145, 146, 147, 222, 223, 251, 252, 317, 318, 326, 327, 343, 372, 373, 374, 403, 427, 452, 484; west of 484; 485; north of 516; south of 516; 517; north of 518; south of 518; 528, 529, 562, 563, 564, 567, 569, 625, 626, 627, 628, 629, 630, 631, 632, 633, 634.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

On motion of Mr. KERN, it was Ordered, That Senator HENRY F. HOLLIS, of New Hampshire, and Senator HENRY F. ASHURST, of Arizona, be, and are hereby, appointed members of the Committee on Education and Labor to fill the vacancies occasioned by the resignation of Senator UNDERWOOD and the death of the late Senator Shively, of Indiana.

RURAL CREDITS—CONFERENCE REPORT (S. DOC. NO. 472).

Mr. HOLLIS. I desire to submit the conference report on the rural-credits bill. It is a unanimous report, and I ask that it be printed as a document, and also that it be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The conference report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill S. 2986 to provide capital for agricultural development, to create a standard form of investment based upon farm mortgage, to equalize rates of interest upon farm loans, to furnish a market for United States bonds, to provide for the investment of postal savings deposits, to create Government depositaries and financial agents for the United States, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment to the title of the bill, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by the House insert the following:

"That the short title of this act shall be 'the Federal farm-loan act.' Its administration shall be under the direction and control of the Federal farm-loan board hereinafter created.

"DEFINITIONS.

"SEC. 2. That wherever the term 'first mortgage' is used in this act it shall be held to include such classes of first liens on farm lands as shall be approved by the Federal farm-loan board, and the credit instruments secured thereby. The term 'farm-loan bonds' shall be held to include all bonds secured by collateral deposited with a farm-loan registrar under the terms of this act; they shall be distinguished by the addition of the words 'Federal,' or 'joint stock,' as the case may be.

"FEDERAL FARM-LOAN BOARD.

"SEC. 3. That there shall be established at the seat of government in the Department of the Treasury a bureau charged with the execution of this act and of all acts amendatory thereof, to be known as the Federal farm-loan bureau, under the general supervision of a Federal farm-loan board.

"Said Federal farm-loan board shall consist of five members, including the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall be a member and chairman ex officio, and four members to be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Of the four members to be appointed by the President, not more than two shall be appointed from one political party, and all four of said members shall be citizens of the United States and shall devote their entire time to the business of the Federal farm-loan board; they shall receive an annual salary of $10,000 payable monthly, together with actual necessary traveling expenses.

"One of the members to be appointed by the President shall be designated by him to serve for two years, one for four years, one for six years, and one for eight years, and thereafter each member so appointed shall serve for a term of eight years, unless sooner removed for cause by the President. One of the members shall be designated by the President as the farm-loan commissioner, who shall be the active executive officer of said board. Each member of the Federal farm-loan board shall within 15 days after notice of his appointment take and subscribe to the oath of office.

"The first meeting of the Federal farm-loan board shall be held in Washington as soon as may be after the passage of this act, at a date and place to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

"No member of the Federal farm-loan board shall, during his continuance in office, be an officer or director of any other institution, association, or partnership engaged in banking, or in the business of making land-mortgage loans or selling land mortgages. Before entering upon his duties as a member of the Federal farm-loan board each member shall certify under oath to the President that he is eligible under this section.

"The President shall have the power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to fill any vacancy occurring in the membership of the Federal farm-loan board; if such vacancy shall be filled during the recess of the Senate a commission shall be granted which shall expire at the end of the next session.

"The Federal farm-loan board shall appoint a farm-loan registrar in each land-bank district to receive applications for issues of farm-loan bonds and to perform such other services as are prescribed by this act. It shall also appoint one or more land-bank appraisers for each land-bank district and as many land-bank examiners as it shall deem necessary. Farm-loan registrars, land-bank appraisers, and land-bank examiners appointed under this section shall be public officials and shall, during their continuance in office, have no connection with or interest in any other institution, association, or partnership engaged in banking or in the business of making land-mortgage loans or selling land mortgages: Provided, That this limitation shall not apply to persons employed by the board temporarily to do special work.

"The salaries and expenses of the Federal farm-loan board, and of farm-loan registrars and examiners authorized under this section, shall be paid by the United States. Land-bank appraisers shall receive such compensation as the Federal farm-loan board shall fix, and shall be paid by the Federal land banks and the joint-stock land banks which they serve, in such proportion and in such manner as the Federal farm-loan board shall order.

"The Federal farm-loan board shall be authorized and empowered to employ such attorneys, experts, assistants, clerks, laborers, and other employees as it may deem necessary to conduct the business of said board. All salaries and fees authorized in this section and not otherwise provided for shall be fixed in advance by said board and shall be paid in the same manner as the salaries of the Federal farm-loan board. All such attorneys, experts, assistants, clerks, laborers, and other employees, and all registrars, examiners, and appraisers shall be appointed without regard to the provisions of the act of January 16, 1883 (vol. 22, U. S. Stat. L., p. 403), and amendments thereto, or any rule or regulation made in pursuance thereof: Provided, That nothing herein shall prevent the President from placing said employees in the classified service.

"Every Federal land bank shall semiannually submit to the Federal farm-loan board a schedule showing the salaries or rates of compensation paid to its officers and employees.

"The Federal farm-loan board shall annually make a full report of its operations to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, who shall cause the same to be printed for the information of the Congress.

"The Federal farm-loan board shall from time to time require examinations and reports of conditions of all land banks established under the provisions of this act and shall publish consolidated statements of the results thereof. It shall cause to be made appraisals of farm lands as provided by this act and shall prepare and publish amortization tables which shall be used by national farm-loan associations and land banks organized under this act.

"The Federal farm-loan board shall prescribe a form for the statement of condition of national farm-loan associations and land banks under its supervision, which shall be filled out quarterly by each such association or bank and transmitted to said board.

"It shall be the duty of the Federal farm-loan board to prepare from time to time bulletins setting forth the principal features of this act and through the Department of Agriculture or otherwise to distribute the same, particularly to the press, to agricultural journals, and to farmers' organizations; to prepare and distribute in the same manner circulars setting forth the principles and advantages of amortized farm loans and the protection afforded debtors under this act, instructing farmers how to organize and conduct farm-loan associations, and advising investors of the merits and advantages of farm-loan bonds; and to disseminate in its discretion information for the further instruction of farmers regarding the methods and principles of cooperative credit and organization. Said board is hereby authorized to use a reasonable portion of the organization fund provided in section thirty-three of this Act for the objects specified in this paragraph, and is instructed to lay before the Congress at each session its recommendations for further appropriations to carry out said objects.

"FEDERAL LAND BANKS.

"SEC. 4. That as soon as practicable the Federal farm-loan board shall divide the continental United States, excluding Alaska, into twelve districts, which shall be known as Federal land-bank districts, and may be designated by number. Said districts shall be apportioned with due regard to the farm loan needs of the country, but no such district shall contain a fractional part of any State. The boundaries thereof may be readjusted from time to time in the discretion of said board.

"The Federal farm-loan board shall establish in each Federal land-bank district a Federal land bank, with its principal office located in such city within the district as said board shall designate. Each Federal land bank shall include in its title the name of the city in which it is located. Subject to the approval of the Federal farm-loan board, any Federal land bank may establish branches within the land-bank district.

"Each Federal land bank shall be temporarily managed by five directors appointed by the Federal farm-loan board. Said directors shall be citizens of the United States and residents of the district. They shall each give a surety bond, the premium on which shall be paid from the funds of the bank. They shall receive such compensation as the Federal farm-loan board shall fix. They shall choose from their number, by majority vote, a president, a vice president, a secretary, and a treasurer. They are further authorized and empowered to employ such attorneys, experts, assistants, clerks, laborers, and other employees as they may deem necessary, and to fix their compensation, subject to the approval of the Federal farm-loan board.

"Said temporary directors shall, under their hands, forthwith make an organization certificate, which shall specifically state:

"First. The name assumed by such bank.

"Second. The district within which its operations are to be carried on, and the particular city in which its principal office is to be located.

"Third. The amount of capital stock and the number of shares into which the same is to be divided: Provided, That every Federal land bank organized under this act shall by its articles of association permit an increase of its capital stock from time to time for the purpose of providing for the issue of shares to national farm-loan associations and stockholders who may secure loans through agents of Federal land banks in accordance with the provisions of this act.

"Fourth. The fact that the certificate is made to enable such persons to avail themselves of the advantages of this act. The organization certificate shall be acknowledged before a judge or clerk of some court of record or notary public and shall be, together with the acknowledgment thereof, authenticated by the seal of such court or notary, transmitted to the farm-loan commissioner, who shall record and carefully preserve the same in his office, where it shall be at all times open to public inspection.

"The Federal farm-loan board is authorized to direct such changes in or additions to any such organization certificate, not inconsistent with this act, as it may deem necessary or expedient.

"Upon duly making and filing such organization certificate the bank shall become, as from the date of the execution of its organization certificate, a body corporate, and as such, and in the name designated in the organization certificate, it shall have power—

"First. To adopt and use a corporate seal.

"Second. To have succession until it is dissolved by act of Congress or under the provisions of this act.

"Third. To make contracts.

"Fourth. To sue and be sued, complain, interplead, and defend, in any court of law or equity, as fully as natural persons.

"Fifth. To elect or appoint directors, and by its board of directors to elect a president and a vice president, appoint a secretary and a treasurer and other officers and employees, define their duties, require bonds of them, and fix the penalty thereof; by action of its board of directors dismiss such officers and employees, or any of them, at pleasure and appoint others to fill their places.

"Sixth. To prescribe, by its board of directors, subject to the supervision and regulation of the Federal farm-loan board, by-laws not inconsistent with law, regulating the manner in which its stock shall be transferred, its directors elected, its officers elected or appointed, its property transferred, its general business conducted, and the privileges granted to it by law exercised and enjoyed.

"Seventh. To exercise, by its board of directors or duly authorized officers or agents, subject to law, all such incidental powers as shall be necessary to carry on the business herein described.

"After the subscriptions to stock in any Federal land bank by national farm-loan associations, hereinafter authorized, shall have reached the sum of $100,000, the officers and directors of said land bank shall be chosen as herein provided and shall, upon becoming duly qualified, take over the management of said land bank from the temporary officers selected under this section.

"The board of directors of every Federal land bank shall be selected as hereinafter specified and shall consist of nine members, each holding office for three years. Six of said directors shall be known as local directors, and shall be chosen by and be representative of national farm-loan associations; and the remaining three directors shall be known as district directors, and shall be appointed by the Federal farm-loan board and represent the public interest.

"At least two months before each election the farm-loan commissioner shall notify each national farm-loan association in writing that such election is to be held, giving the number of directors to be elected for its district, and requesting each association to nominate one candidate for each director to be elected. Within 10 days of the receipt of such notice each association shall forward its nominations to said farm-loan commissioner. Said commissioner shall prepare a list of candidates for local directors, consisting of the 20 persons securing the highest number of votes from national farm-loan associations making such nominations.

"At least one month before said election said farm-loan commissioner shall mail to each national farm-loan association the list of candidates. The directors of each national farm-loan association shall cast the vote of said association for as many candidates on said list as there are vacancies to be filled, and shall forward said vote to the farm-loan commissioner within 10 days after said list of candidates is received by them. The candidates receiving the highest number of votes shall be elected as local directors. In case of a tie, the farm-loan commissioner shall determine the choice.

"The Federal farm-loan board shall designate one of the district directors to serve for three years and to act as chairman of the board of directors. It shall designate one of said directors to serve for a term of two years and one to serve for a term of one year. After the first appointments, each district director shall be appointed for a term of three years.

"At the first regular meeting of the board of directors of each Federal land bank it shall be the duty of the local directors to designate two of the local directors whose term of office shall expire in one year from the date of such meeting, two whose term of office shall expire in two years from said date, and two whose term of office shall expire in three years from said date. Thereafter every local director of a Federal land bank chosen as hereinbefore provided shall hold office for a term of three years. Vacancies that may occur in the board of directors shall be filled for the unexpired term in the manner provided for the original selection of such directors.

"Directors of Federal land banks shall have been for at least two years residents of the district for which they are appointed or elected, and at least one district director shall be experienced in practical farming and actually engaged at the time of his appointment in farming operations within the district. No director of a Federal land bank shall, during his continuance in office, act as an officer, director, or employee of any other institution, association, or partnership engaged in banking or in the business of making or selling land mortgage loans.

"Directors of Federal land banks shall receive, in addition to any compensation otherwise provided, a reasonable allowance for necessary expenses in attending meetings of their respective boards, to be paid by the respective Federal land banks. Any compensation that may be provided by boards of directors of Federal land banks for directors, officers, or employees shall be subject to the approval of the Federal farm-loan board.

"CAPITAL STOCK OF FEDERAL LAND BANKS.

"SEC. 5. That every Federal land bank shall have, before beginning business, a subscribed capital of not less than $750,000. The Federal farm-loan board is authorized to prescribe the times and conditions of the payment of subscriptions to capital stock, to reject any subscription in its discretion, and to require subscribers to furnish adequate security for the payment thereof.

"The capital stock of each Federal land bank shall be divided into shares of $5 each, and may be subscribed for and held by any individual, firm, or corporation, or by the Government of any State or of the United States.

"Stock held by national farm-loan associations shall not be transferred or hypothecated, and the certificates therefor shall so state.

"Stock owned by the Government of the United States in Federal land banks shall receive no dividends, but all other stock shall share in dividend distributions without preference. Each national farm-loan association and the Government of the United States shall be entitled to one vote for each share of stock held by it in deciding all questions at meetings of shareholders, and no other shareholder shall be permitted to vote. Stock owned by the United States shall be voted by the farm-loan commissioner, as directed by the Federal farm-loan board.

"It shall be the duty of the Federal farm-loan board, as soon as practicable after the passage of this act, to open books of subscription for the capital stock of a Federal land bank in each Federal land-bank district. If within 30 days after the opening of said books any part of the minimum capitalization of $750,000 herein prescribed for Federal land banks shall remain unsubscribed, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to subscribe the balance thereof on behalf of the United States, said subscription to be subject to call in whole or in part by the board of directors of said land bank upon 30 days' notice with the approval of the Federal farm-loan board; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to take out shares corresponding to the unsubscribed balance as called, and to pay for the same out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. Thereafter no stock shall be issued except as hereinafter provided.

"After the subscriptions to capital stock by national farm-loan associations shall amount to $750,000 in any Federal land bank, said bank shall apply semiannually to the payment and retirement of the shares of stock which were issued to represent the subscriptions to the original capital 25 per cent of all sums thereafter subscribed to capital stock until all such original capital stock is retired at par.

"At least 25 per cent of that part of the capital of any Federal land bank for which stock is outstanding in the name of national farm-loan associations shall be held in quick assets, and may consist of cash in the vaults of said land bank, or in deposits in member banks of the Federal Reserve System, or in readily marketable securities which are approved under rules and regulations of the Federal farm-loan board: Provided, That not less than 5 per cent of such capital shall be invested in United States Government bonds.

"GOVERNMENT DEPOSITARIES.

"SEC. 6. That all Federal land banks and joint-stock land banks organized under this act, when designated for that purpose by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall be depositaries of public money, except receipts from customs, under such regulations as may be prescribed by said Secretary; and they may also be employed as financial agents of the Government; and they shall perform all such reasonable duties, as depositaries of public money and financial agents of the Government, as may be required of them. And the Secretary of the Treasury shall require of the Federal land banks and joint-stock land banks thus designated satisfactory security, by the deposit of United States bonds or otherwise, for the safekeeping and prompt payment of the public money deposited with them, and for the faithful performance of their duties as financial agents of the Government. No Government funds deposited under the provisions of this section shall be invested in mortgage loans or farm-loan bonds.

"NATIONAL FARM-LOAN ASSOCIATIONS.

"SEC. 7. That corporations, to be known as national farm-loan associations, may be organized by persons desiring to borrow money on farm-mortgage security under the terms of this act. Such persons shall enter into articles of association which shall specify in general terms the object for which the association is formed and the territory within which its operations are to be carried on, and which may contain any other provision, not inconsistent with law, which the association may see fit to adopt for the regulation of its business and the conduct of its affairs. Said articles shall be signed by the persons uniting to form the association, and a copy thereof shall be forwarded to the Federal land bank for the district, to be filed and preserved in its office.

"Every national farm-loan association shall elect, in the manner prescribed for the election of directors of national banking associations, a board of not less than five directors, who shall hold office for the same period as directors of national banking associations. It shall be the duty of said board of directors to choose in such manner as they may prefer a secretary-treasurer, who shall receive such compensation as said board of directors shall determine. The board of directors shall elect a president, a vice president, and a loan committee of three members.

"The directors and all officers except the secretary-treasurer shall serve without compensation, unless the payment of salaries to them shall be approved by the Federal farm-loan board. All officers and directors except the secretary-treasurer shall, during their term of office, be bona fide residents of the territory within which the association is authorized to do business, and shall be shareholders of the association.

"It shall be the duty of the secretary-treasurer of every national farm-loan association to act as custodian of its funds and to deposit the same in such bank as the board of directors may designate, to pay over to borrowers all sums received for their account from the Federal land bank upon first mortgage, as in this act prescribed, and to meet all other obligations of the association, subject to the orders of the board of directors and in accordance with the by-laws of the association. It shall be the duty of the secretary-treasurer, acting under the direction of the national farm-loan association, to collect, receipt for, and transmit to the Federal land bank payments of interest, amortization installments, or principal arising out of loans made through the association. He shall be the custodian of the securities, records, papers, certificates of stock, and all documents relating to or bearing upon the conduct of the affairs of the association. He shall furnish a suitable surety bond, to be prescribed and approved by the Federal farm-loan board for the proper performance of the duties imposed upon him under this act, which shall cover prompt collection and transmission of funds. He shall make a quarterly report to the Federal farm-loan board upon forms to be provided for that purpose. Upon request from said board, said secretary-treasurer shall furnish information regarding the condition of the national farm-loan association for which he is acting and he shall carry out all duly authorized orders of said board. He shall assure himself from time to time that the loans made through the national farm-loan association, of which he is an officer, are applied to the purposes set forth in the application of the borrower as approved, and shall forthwith report to the land bank of the district any failure of any borrower to comply with the terms of his application or mortgage. He shall also ascertain and report to said bank the amount of any delinquent taxes on land mortgaged to said bank and the name of the delinquent.

"The reasonable expenses of the secretary-treasurer, the loan committee, and other officers and agents of national farm-loan associations, and the salary of the secretary-treasurer, shall be paid from the general funds of the association, and the board of directors is authorized to set aside such sums as it shall deem requisite for that purpose and for other expenses of said association. When no such funds are available, the board of directors may levy an assessment on members in proportion to the amount of stock held by each, which may be repaid as soon as funds are available, or it may secure an advance from the Federal land bank of the district, to be repaid with interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, from dividends belonging to said association. Said Federal land bank is hereby authorized to make such advance and to deduct such repayment.

"Ten or more natural persons who are the owners, or about to become the owners, of farm land qualified as security for a mortgage loan under section 12 of this act, may unite to form a national farm-loan association. They shall organize subject to the requirements and the conditions specified in this section and in section 4 of this act, so far as the same may be applicable: Provided, That the board of directors may consist of five members only, and instead of a secretary and a treasurer there shall be a secretary-treasurer, who need not be a shareholder of the association.

"When the articles of association are forwarded to the Federal land bank of the district as provided in this section, they shall be accompanied by the written report of the loan committee as required in section 10 of this act, and by an affidavit stating that each of the subscribers is the owner, or is about to become the owner, of farm land qualified under section 12 of this act as the basis of a mortgage loan; that the loan desired by each person is not more than $10,000, nor less than $100, and that the aggregate of the desired loans is not less than $20,000; that said affidavit is accompanied by a subscription to stock in the Federal land bank equal to 5 per cent of the aggregate sum desired on mortgage loans; and that a temporary organization of said association has been formed by the election of a board of directors, a loan committee, and a secretary-treasurer who subscribes to said affidavit, giving his residence and post-office address.

"Upon receipt of such articles of association, with the accompanying affidavit and stock subscription, the directors of said Federal land bank shall send an appraiser to investigate the solvency and character of the applicants and the value of their lands, and shall then determine whether in their judgment a charter should be granted to such association. They shall forward such articles of association and the accompanying affidavit to the Federal farm-loan board with their recommendation. If said recommendation is unfavorable, the charter shall be refused.

"If said recommendation is favorable, the Federal farm-loan board shall thereupon grant a charter to the applicants therefor, designating the territory in which such association may make loans, and shall forward said charter to said applicants through said Federal land bank: Provided, That said Federal farm-loan board may for good cause shown in any case refuse to grant a charter.

"Upon receipt of its charter such national farm-loan association shall be authorized and empowered to receive from the Federal land bank of the district sums to be loaned to its members under the terms and conditions of this act.

"Whenever any national farm-loan association shall desire to secure for any member a loan on first mortgage from the Federal land bank of its district it shall subscribe for capital stock of said land bank to the amount of 5 per cent of such loan, such subscription to be paid in cash upon the granting of the loan by said land bank. Such capital stock shall be held by said land bank as collateral security for the payment of said loan, but said association shall be paid any dividends accruing and payable on said capital stock while it is outstanding. Such stock may, in the discretion of the directors, and with the approval of the Federal farm-loan board, be paid off at par and retired, and it shall be so paid off and retired upon full payment of the mortgage loan.

"In such case the national farm-loan association shall pay off at par and retire the corresponding shares of its stock which were issued when said land-bank stock was issued.

"The capital stock of a Federal land bank shall not be reduced to an amount less than 5 per cent of the principal of the outstanding farm-loan bonds issued by it.

"CAPITAL STOCK OF NATIONAL FARM-LOAN ASSOCIATIONS.

"SEC. 8. That the shares in national farm-loan associations shall be of the par value of $5 each.

"Every shareholder shall be entitled to one vote on each share of stock held by him at all elections of directors and in deciding all questions at meetings of shareholders: Provided, That the maximum number of votes which may be cast by any one shareholder shall be 20.

"No persons but borrowers on farm-land mortgages shall be members or shareholders of national farm-loan associations. Any person desiring to borrow on farm-land mortgage through a national farm-loan association shall make application for membership and shall subscribe for shares of stock in such farm-loan association to an amount equal to 5 per cent of the face of the desired loan, said subscription to be paid in cash upon the granting of the loan. If the application for membership is accepted and the loan is granted, the applicant shall, upon full payment therefor, become the owner of one share of capital stock in said loan association for each $100 of the face of his loan, or any major fractional part thereof. Said capital stock shall be paid off at par and retired upon full payment of said loan. Said capital stock shall be held by said association as collateral security for the payment of said loan, but said borrower shall be paid any dividends accruing and payable on said capital stock while it is outstanding.

"Every national farm-loan association formed under this act shall by its articles of association provide for an increase of its capital stock from time to time for the purpose of securing additional loans for its members and providing for the issue of shares to borrowers in accordance with the provisions of this act. Such increases shall be included in the quarterly reports to the Federal farm-loan board.

"NATIONAL FARM LOAN ASSOCIATIONS—SPECIAL PROVISIONS.

"SEC. 9. That any person whose application for membership is accepted by a national farm loan association shall be entitled to borrow money on farm-land mortgage upon filing his application in accordance with section 8 and otherwise complying with the terms of this act whenever the Federal land bank of the district has funds available for that purpose, unless said land bank or the Federal farm-loan board shall, in its discretion, otherwise determine.

"Any person desiring to secure a loan through a national farm loan association under the provisions of this act may, at his option, borrow from the Federal land bank through such association the sum necessary to pay for shares of stock subscribed for by him in the national farm loan association, such sum to be made a part of the face of the loan and paid off in amortization payments: Provided, however, That such addition to the loan shall not be permitted to increase said loan above the limitation imposed in subsection fifth of section 12.

"Subject to rules and regulations prescribed by the Federal farm-loan board, any national farm loan association shall be entitled to retain as a commission from each interest payment on any loan indorsed by it an amount to be determined by said board not to exceed one-eighth of 1 per cent semiannually upon the unpaid principal of said loan, any amounts so retained as commissions to be deducted from dividends payable to such farm loan association by the Federal land bank, and to make application to the land bank of the district for loans not exceeding in the aggregate one-fourth of its total stock holdings in said land bank. The Federal land banks shall have power to make such loans to associations applying therefor and to charge interest at a rate not exceeding 6 per cent per annum.

"Shareholders of every national farm loan association shall be held individually responsible, equally and ratably, and not one for another, for all contracts, debts, and engagements of such association to the extent of the amount of stock owned by them at the par value thereof, in addition to the amount paid in and represented by their shares.

"After a charter has been granted to a national farm-loan association, any natural person who is the owner, or about to become the owner, of farm land qualified under section 12 of this act as the basis of a mortgage loan, and who desires to borrow on a mortgage of such farm land, may become a member of the association by a two-thirds vote of the directors upon subscribing for one share of the capital stock of such association for each $100 of the face of his proposed loan or any major fractional part thereof. He shall at the same time file with the secretary-treasurer his application for a mortgage loan, giving the particulars required by section 12 of this act.

"APPRAISAL.

"SEC. 10. That whenever an application for a mortgage loan is made to a national farm-loan association, it shall be first referred to the loan committee provided for in section 7 of this act. Said loan committee shall examine the land which is offered as security for the desired loan and shall make a detailed written report signed by all three members, giving the appraisal of said land as determined by them, and such other information as may be required by rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Federal farm-loan board. No loan shall be approved by the directors unless said loan committee agrees upon a favorable report.

"The written report of said loan committee shall be submitted to the Federal land bank, together with the application for the loan, and the directors of said land bank shall examine said written report when they pass upon the loan application which it accompanies, but they shall not be bound by said appraisal.

"Before any mortgage loan is made by any Federal land bank, or joint-stock land bank, it shall refer the application and written report of the loan committee to one or more of the land-bank appraisers appointed under the authority of section 3 of this act, and such appraiser or appraisers shall investigate and make a written report upon the land offered as security for said loan. No such loan shall be made by said land bank unless said written report is favorable.

"Forms for appraisal reports for farm loan associations and land banks shall be prescribed by the Federal farm-loan board.

"Land-bank appraisers shall make such examinations and appraisals and conduct such investigations, concerning farm-loan bonds and first mortgages, as the Federal farm-loan board shall direct.

"No borrower under this act shall be eligible as an appraiser under this section, but borrowers may act as members of a loan committee in any case where they are not personally interested in the loan under consideration. When any member of a loan committee or of a board of directors is interested, directly or indirectly, in a loan, a majority of the board of directors of any national farm-loan association shall appoint a substitute to act in his place in passing upon such loan.

"POWERS OF NATIONAL FARM-LOAN ASSOCIATIONS.

"SEC. 11. That every national farm-loan association shall have power:

"First. To indorse, and thereby become liable for the payment of, mortgages taken from its shareholders by the Federal land bank of its district.

"Second. To receive from the Federal land bank of its district funds advanced by said land bank, and to deliver said funds to its shareholders on receipt of first mortgages qualified under section 12 of this act.

"Third. To acquire and dispose of such property, real or personal, as may be necessary or convenient for the transaction of its business.

"Fourth. To issue certificates against deposits of current funds, bearing interest for not longer than one year, at not to exceed 4 per cent per annum after 6 days from date, convertible into farm-loan bonds when presented at the Federal land bank of the district in the amount of $25 or any multiple thereof. Such deposits, when received, shall be forthwith transmitted to said land bank, and be invested by it in the purchase of farm-loan bonds issued by a Federal land bank or in first mortgages as defined by this act.

"RESTRICTIONS ON LOANS BASED ON FIRST MORTGAGES.

"SEC. 12. That no Federal land bank organized under this act shall make loans except upon the following terms and conditions:

"First. Said loans shall be secured by duly recorded first mortgages on farm land within the land-bank district in which the bank is situated.

"Second. Every such mortgage shall contain an agreement providing for the repayment of the loan on an amortization plan by means of a fixed number of annual or semiannual installments sufficient to cover, first, a charge on the loan, at a rate not exceeding the interest rate in the last series of farm-loan bonds issued by the land bank making the loan; second, a charge for administration and profits at a rate not exceeding 1 per cent per annum on the unpaid principal, said two rates combined constituting the interest rate on the mortgage; and, third, such amounts to be applied on the principal as will extinguish the debt within an agreed period, not less than 5 years nor more than 40 years: Provided, That after 5 years from the date upon which a loan is made additional payments in sums of $25 or any multiple thereof for the reduction of the principal, or the payment of the entire principal, may be made on any regular installment date under the rules and regulations of the Federal farm-loan board: And provided further, That before the first issue of farm-loan bonds by any land bank the interest rate on mortgages may be determined in the discretion of said land bank subject to the provisions and limitations of this act.

"Third. No loan on mortgage shall be made under this act at a rate of interest exceeding 6 per cent per annum, exclusive of amortization payments.

"Fourth. Such loans may be made for the following purposes and for no other:

"(a) To provide for the purchase of land for agricultural uses.

"(b) To provide for the purchase of equipment, fertilizers, and live stock necessary for the proper and reasonable operation of the mortgaged farm; the term 'equipment' to be defined by the Federal farm-loan board.

"(c) To provide buildings and for the improvement of farm lands; the term 'improvement' to be defined by the Federal farm-loan board.

"(d) To liquidate indebtedness of the owner of the land mortgaged, existing at the time of the organization of the first national farm-loan association established in or for the county in which the land mortgaged is situated, or indebtedness subsequently incurred for purposes mentioned in this section.

"Fifth. No such loan shall exceed 50 per cent of the value of the land mortgaged and 20 per cent of the value of the permanent, insured improvements thereon, said value to be ascertained by appraisal, as provided in section 10 of this act. In making said appraisal the value of the land for agricultural purposes shall be the basis of appraisal and the earning power of said land shall be a principal factor.

"A reappraisal may be permitted at any time in the discretion of the Federal land bank, and such additional loan may be granted as such reappraisal will warrant under the provisions of this paragraph. Whenever the amount of the loan applied for exceeds the amount that may be loaned under the appraisal as herein limited, such loan may be granted to the amount permitted under the terms of this paragraph without requiring a new application or appraisal.

"Sixth. No such loan shall be made to any person who is not at the time, or shortly to become, engaged in the cultivation of the farm mortgaged. In case of the sale of the mortgaged land, the Federal land bank may permit said mortgage and the stock interests of the vendor to be assumed by the purchaser. In case of the death of the mortgagor, his heir or heirs, or his legal representative or representatives, shall have the option, within 60 days of such death, to assume the mortgage and stock interests of the deceased.

"Seventh. The amount of loans to any one borrower shall in no case exceed a maximum of $10,000, nor shall any loan be for a less sum than $100.

"Eighth. Every applicant for a loan under the terms of this act shall make application on a form to be prescribed for that purpose by the Federal farm-loan board, and such applicant shall state the objects to which the proceeds of said loan are to be applied, and shall afford such other information as may be required.

"Ninth. Every borrower shall pay simple interest on defaulted payments at the rate of 8 per cent per annum, and by express covenant in his mortgage deed shall undertake to pay when due all taxes, liens, judgments, or assessments which may be lawfully assessed against the land mortgaged. Taxes, liens, judgments, or assessments not paid when due, and paid by the mortgagee, shall become a part of the mortgage debt and shall bear simple interest at the rate of 8 per cent per annum. Every borrower shall undertake to keep insured to the satisfaction of the Federal farm-loan board all buildings the value of which was a factor in determining the amount of the loan. Insurance shall be made payable to the mortgagee as its interest may appear at time of loss, and, at the option of the mortgagor and subject to general regulations of the Federal farm-loan board, sums so received may be used to pay for reconstruction of the buildings destroyed.

"Tenth. Every borrower who shall be granted a loan under the provisions of this act shall enter into an agreement, in form and under conditions to be prescribed by the Federal farm-loan board, that if the whole or any portion of his loan shall be expended for purposes other than those specified in his original application, or if the borrower shall be in default in respect to any condition or covenant of the mortgage, the whole of said loan shall, at the option of the mortgagee, become due and payable forthwith: Provided, That the borrower may use part of said loan to pay for his stock in the farm-loan association, and the land bank holding such mortgage may permit said loan to be used for any purpose specified in subsection fourth of this section.

"Eleventh. That no loan or the mortgage securing same shall be impaired or invalidated by reason of the exercise of any power by any Federal land bank or national farm-loan association in excess of the powers herein granted or any limitations thereon.

"Funds transmitted to farm-loan associations by Federal land banks to be loaned to its members shall be in current funds, or farm-loan bonds, at the option of the borrower.

"POWERS OF FEDERAL LAND BANKS.

"SEC. 13. That every Federal land bank shall have power, subject to the limitations and requirements of this act—

"First. To issue, subject to the approval of the Federal farm-loan board, and to sell farm-loan bonds of the kinds authorized in this act, to buy the same for its own account, and to retire the same at or before maturity.

"Second. To invest such funds as may be in its possession in the purchase of qualified first mortgages on farm lands situated within the Federal land-bank district within which it is organized or for which it is acting.

"Third. To receive and to deposit in trust with the farm-loan registrar for the district, to be by him held as collateral security for farm-loan bonds, first mortgages upon farm land qualified under section 12 of this act, and to empower national farm-loan associations, or duly authorized agents, to collect and immediately pay over to said land banks the dues, interest, amortization installments, and other sums payable under the terms, conditions, and covenants of the mortgages and of the bonds secured thereby.

"Fourth. To acquire and dispose of—

"(a) Such property, real or personal, as may be necessary or convenient for the transaction of its business, which, however, may be in part leased to others for revenue purposes.

"(b) Parcels of land acquired in satisfaction of debts or purchased at sales under judgments, decrees, or mortgages held by it. But no such bank shall hold title and possession of any real estate purchased or acquired to secure any debt due to it, for a longer period than five years, except with the special approval of the Federal farm-loan board in writing.

"Fifth. To deposit its securities, and its current funds subject to check, with any member bank of the Federal Reserve System, and to receive interest on the same as may be agreed.

"Sixth. To accept deposits of securities or of current funds from national farm-loan associations holding its shares, but to pay no interest on such deposits.

"Seventh. To borrow money, to give security therefor, and to pay interest thereon.

"Eighth. To buy and sell United States bonds.

"Ninth. To charge applicants for loans and borrowers, under rules and regulations promulgated by the Federal farm-loan board, reasonable fees not exceeding the actual cost of appraisal and determination of title. Legal fees and recording charges imposed by law in the State where the land to be mortgaged is located may also be included in the preliminary costs of negotiating mortgage loans. The borrower may pay such fees and charges or he may arrange with the Federal land bank making the loan to advance the same, in which case said expenses shall be made a part of the face of the loan and paid off in amortization payments. Such addition to the loan shall not be permitted to increase said loan above the limitations provided in section 12.

"RESTRICTIONS ON FEDERAL LAND BANKS.

"SEC. 14. That no Federal land bank shall have power—

"First. To accept deposits of current funds payable upon demand except from its own stockholders, or to transact any banking or other business not expressly authorized by the provisions of this act.

"Second. To loan on first mortgage except through national farm-loan associations as provided in section 7 and section 8 of this act, or through agents as provided in section 15.

"Third. To accept any mortgages on real estate except first mortgages created subject to all limitations imposed by section 12 of this act, and those taken as additional security for existing loans.

"Fourth. To issue or obligate itself for outstanding farm-loan bonds in excess of twenty times the amount of its capital and surplus, or to receive from any national farm-loan association additional mortgages when the principal remaining unpaid upon mortgages already received from such association shall exceed twenty times the amount of its capital stock owned by such association.

"Fifth. To demand or receive, under any form or pretense, any commission or charge not specifically authorized in this act.

"AGENTS OF FEDERAL LAND BANKS.

"SEC. 15. That whenever, after this act shall have been in effect one year, it shall appear to the Federal farm-loan board that national farm-loan associations have not been formed, and are not likely to be formed, in any locality, because of peculiar local conditions, said board may, in its discretion, authorize Federal land banks to make loans on farm lands through agents approved by said board.

"Such loans shall be subject to the same conditions and restrictions as if the same were made through national farm-loan associations, and each borrower shall contribute 5 per cent of the amount of his loan to the capital of the Federal land bank, and shall become the owner of as much capital stock of the land bank as such contribution shall warrant.

"No agent other than a duly incorporated bank, trust company, mortgage company, or savings institution, chartered by the State in which it has its principal office, shall be employed under the provisions of this section.

"Federal land banks may pay to such agents the actual expense of appraising the land offered as security for a loan, examining and certifying the title thereof, and making, executing, and recording the mortgage papers; and in addition may allow said agents not to exceed one-half of 1 per cent per annum upon the unpaid principal of said loan, such commission to be deducted from dividends payable to the borrower on his stock in the Federal land bank.

"Actual expenses paid to agents under the provisions of this section shall be added to the face of the loan and paid off in amortization payments subject to the limitations provided in subsection 9 of section 13 of this act.

"Said agents, when required by the Federal land banks, shall collect and forward to such banks without charge all interest and amortization payments on loans indorsed by them.

"Any agent negotiating any such loan shall indorse the same and become liable for the payment thereof, and for any default by the mortgagor, on the same terms and under the same penalties as if the loan had been originally made by said agent as principal and sold by said agent to said land bank, but the aggregate of the unpaid principal of mortgage loans received from any such agent shall not exceed ten times its capital and surplus.

"If at any time the district represented by any agent under the provisions of this section shall, in the judgment of the Federal farm-loan board, be adequately served by national farm-loan associations, no further loans shall be negotiated therein by agents under this section.

"JOINT-STOCK LAND BANKS.

"SEC. 16. That corporations, to be known as joint-stock land banks, for carrying on the business of lending on farm-mortgage security and issuing farm-loan bonds, may be formed by any number of natural persons not less than 10. They shall be organized subject to the requirements and under the conditions set forth in section 4 of this act, so far as the same may be applicable: Provided, That the board of directors of every joint-stock land bank shall consist of not less than five members.

"Shareholders of every joint-stock land bank organized under this act shall be held individually responsible, equally and ratably, and not one for another, for all contracts, debts, and engagements of such bank to the extent of the amount of stock owned by them at the par value thereof, in addition to the amount paid in and represented by their shares.

"Except as otherwise provided, joint-stock land banks shall have the powers of, and be subject to all the restrictions and conditions imposed on, Federal land banks by this act, so far as such restrictions and conditions are applicable: Provided, however, That the Government of the United States shall not purchase or subscribe for any of the capital stock of any such bank; and each shareholder of any such bank shall have the same voting privileges as holders of shares in national banking associations.

"No joint-stock land bank shall have power to issue or obligate itself for outstanding farm-loan bonds in excess of 15 times the amount of its capital and surplus or to receive deposits or to transact any banking or other business not expressly authorized by the provisions of this act.

"No joint-stock land bank shall be authorized to do business until capital stock to the amount of at least $250,000 has been subscribed, one-half thereof paid in cash and the balance subject to call by the board of directors, and a charter has been issued to it by the Federal farm-loan board.

"No joint-stock land bank shall issue any bonds until after the capital stock is entirely paid up.

"Farm-loan bonds issued by joint-stock land banks shall be so engraved as to be readily distinguished in form and color from farm loan bonds issued by Federal land banks, and shall otherwise bear such distinguishing marks as the Federal farm-loan board shall direct.

"Joint-stock land banks shall not be subject to the provisions of subsection (b) of section 17 of this act as to interest rates on mortgage loans or farm loan bonds, nor to the provisions of subsections 1, 4, 6, 7, and 10 of section 12 as to restrictions on mortgage loans: Provided, however, That no loans shall be made which are not secured by first mortgages on farm lands within the State in which such joint-stock land bank has its principal office, or within some one State contiguous to such State. Such joint-stock land banks shall be subject to all other restrictions on mortgage loans imposed on Federal land banks in section 12 of this act.

"Joint-stock land banks shall in no case charge a rate of interest on farm loans exceeding by more than 1 per cent the rate of interest established for the last series of farm loan bonds issued by them.

"Joint-stock land banks shall in no case demand or receive under any form or pretense any commission or charge not specifically authorized in this act.

"Each joint-stock land bank organized under this act shall have authority to issue bonds based upon mortgages taken by it in accordance with the terms of this act. Such bonds shall be in form prescribed by the Federal farm-loan board, and it shall be stated in such bonds that such bank is organized under section 16 of this act, is under Federal supervision, and operates under the provisions of this act.

"POWERS OF FEDERAL FARM-LOAN BOARD.

"SEC. 17. That the Federal farm-loan board shall have power—

"(a) To organize and charter Federal land banks, and to charter national farm-loan associations and joint-stock land banks subject to the provisions of this act and in its discretion to authorize them to increase their capital stock.

"(b) To review and alter at its discretion the rate of interest to be charged by Federal land banks for loans made by them under the provisions of this act, said rates to be uniform so far as practicable.

"(c) To grant or refuse to Federal land banks or joint-stock land banks authority to make any specific issue of farm-loan bonds.

"(d) To make rules and regulations respecting the charges made to borrowers on loans under this act for expenses in appraisal, determination of title, and recording.

"(e) To require reports and statements of condition and to make examinations of all banks or associations doing business under the provisions of this act.

"(f) To prescribe the form and terms of farm-loan bonds, and the form, terms, and penal sums of all surety bonds required under this act, and of such other surety bonds as they shall deem necessary, such surety bonds to cover financial loss as well as faithful performance of duty.

"(g) To require Federal land banks to pay forthwith to any Federal land bank their equitable proportion of any sums advanced by said land bank to pay the coupons of any other land bank, basing said required payments on the amounts of farm-loan bonds issued by each land bank and actually outstanding at the time of such requirement.

"(h) To suspend or to remove for cause any district director or any registrar, appraiser, examiner, or other official appointed by said board under authority of section 3 of this act, the cause of such suspension or removal to be communicated forthwith in writing by the Federal farm-loan board to the person suspended or removed, and in case of a district director to the proper Federal land bank.

"(i) To exercise general supervisory authority over the Federal land banks, the national farm-loan associations, and the joint-stock land banks herein provided for.

"(j) To exercise such incidental powers as shall be necessary or requisite to fulfill its duties and carry out the purposes of this act.

"APPLICATIONS FOR FARM-LOAN BONDS.

"SEC. 18. That any Federal land bank, or joint-stock land bank, which shall have voted to issue farm-loan bonds under this act, shall make written application to the Federal farm-loan board, through the farm-loan registrar of the district, for approval of such issue. With said application said land bank shall tender to said farm-loan registrar as collateral security first mortgages on farm lands qualified under the provisions of section 12, section 15, or section 16 of this act, or United States Government bonds, not less in aggregate amount than the sum of the bonds proposed to be issued. Said bank shall furnish with such mortgages a schedule containing a description thereof and such further information as may be prescribed by the Federal farm-loan board.

"Upon receipt of such application said farm-loan registrar shall verify said schedule and shall transmit said application and said schedule to the Federal farm-loan board, giving such further information pertaining thereto as he may possess. The Federal farm-loan board shall forthwith cause to be made such investigation and appraisement of the securities tendered as it shall deem wise, and it shall grant in whole or in part, or reject entirely, such application.

"The Federal farm-loan board shall promptly transmit its decision as to any issue of farm-loan bonds to the land bank applying for the same and to the farm-loan registrar of the district. Said registrar shall furnish, in writing, such information regarding any issue of farm-loan bonds as the Federal farm-loan board may at any time require.

"No issue of farm-loan bonds shall be authorized unless the Federal farm-loan board shall approve such issue in writing.

"ISSUE OF FARM-LOAN BONDS.

"SEC. 19. That whenever any farm-loan registrar shall receive from the Federal farm-loan board notice that it has approved any issue of farm-loan bonds under the provisions of section 18 he shall forthwith take such steps as may be necessary, in accordance with the provisions of this act, to insure the prompt execution of said bonds and the delivery of the same to the land bank applying therefor.

"Whenever the Federal farm-loan board shall reject entirely any application for an issue of farm-loan bonds, the first mortgages and bonds tendered to the farm-loan registrar as collateral security therefor shall be forthwith returned to said land bank by him.

"Whenever the Federal farm-loan board shall approve an issue of farm-loan bonds, the farm-loan registrar having the custody of the first mortgages and bonds tendered as collateral security for such issue of bonds shall retain in his custody those first mortgages and bonds which are to be held as collateral security, and shall return to the bank owning the same any of said mortgages and bonds which are not to be held by him as collateral security. The land bank which is to issue said farm-loan bonds shall transfer to said registrar, by assignment, in trust, all first mortgages and bonds which are to be held by said registrar as collateral security, said assignment providing for the right of redemption at any time by payment as provided in this act and reserving the right of substitution of other mortgages qualified under sections 12, 15, and 16 of this act. Said mortgages and bonds shall be deposited in such deposit vault or bank as the Federal farm-loan board shall approve, subject to the control of said registrar and in his name as trustee for the bank issuing the farm-loan bonds and for the prospective holders of said farm-loan bonds.

"No mortgage shall be accepted by a farm-loan registrar from a land bank as part of an offering to secure an issue of farm-loan bonds, either originally or by substitution, except first mortgages made subject to the conditions prescribed in said sections 12, 15, and 16.

"It shall be the duty of each farm-loan registrar to see that the farm-loan bonds delivered to him and outstanding do not exceed the amount of collateral security pledged therefor. Such registrar may, in his discretion, temporarily accept, in place of mortgages withdrawn, United States Government bonds or cash.

"The Federal farm-loan board may at any time call upon any land bank for additional security to protect the bonds issued by it.

"FORM OF FARM-LOAN BONDS.

"SEC. 20. That bonds provided for in this act shall be issued in denominations of $25, $50, $100, $500, and $1,000; they shall run for specified minimum and maximum periods, subject to payment and retirement, at the option of the land bank, at any time after five years from the date of their issue. They shall have interest coupons attached, payable semiannually, and shall be issued in series of not less than $50,000, the amount and terms to be fixed by the Federal farm-loan board. They shall bear a rate of interest not to exceed 5 per cent per annum.

"The Federal farm-loan board shall prescribe rules and regulations concerning the circumstances and manner in which farm-loan bonds shall be paid and retired under the provisions of this act.

"Farm-loan bonds shall be delivered through the registrar of the district to the bank applying for the same.

"In order to furnish farm-loan bonds for delivery at the Federal land banks and joint-stock land banks, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to prepare suitable bonds in such form, subject to the provisions of this act, as the Federal farm-loan board may approve, such bonds when prepared to be held in the Treasury subject to delivery upon order of the Federal farm-loan board. The engraved plates, dies, bed-pieces, etc., executed in connection therewith shall remain in the custody of the Secretary of the Treasury. Any expenses incurred in the preparation, custody, and delivery of such farm-loan bonds shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury from any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, however, That the Secretary shall be reimbursed for such expenditures by the Federal farm-loan board through assessment upon the farm-land banks in proportion to the work executed. They may be exchanged into registered bonds of any amount, and reexchanged into coupon bonds, at the option of the holder, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Federal farm-loan board.

"SPECIAL PROVISIONS OF FARM-LOAN BONDS.

"SEC. 21. That each land bank shall be bound in all respects by the acts of its officers in signing and issuing farm-loan bonds, and by the acts of the Federal farm-loan board in authorizing their issue.

"Every Federal land bank issuing farm-loan bonds shall be primarily liable therefor, and shall also be liable, upon presentation of farm-loan bond coupons, for interest payments due upon any farm-loan bonds issued by other Federal land banks and remaining unpaid in consequence of the default of such other land banks; and every such bank shall likewise be liable for such portion of the principal of farm-loan bonds so issued as shall not be paid after the assets of any such other land banks shall have been liquidated and distributed: Provided, That such losses, if any, either of interest or of principal, shall be assessed by the Federal farm-loan board against solvent land banks liable therefor in proportion to the amount of farm-loan bonds which each may have outstanding at the time of such assessment.

"Every Federal land bank shall by appropriate action of its board of directors, duly recorded in its minutes, obligate itself to become liable on farm-loan bonds as provided in this section.

"Every farm-loan bond issued by a Federal land bank shall be signed by its president and attested by its secretary, and shall contain in the face thereof a certificate signed by the farm-loan commissioner to the effect that it is issued under the authority of the Federal farm-loan act, has the approval in form and issue of the Federal farm-loan board, and is legal and regular in all respects; that it is not taxable by National, State, municipal, or local authority; that it is issued against collateral security of United States Government bonds, or indorsed first mortgages on farm lands, at least equal in amount to the bonds issued; and that all Federal land banks are liable for the payment of each bond.

"APPLICATION OF AMORTIZATION AND INTEREST PAYMENTS.

"SEC. 22. That whenever any Federal land bank, or joint stock land bank, shall receive any interest, amortization, or other payments upon any first mortgage or bond pledged as collateral security for the issue of farm loan bonds, it shall forthwith notify the farm loan registrar of the items so received. Said registrar shall forthwith cause such payment to be duly credited upon the mortgage entitled to such credit. Whenever any such mortgage is paid in full, said registrar shall cause the same to be canceled and delivered to the proper land bank, which shall promptly satisfy and discharge the lien of record, and transmit such canceled mortgage to the original maker thereof, or his heirs, administrators, executors, or assigns.

"Upon written application by any Federal land bank, or joint stock land bank, to the farm loan registrar, it may be permitted, in the discretion of said registrar, to withdraw any mortgages or bonds pledged as collateral security under this act, and to substitute therefor other similar mortgages or United States Government bonds not less in amount than the mortgages or bonds desired to be withdrawn.

"Whenever any farm loan bonds, or coupons, or interest payments of such bonds, are due under their terms, they shall be payable at the land bank by which they were issued, in gold or lawful money, and upon payment shall be duly canceled by said bank. At the discretion of the Federal Farm Loan Board, payment of any farm loan bond or coupon or interest payment may, however, be authorized to be made at any Federal land bank, any joint stock land bank, or any other bank, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Federal Farm Loan Board.

"When any land bank shall surrender to the proper farm-loan registrar any farm-loan bonds of any series, canceled or uncanceled, said land bank shall be entitled to withdraw first mortgages and bonds pledged as collateral security for any of said series of farm-loan bonds to an amount equal to the farm-loan bonds so surrendered, and it shall be the duty of said registrar to permit and direct the delivery of such mortgages and bonds to such land bank.

"Interest payments on hypothecated first mortgages shall be at the disposal of the land bank pledging the same, and shall be available for the payment of coupons and the interest of farm-loan bonds as they become due.

"Whenever any bond matures, or the interest on any registered bond is due, or the coupon on any coupon bond matures, and the same shall be presented for payment as provided in this act, the full face value thereof shall be paid to the holder.

"Amortization and other payments on the principal of first mortgages held by a farm-loan registrar as collateral security for the issue of farm-loan bonds shall constitute a trust fund in the hands of the Federal land bank or joint-stock land bank receiving the same and shall be applied or employed as follows:

"In the case of a Federal land bank—

"(a) To pay off farm-loan bonds issued by said bank as they mature.

"(b) To purchase at or below par farm-loan bonds issued by said bank or by any other Federal land bank.

"(c) To loan on first mortgages on farm lands within the land-bank district, qualified under this act as collateral security for an issue of farm-loan bonds.

"(d) To purchase United States Government bonds.

"In the case of a joint-stock land bank—

"(a) To pay off farm-loan bonds issued by said bank as they mature.

"(b) To purchase at or below par farm-loan bonds.

"(c) To loan on first mortgages qualified under section 16 of this act.

"(d) To purchase United States Government bonds.

"The farm-loan bonds, first mortgages, United States Government bonds, or cash constituting the trust fund aforesaid, shall be forthwith deposited with the farm-loan registrar as substituted collateral security in place of the sums paid on the principal of indorsed mortgages held by him in trust.

"Every Federal land bank, or joint stock land bank, shall notify the farm-loan registrar of the disposition of all payments made on the principal of mortgages held as collateral security for an issue of farm-loan bonds, and said registrar is authorized, at his discretion, to order any of such payments, or the proceeds thereof, wherever deposited or however invested, to be immediately transferred to his account as trustee aforesaid.

"RESERVES AND DIVIDENDS OF LAND BANKS.

"SEC. 23. That every Federal land bank, and every joint-stock land bank, shall semiannually carry to reserve account 25 per cent of its net earnings until said reserve account shall show a credit balance equal to 20 per cent of the outstanding capital stock of said land bank. Whenever said reserve shall have been impaired, said balance of 20 per cent shall be fully restored before any dividends are paid. After said reserve has reached the sum of 20 per cent of the outstanding capital stock, 5 per cent of the net earnings shall be annually added thereto. For the period of two years from the date when any default occurs in the payment of the interest, amortization installments, or principal on any first mortgage, by both mortgagor and indorser, the amount so defaulted shall be carried to a suspense account, and at the end of the two-year period specified, unless collected, shall be debited to reserve account.

"After deducting the 25 per cent or the 5 per cent hereinbefore directed to be deducted for credit to reserve account, any Federal land bank or joint-stock land bank may declare a dividend to shareholders of the whole or any part of the balance of its net earnings. The reserves of land banks shall be invested in accordance with rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Federal farm-loan board.

"RESERVE AND DIVIDENDS OF NATIONAL FARM-LOAN ASSOCIATIONS.

"SEC. 24. That every national farm-loan association shall, out of its net earnings, semiannually carry to reserve account a sum not less than 10 per cent of such net earnings until said reserve account shall show a credit balance equal to 20 per cent of the outstanding capital stock of said association.

"Whenever said reserve shall have been impaired, said credit balance of 20 per cent shall be fully restored before any dividends are paid. After said reserve has reached said sum of 20 per cent, 2 per cent of the net earnings shall be annually added thereto.

"After deducting the 10 per cent or the 2 per cent hereinbefore directed to be credited to reserve account, said association may, at its discretion, declare a dividend to shareholders of the whole or any part of the balance of said net earnings.

"The reserves of farm-loan associations shall be invested in accordance with rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Federal farm-loan board.

"Whenever any farm-loan association shall be voluntarily liquidated a sum equal to its reserve account as herein required shall be paid to and become the property of the Federal land bank in which such loan association may be a shareholder.

"DEFAULTED LOANS.

"SEC. 25. That if there shall be default under the terms of any indorsed first mortgage held by a Federal land bank under the provisions of this act, the national farm-loan association or agent through which said mortgage was received by said Federal land bank shall be notified of said default. Said association or agent may thereupon be required, within 30 days after such notice, to make good said default, either by payment of the amount unpaid thereon in cash, or by the substitution of an equal amount of farm-loan bonds issued by said land bank, with all unmatured coupons attached.

"EXEMPTION FROM TAXATION.

"SEC. 26. That every Federal land bank and every national farm-loan association, including the capital and reserve or surplus therein and the income derived therefrom, shall be exempt from Federal, State, municipal, and local taxation, except taxes upon real estate held, purchased, or taken by said bank or association under the provisions of section 11 and section 13 of this act. First mortgages executed to Federal land banks, or to joint-stock land banks, and farm-loan bonds issued under the provisions of this act, shall be deemed and held to be instrumentalities of the Government of the United States, and as such they and the income derived therefrom shall be exempt from Federal, State, municipal, and local taxation.

"Nothing herein shall prevent the shares in any joint-stock land bank from being included in the valuation of the personal property of the owner or holder of such shares, in assessing taxes imposed by authority of the State within which the bank is located; but such assessment and taxation shall be in manner and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in section 5219 of the Revised Statutes with reference to the shares of national banking associations.

"Nothing herein shall be construed to exempt the real property of Federal and joint-stock land banks and national farm-loan associations from either State, county, or municipal taxes, to the same extent, according to its value, as other real property is taxed.

"INVESTMENT IN FARM-LOAN BONDS.

"SEC. 27. That farm-loan bonds issued under the provisions of this act by Federal land banks or joint-stock land banks shall be a lawful investment for all fiduciary and trust funds, and may be accepted as security for all public deposits.

"Any member bank of the Federal Reserve System may buy and sell farm-loan bonds issued under the authority of this act.

"Any Federal reserve bank may buy and sell farm-loan bonds issued under this act to the same extent and subject to the same limitations placed upon the purchase and sale by said banks of State, county, district, and municipal bonds under subsection (b) of section 14 of the Federal reserve act approved December 23, 1913.

"EXAMINATIONS.

"SEC. 28. That the Federal farm-loan board shall appoint as many land-bank examiners as in its judgment may be required to make careful examinations of the banks and associations permitted to do business under this act.

"Said examiners shall be subject to the same requirements, responsibilities, and penalties as are applicable to national bank examiners under the national bank act, the Federal reserve act, and other provisions of law. Whenever directed by the Federal farm-loan board, said examiners shall examine the condition of any national farm-loan association and report the same to the farm-loan commissioner. They shall examine and report the condition of every Federal land bank and joint-stock land bank at least twice each year.

"Said examiners shall receive salaries to be fixed by the Federal farm-loan board.

"DISSOLUTION AND APPOINTMENT OF RECEIVERS.

"SEC. 29. That upon receiving satisfactory evidence that any national farm-loan association has failed to meet its outstanding obligations of any description the Federal farm-loan board may forthwith declare such association insolvent and appoint a receiver and require of him such bond and security as it deems proper: Provided, That no national farm loan association shall be declared insolvent by said board until the total amount of defaults of current interest and amortization installments on loans indorsed by national farm-loan associations shall amount to at least $150,000 in the Federal land bank district, unless such association shall have been in default for a period of two years. Such receiver, under the direction of the Federal farm-loan board, shall take possession of the books, records, and assets of every description of such association, collect all debts, dues, and claims belonging to it, and, with the approval of the Federal farm-loan board, or upon the order of a court of record of competent jurisdiction, may sell or compound all bad or doubtful debts, and, on a like approval or order, may sell all the real and personal property of such association, on such terms as the Federal farm-loan board or said court shall direct.

"Such receiver shall pay over all money so collected to the Treasurer of the United States, subject to the order of the Federal farm-loan board, and also make report to said board of all his acts and proceedings. The Secretary of the Treasury shall have authority to deposit at interest any money so received.

"Upon default of any obligation, Federal land banks and joint-stock land banks may be declared insolvent and placed in the hands of a receiver by the Federal farm-loan board, and proceedings shall thereupon be had in accordance with the provisions of this section regarding national farm-loan associations.

"If any national farm-loan association shall be declared insolvent and a receiver shall be appointed therefor by the Federal farm-loan board, the stock held by it in the Federal land bank of its district shall be canceled without impairment of its liability, and all payments on such stock, with accrued dividends, if any, since the date of the last dividend shall be first applied to all debts of the insolvent farm-loan association to the Federal land bank and the balance, if any, shall be paid to the receiver of said farm-loan association: Provided, That in estimating said debts contingent liabilities incurred by national farm-loan associations under the provisions of this act on account of default of principal or interest of indorsed mortgages shall be estimated and included as a debt, and said contingent liabilities shall be determined by agreement between the receiver and the Federal land bank of the district, subject to the approval of the Federal farm-loan board, and if said receiver and said land bank can not agree, then by the decision of the farm-loan commissioner, and the amount thus ascertained shall be deducted in accordance with the provisions of this section from the amount otherwise due the said national farm-loan association for said canceled stock. Whenever the capital stock of a Federal land bank shall be reduced, the board of directors shall cause to be executed a certificate to the Federal farm-loan board, showing such reduction of capital stock, and, if said reduction shall be due to the insolvency of a national farm-loan association, the amount repaid to such association.

No national farm-loan association, Federal land bank, or joint-stock land bank shall go into voluntary liquidation without the written consent of the Federal farm-loan board, but national farm-loan associations may consolidate under rules and regulations promulgated by the Federal farm-loan board.

"STATE LEGISLATION.

"SEC. 30. That it shall be the duty of the farm-loan commissioner to make examination of the laws of every State of the United States and to inform the Federal farm-loan board as rapidly as may be whether in his judgment the laws of each State relating to the conveying and recording of land titles, and the foreclosure of mortgages or other instruments securing loans, as well as providing homestead and other exemptions and granting the power to waive such exemptions as respects first mortgages, are such as to assure the holder thereof adequate safeguards against loss in the event of default on loans secured by any such mortgages.

"Pending the making of such examination in the case of any State, any Federal farm-loan board may declare first mortgages on farm lands situated within such State ineligible as the basis for an issue of farm-loan bonds; and if said examination shall show that the laws of any such State afford insufficient protection to the holder of first mortgages of the kinds provided in this act, said Federal farm-loan board may declare said first mortgages on land situated in such State ineligible during the continuance of the laws in question. In making his examination of the laws of the several States and forming his conclusions thereon said farm-loan commission may call upon the office of the Attorney General of the United States for any needed legal advice or assistance, or may employ special counsel in any State where he considers such action necessary.

"At the request of the executive of any State the Federal farm-loan board shall prepare a statement setting forth in what respects the requirements of said board can not be complied with under the existing laws of such State.

"PENALTIES.

"SEC. 31. That any applicant for a loan under this act who shall knowingly make any false statement in his application for such loan, and any member of a loan committee or any appraiser provided for in this act who shall willfully overvalue any land offered as security for loans under this act, shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both. Any examiner appointed under this act who shall accept a loan or gratuity from any land bank or national farm-loan association examined by him, or from any person connected with any such bank or association in any capacity, shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both, and may be fined a further sum equal to the money so loaned or gratuity given, and shall forever thereafter be disqualified from holding office as an examiner under the provisions of this act. No examiner, while holding such office, shall perform any other service for compensation for any bank or banking or loan association, or for any person connected therewith in any capacity.

"Any person who shall falsely make, forge, or counterfeit, or cause or procure to be falsely made, forged, or counterfeited, or willingly aid or assist in falsely making, forging, or counterfeiting any bond, coupon, or paper in imitation of, or purporting to be in imitation of, the bonds or coupons issued by any land bank or national farm-loan association, now or hereafter authorized and acting under the laws of the United States; or any person who shall pass, utter, or publish, or attempt to pass, utter, or publish any false, forged, or counterfeited bond, coupon, or paper purporting to be issued by any such bank or association, knowing the same to be falsely made, forged, or counterfeited; or whoever shall falsely alter, or cause or procure to be falsely altered, or shall willingly aid or assist in falsely altering any such bond, coupon, or paper, or shall pass, utter, or publish as true any falsely altered or spurious bond, coupon, or paper issued, or purporting to have been issued by any such bank or association, knowing the same to be falsely altered or spurious, shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding five years, or both.

"Other than the usual salary or director's fee paid to any officer, director, or employee of a national farm-loan association, a Federal land bank, or a joint-stock land bank, and other than a reasonable fee paid by such association or bank to any officer, director, attorney, or employee for services rendered, no officer, director, attorney, or employee of an association or bank organized under this act shall be a beneficiary of or receive, directly or indirectly, any fee, commission, gift, or other consideration for or in connection with any transaction or business of such association or bank. No land bank or national farm-loan association organized under this act shall charge or receive any fee, commission, bonus, gift, or other consideration not herein specifically authorized. No examiner, public or private, shall disclose the names of borrowers to other than the proper officers of a national farm-loan association or land bank without first having obtained express permission in writing from the farm-loan commissioner or from the board of directors of such association or bank, except when ordered to do so by a court of competent jurisdiction or by direction of the Congress of the United States, or of either House thereof, or any committee of Congress or of either House duly authorized. Any person violating any provision of this paragraph shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both.

"Any person connected in any capacity with any national farm-loan association, Federal land bank, or joint-stock land bank who embezzles, abstracts, or willfully misapplies any moneys, funds, or credits thereof, or who without authority from the directors draws any order, assigns any note, bond, draft, mortgage, judgment, or decree thereof, or who makes any false entry in any book, report, or statement of such association or land bank with intent in either case to defraud such institution or any other company, body politic or corporate, or any individual person, or to deceive any officer of a national farm-loan association or land bank or any agent appointed to examine into the affairs of any such association or bank, and every person who with like intent aids or abets any officer, clerk, or agent in any violation of this section, shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding five years, or both.

"Any person who shall deceive, defraud, or impose upon, or who shall attempt to deceive, defraud, or impose upon, any person, firm, or corporation by making any false pretense or representation regarding the character, issue, security, or terms of any farm-loan bond, or coupon, issued under the terms of this act; or by falsely pretending or representing that any farm-loan bond, or coupon, issued under the terms of this act by one class of land banks is a farm-loan bond, or coupon, issued by another class or banks; or by falsely pretending or representing that any farm-loan bond, or coupon, issued under the terms of this act, or anything contained in said farm-loan bond, or coupon, is anything other than, or different from, what it purports to be on the face of said bond or coupon, shall be fined not exceeding $500 or imprisoned not exceeding one year, or both.

"The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to direct and use the Secret Service Division of the Treasury Department to detect, arrest, and deliver into custody of the United States marshal having jurisdiction, any person or persons violating any of the provisions of this section.

"GOVERNMENT DEPOSITS.

"SEC. 32. That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized, in his discretion, upon the request of the Federal farm-loan board, to make deposits for the temporary use of any Federal land bank, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. Such Federal land bank shall issue to the Secretary of the Treasury a certificate of indebtedness for any such deposit, bearing a rate of interest not to exceed the current rate charged for other Government deposits, to be secured by farm-loan bonds or other collateral, to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury. Any such certificate shall be redeemed and paid by such land bank at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury. The aggregate of all sums so deposited by the Secretary of the Treasury shall not exceed the sum of $6,000,000 at any one time.

"ORGANIZATION EXPENSES.

"SEC. 33. That the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Federal farm-loan board, for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this act, including the rent and equipment of necessary offices.

"LIMITATION OF COURT DECISIONS.

"SEC. 34. That if any clause, sentence, paragraph, or part of this act shall for any reason be adjudged by any court of competent jurisdiction to be invalid, such judgment shall not affect, impair, or invalidate the remainder of this act, but shall be confined in its operation to the clause, sentence, paragraph, or part thereof directly involved in the controversy in which such judgment shall have been rendered.

"REPEALING CLAUSE.

"SEC. 35. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed, and this act shall take effect upon its passage. The right to amend, alter, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

And the Senate agree to the same.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, June 23, 1916.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite Spirit, Father in heaven, arouse all the latent powers within us for good, that they may crowd out the evil tendencies of our being and fit us for the work Thou hast called us to do, that with clear minds, honest hearts, and earnest efforts we may meet all the requirements and thus grow intellectually, morally, spiritually into the life eternal under the spiritual leadership of the world's Great Exemplar. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 1062. An act relating to the duties of registers of the United States land offices and the publication in newspapers of official land-office notices;

S. 6242. An act authorizing the counties of Nassau, Fla., and Charlton, Ga., to construct a bridge across the St. Marys River between Florida and Georgia;

S. 3699. An act to donate to the city of St. Augustine, Fla., for park purposes, the tract of land known as the powder-house lot; and

S. 5900. An act providing for the disposal of certain lands in block 69, in the city of Port Angeles, State of Washington.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following concurrent resolutions, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution 24.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That the statue of Zebulon Baird Vance, presented by the State of North Carolina to be placed in Statuary Hall, is accepted in the name of the United States, and that the thanks of Congress be tendered to the State of North Carolina for the contribution of the statue of one of its most eminent citizens, illustrious for the high purpose of his life, and his distinguished services to the State and Nation.

Second. That a copy of these resolutions, suitably engrossed and duly authenticated, be transmitted to the governor of the State of North Carolina.

Senate concurrent resolution 25.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That there be printed and bound under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, the proceedings in Congress, together with the proceedings at the unveiling in Statuary Hall, upon the acceptance of the statue of Zebulon Baird Vance presented by the State of North Carolina, 16,500 copies, with suitable illustration, of which 5,000 shall be for the use of the Senate and 10,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and the remaining 1,500 copies shall be for the use and distribution of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of North Carolina.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 136) for the relief of Eva M. Bowman, asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. ASHURST, Mr. LANE, and Mr. CLAPP as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills and resolutions were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 3699. An act to donate to the city of St. Augustine, Fla., for park purposes, the tract of land known as the powder-house lot; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 1062. An act relating to the duties of registers of United States land offices and the publication in newspapers of official land-office notices; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 6242. An act authorizing the counties of Nassau, Fla., and Charlton, Ga., to construct a bridge across the St. Marys River between Florida and Georgia; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 5900. An act providing for the disposal of certain lands in block 69 in the city of Port Angeles, State of Washington; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Senate concurrent resolution 24.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the statue of Zebulon Baird Vance, presented by the State of North Carolina to be placed in Statuary Hall, is accepted in the name of the United States, and that the thanks of Congress be tendered to the State of North Carolina for the contribution of the statue of one of its most eminent citizens, illustrious for the high purpose of his life, and his distinguished services to the State and Nation.

Second. That a copy of these resolutions, suitably engrossed and duly authenticated, be transmitted to the governor of the State of North Carolina—to the Committee on the Library.

Senate concurrent resolution 25.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, the proceedings in Congress, together with the proceedings at the unveiling in Statuary Hall, upon the acceptance of the statue of Zebulon Baird Vance presented by the State of North Carolina, 16,500 copies, with suitable illustration, of which 5,000 shall be for the use of the Senate and 10,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and the remaining 1,500 copies shall be for the use and distribution of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of North Carolina—to the Committee on Printing.

AUTHORIZING THE PRESIDENT TO DRAFT THE NATIONAL GUARD AND ORGANIZED MILITIA, ETC.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on Military Affairs from the further consideration of House joint resolution 242 and to consider the same in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on Military Affairs from the further consideration of joint resolution 242 and that the same be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Is there objection?

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire whether any time would be given to a discussion of this question of the validity of the law authorizing the militia to go outside of the United States? I understand that the department is proceeding upon the theory that because of an opinion of the Attorney General in 1912 the law which was enacted by Congress and signed by the President of the United States was not constitutional, and it is the first time I ever knew that an ex parte opinion of the department was sufficient to overrule a law solemnly enacted by Congress, and to nullify it as unconstitutional. I would like to be heard upon that question at some time.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I would say to the gentleman from Minnesota that that is not the question involved in the consideration of this resolution. Under the Army reorganization act recently passed that act provided that in time of war the Congress would authorize the President of the United States to draft the Organized Militia. Now, this resolution proposes to give him that power in time of emergency, and it has no reference whatever to the constitutional question involved in the law to which the gentleman has called attention.

Mr. STEENERSON. I have seen reference to this resolution in the newspapers. I have not read the record of it and I have not seen the resolution, but it occurred to me from reports concerning the authority of the Government to send the militia outside of the United States that——

Mr. HAY. It is a question of draft; it is not a question of whether or not we can send them out of the bounds of the United States.

Mr. STEENERSON. Would there be any opportunity for discussing the question?

Mr. HAY. Certainly; under the five-minute rule the gentleman will have opportunity.

Mr. STEENERSON. Well, Mr. Speaker, I withdraw objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That whenever in his opinion an emergency exists which demands the use of troops in addition to the Regular Army of the United States, the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to draft into the military service of the United States, under the provisions of section 111 of the national defense act approved June 3, 1916, so far as the provisions of said section may be applicable and not inconsistent with the terms hereof, any or all members of the National Guard and of the Organized Militia of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, and any and all members of the National Guard and Organized Militia Reserves, to serve for the period of the emergency unless sooner discharged.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

Mr. MANN. Is this the first reading?

The SPEAKER. It is the first reading.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with the first reading.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia moves to dispense with the first reading. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CANNON. Will there be any general debate?

Mr. HAY. There would not be under the unanimous-consent agreement, but the gentleman can have an opportunity.

Mr. CANNON. I am asking for information; I am seeking information all along the line.

Mr. HAY. There has been no general debate provided.

Mr. CANNON. As the bill is being considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, I suppose on the first reading of the bill there would be general debate.

Mr. HAY. I think not.

The SPEAKER. No; when the House is considering a bill in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union there is only the five-minute debate.

Mr. CANNON. And no general debate?

Mr. HAY. I will be glad to extend time to the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. I simply desire time to ask some questions on it, and five minutes is not a great while. However, it might be cured by unanimous consent, if the questions were pertinent and the gentleman or any other Member here was in condition to answer the questions, without reference to the five-minute rule.

Mr. HAY. I think there will be no trouble about that.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 1, line 3, by striking out the words "whenever" and "his," and insert the word "the" in place of the word "his"; and, after the word "opinion," insert the words "of the Congress of the United States," and, after the word "emergency," insert the word "now"; and, in line 5, before the word "the," insert the word "and."

Mr. FESS. Read it as amended.

Mr. ANTHONY. Let the Clerk read the language as amended.

Mr. HAY. I can read it to the House as it would read.

Mr. GARDNER. I suggest to the gentleman that the words "be and he," line 5, be stricken out in order to make it read properly.

Mr. HAY. The way it would read is as follows:

That in the opinion of the Congress of the United States an emergency now exists which demands the use of troops in addition to the Regular Army of the United States, and the President be, and he is hereby, authorized——

Mr. GARDNER. Ought not "be and he" be stricken out to make sense?

Mr. HAY. Why, "and the President be, and he is hereby, authorized."

Mr. GARDNER. The gentleman is correct.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the matter as it will read, provided these amendments are agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 3, "That in the opinion of the Congress of the United States an emergency now exists which demands the use of troops in addition to the Regular Army of the United States, and the President be, and he is hereby," etc.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. GARDNER. Would it not be better to say, "Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby"?

Mr. HAY. I do not think so.

Mr. GARDNER. Let me read to the gentleman as it is now:

Resolved, That in the opinion of the Congress of the United States an emergency now exists which demands the use of troops in addition to the Regular Army of the United States, and the President be, and he is hereby, authorized—

It seems to me that "Resolved further" is necessary.

Mr. HAY. The whole thing is a resolution. "Resolved, That he be" is a part of the whole sentence. That is perfectly clear, I think.

Mr. BENNET. Just as a matter of style and taste you use the words "the Congress of the United States." Now, from the Constitution down, whenever we refer to Congress we say "Congress." Why drag in "the United States." There is only one Congress, and we are it.

Mr. HAY. Well, there is a Congress of the Argentine Republic.

Mr. BENNET. We are the Congress. Inasmuch as this is an historic resolution, it might as well be right. When the President sends a message he does not say to "the Congress of the United States." He says "Congress."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment to the Hay amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "and," line 5, insert the word "that," so that it will read:

"In the opinion of the Congress of the United States an emergency now exists which demands the use of troops in addition to the Regular Army of the United States, and that the President be"——

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I accept the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Now, the gentleman from New York proposes to offer an amendment to the Hay amendment.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the words "of the United States."

Mr. HAY. I do not see any reason for doing that.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by striking out after the word "Congress," in line 3, the words "of the United States."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire at this time to offer an amendment, but I do desire to ask for information of the chairman of the committee if I may be permitted. This resolution speaks in the present tense, of course. I would like to inquire if it be his opinion that under the present conditions of the Army reorganization bill, and prior to the militia of the various States taking the oath that is prescribed by the Army reorganization bill, that the power exists either in Congress or in the President of the United States to draft into the service of the United States the militia of the various States?

Mr. HAY. I think so, undoubtedly.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Then, let me ask the gentleman one more question, and I will not further trespass either on the time of the committee or on the time of the gentleman. What provision of the Army reorganization bill do you think gives that power at the present time?

Mr. HAY. I do not think there is any provision in the Army reorganization bill that gives the President the power to draft the National Guard for this purpose. Therefore this resolution is introduced. The provision in the Army reorganization bill gives him power when he is authorized by Congress to do so to draft the National Guard for the period of the war. This is not regarded as a war. It is regarded now as an emergency, and this resolution is introduced for the purpose of conferring upon him the power to draft the National Guard and the Organized Militia of the States during this emergency.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Mr. Speaker, in order that I may at least present my view of the matter, I want to make a motion at the proper time to strike out the last word.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman from Illinois permit me to interrupt the gentleman from Virginia before he takes his five minutes?

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Yes, sir; but I wish to make the motion to strike out the last word.

Mr. GARNER. That is all right. Will the gentleman from Virginia yield?

Mr. HAY. I will.

Mr. GARNER. If I understand the distinction between the present law, recently passed, and this resolution, the present law only authorizes the President to draft the militia during the period of war, and this authorizes him to draft them during an emergency? That is really the essential feature of this resolution, as I understand it?

Mr. HAY. During this emergency.

Mr. GARNER. Now, may I ask further in that particular? Does this resolution, taken in connection with the defense act, authorize the President to send these forces to any part of the world?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HAY. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. What is the interpretation of the gentleman from Virginia of the words:

To serve for the period of the emergency unless sooner discharged?

Does he understand that the enrollment would be in that language for the period of the emergency, an indeterminate period, to be terminated by the President when in his opinion the emergency ceased to exist?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. The enrollment would be for the period of the emergency?

Mr. HAY. During the emergency.

Mr. MONDELL. Or in the discretion of the President could he make the enrollment under this bill for a definite period?

Mr. HAY. I think not. I think he could only do it during the emergency, because nobody could tell when the emergency would cease.

Mr. MONDELL. That would be the condition under which the men would be enrolled?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. And it would then rest with the President to determine when the emergency would cease to exist?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. TEMPLE. Will the gentleman yield on that point?

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman from Virginia yield?

Mr. HAY. To the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. TEMPLE. It seems to me that under the amendment already agreed to with regard to the opinion of the President, the President is the judge of the emergency? The proposed amendment is to say that "in the opinion of Congress an emergency exists." Now, the emergency is to terminate sometime; but is that time to be "in the opinion of the President," as provided in the original form of the bill, or is it to be in the opinion of the Congress?

Mr. HAY. I do not think the original form provided that the President should state when the emergency ended.

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. HAY. Yes; I yield for a question.

Mr. TEMPLE. It would state when it would begin, but not when it would end. I think that is purely a technical question. Of course, if it was necessary, the President could state to the Congress that the emergency had ceased to exist, and the Congress could pass a resolution so stating?

Mr. HAY. To that effect; yes.

Mr. TEMPLE. There was another fact under discussion. As it formerly read the provision was, "whenever in his opinion an emergency exists." Now, we propose to say that "in the opinion of the Congress of the United States an emergency exists, and the President be, and he is hereby," and so forth. It seems to me there is a little awkwardness there, and the sentence would have more vigor if we would say, "Resolved, That an emergency now exists and the President is hereby authorized," expressing no opinion, but the fact; "Resolved, That an emergency now exists." That is in our opinion, of course, but we do not need to say so.

Mr. HAY. It seems to me that Congress must state that it has an opinion on this question.

Mr. TEMPLE. It seems to me to be an uncertain thing to say, "in the opinion of Congress an emergency exists." Why not say definitely that there is an emergency?

Mr. HAY. We are saying it definitely now.

Mr. ROGERS, Mr. GARDNER, and Mr. BUTLER rose.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. I will yield first to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS].

Mr. ROGERS. Is it the purpose of the gentleman from Virginia to amend the title to conform to the amendment that has just been adopted?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS. By striking out the words "under certain conditions"?

Mr. HAY. No; I do not see any reason for that.

Mr. ROGERS. It seems to me "that under certain conditions" should be amended. I find in the title that it points to the future and a different occasion, whereas the amendment makes specific the situation, not confining the operation of this law to this particular time.

Mr. HAY. I think possibly the gentleman is correct in that. Now, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, there being no opportunity for general debate, may I submit one or two interrogatories that go to the whole question of this resolution at the present time?

Mr. HAY. I have no objection if the House has none.

Mr. GARDNER. There being no other opportunity to do so. As to this question of those 116 courts-martial for certain enlisted men who turned up and refused to serve from the three States of Texas, Arizona, and New Mexico, will their status be changed by the passage of this resolution in any way?

Mr. HAY. If those cases have been made up and are now pending before a court, I do not suppose the passage of this resolution would have any effect on them.

Mr. GARDNER. Has the gentleman any information as to the necessity of a draft for the reason that men are unwilling to serve?

Mr. HAY. No; I have not.

Mr. GARDNER. Let me ask the gentleman this question: I have been informed by an officer of high rank in the War Department that, in addition to those 116 men enrolled in the militia of those three States that were called upon some weeks ago to send those troops—besides those 116 men who turned up and refused to serve—1,040 militiamen from those three States whose names were borne on the rolls did not turn up at all. Is that a fact?

Mr. HAY. I do not know. I have not been advised about that.

Mr. GARDNER. Is it not a matter that this Congress ought to be advised about?

Mr. HAY. That may be, but I hardly think that on a resolution of this sort we should take any steps——

Mr. GARDNER. I think we should have fullest knowledge when we are adopting a draft as to why we are doing so.

Mr. HAY. If the gentleman will introduce a resolution of inquiry, I will be glad to report it at once.

Mr. GARDNER. A little later I want to elaborate a little and explain the two different explanations that have been given.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. I will.

Mr. MADDEN. In section 111 of the national defense act the following language appears:

> When Congress shall have authorized the use of the armed land forces of the United States for any purpose requiring the use of troops in excess of those of the Regular Army, the President may, under such regulations, including such physical examination as he may prescribe, draft into the military service of the United States, to serve therein for the period of the war, unless sooner discharged, any or all members of the National Guard and of the National Guard Reserve.

Now, the question that occurred to me is whether the declaration that an emergency exists, taken in connection with the language of section 111 of the national defense act, is a declaration of war.

Mr. BENNET. If the gentleman from Virginia will permit, before the gentleman answers that——

Mr. HAY. That is a matter of opinion.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to have the gentleman's opinion.

Mr. HAY. I do not think this resolution that we are now considering could be considered as a declaration of war; but I take it that if war should be determined upon, or, rather, if the President should determine to come to Congress and ask the Congress to pass a resolution declaring war, he would at the same time ask authority to use the armed land forces of the United States in excess of the Regular Army.

Mr. MADDEN. The question that occurred to me was whether, if we pass the resolution which is now pending, the President would be required to come back to Congress if a declaration of war was deemed to be necessary.

Mr. HAY. Undoubtedly. I do not think there is any doubt of that.

Mr. MADDEN. I think we are declaring war here.

Mr. BENNET and Mr. BUTLER rose.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. I will yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] and then I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. BENNET. Is there not a more real danger that, taking this resolution and section 101 together, they might be construed to be a declaration that a state of war now exists, because in the portion of the act that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] read occur the words "to serve therein for the period of the war"? Is it not rather important that we should have some declaration at least from the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs that there is no intention of construing this resolution as a resolution declaring the existence of a state of war?

Mr. HAY. I was just saying that this resolution does not contemplate a declaration of war or a declaration that a state of war exists.

The very terms of the resolution only ask to have this done in the emergency which now exists, which is not war.

Mr. BENNET. And I presume that we should all understand from that that an existing emergency is our duty to protect our own borders from invasion, without any question of an existing state of war.

Mr. HAY. That is true.

Mr. BENNET. That is a rather important question. Now, I want to ask a rather unimportant question. In section 111 I notice that when he speaks of this same subject, he having drawn the resolution, he simply uses the expression "when Congress." In this amendment he uses the expression "the Congress of the United States." I should like to ask him which is the correct expression?

Mr. HAY. I have no doubt that both of them are correct.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, section 111 of what I believe is now styled the national-defense act, the Hay law, provided that when Congress should declare that the Regular Army was not sufficient, we might authorize the President to draft the National Guard, in which case they should be drafted for the period of the war. This matter was discussed informally in the House several days ago among Members upon the floor, it being stated by the public press that the War Department would ask Congress to pass a joint resolution authorizing the President to draft the National Guard under section 111 of this national-defense act; and the question was raised among Members whether that section clearly contemplated that it should take effect after a declaration of war. The matter was laid over informally. My understanding is that the present resolution was drafted by the War Department, and that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY], the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, introduced it in the form in which it came to him. As sent to us it provided for a permanent enactment authorizing the President, so long as it remained upon the statute books, either now or 50 years from now, if it had not been changed, whenever in his opinion an emergency existed, to draft the National Guard for the period of the emergency. I dare say that no one in the House would be in favor of that proposition. The Hay Act carefully preserved the right of Congress to determine whether a draft should be made or not, and the amendment which is now offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] to his resolution undertakes to declare that Congress determines that an emergency now exists, and provides for drafting for the period of the emergency. I do not think the gentleman was quite correct when, as I understood him, he said that the President would determine when the emergency ceased to exist. The President, of course, would have power to discharge drafted men whenever he pleased, but as Congress declares the emergency to exist, I do not think anybody except Congress could declare that it ceased to exist. Of course, he could discharge the men, but that is under another law. Now, what I think we are entitled to know is whether the Executive advises us formally or informally that an emergency does exist.

Mr. BUTLER. That is what I am after.

Mr. MANN. While I think we should make the declaration that an emergency exists, I do not think we should do it unless we are advised by those in charge that an emergency does exist.

Mr. BUTLER. Where is the President's message on it?

Mr. MANN. I am not insisting that the President should send a message to us, or that we should have any formal statement; but I think for our own protection, and because reponsibility goes with power, the gentleman from Virginia ought to be able to inform us, in addition to the information we read in the public prints, that the War Department says an emergency does now exist, and that we make the declaration partly based upon that fact. I doubt the advisability of Congress ordering the extreme remedy of a draft of men, something that never has been done before except under the greater stress of war, unless we have some statement that an emergency does exist.

Mr. HAY. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. MANN. Certainly; that is what I am after.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman and the House that I am advised, and it was expected that I should state to the House—and I thought the mere fact of introducing the resolution, which, as the gentleman says, was handed to me as coming from the War Department—that that very fact would indicate that in the opinion of the Executive this emergency does exist; and I am authorized to state, through a communication made to me by the Secretary of War, that the Executive does think that an emergency now exists and that this resolution is absolutely necessary to meet that emergency.

Mr. MANN. I am very glad to have the gentleman make that statement.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask for five minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks for five minutes more. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANN. I want to ask a question or two in reference to this joint resolution, not only in reference to this section but the other section, if I may. Possibly it may save time to get the information.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNER. In view of the fact that the resolution declares what the law already says—that whenever in his opinion an emergency exists, the President be, and so forth—is it the idea of the gentleman that any indirect statement coming to us as it has now come to us, from the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee, would be a declaration by the President that in his opinion an emergency exists?

Mr. MANN. I think possibly the gentleman does not understand the present status of the joint resolution before the House. It is proposed to change that declaration so that Congress declares that the emergency exists.

Mr. TOWNER. I was not aware of the amendment.

Mr. MANN. I do not undertake to say whether Congress should make the declaration or the President should make the declaration, but I am quite sure the Congress ought not to confer upon the President by permanent statute, for all time, or so long as that remains upon the statute books, the power at any time to draft the National Guard at his will.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Is it not true that the President has that authority already, to repel invasion?

Mr. MANN. It is not true that the President has any power to draft anybody. He has power to call upon the National Guard.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I notice a difference between the word "draft" and calling them out or commanding them. He has the power to command them to come. The law requires that they shall go out at the call of the President, as I read the law.

Mr. MANN. This resolution provides not only for the drafting of the National Guard but of the Organized Militia of the several States, and so forth. Am I right or wrong in supposing that the provision in reference to drafting the Organized Militia is in here because the National Guard status may not have been arrived at by all the Organized Militia in the several States?

Mr. HAY. The gentleman is correct about that. The oath that is required under the new act has not yet been taken by all of the National Guard throughout the country, and therefore the words "Organized Militia" were put in to cover that.

Mr MANN. The Hay Act contemplates requiring members of the National Guard to take an oath which practically gives them somewhat of a national status. And I suppose one of the purposes of that is to see that we have national jurisdiction over them. Now, we do not have that authority over the Organized Militia or the so-called National Guard who have not come in under the provisions of the Hay Act. Is there any question in reference to our authority to draft the National Guard who have not yet accepted the conditions of the Hay Act?

Mr. HAY. I think not; I think Congress has the power to confer on the President the right to draft any persons; he may draft all red-headed men or anybody.

Mr. MANN. I very much question whether he can draft all red-headed men; they would make it pretty hot for him. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAY. I mean that when Congress gives the President the power to draft he can draft anybody he pleases.

Mr. CALDWELL Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. CALDWELL. I would like to get the gentleman's interpretation——

Mr. MANN. I am seeking interpretation myself.

Mr. CALDWELL. I would like to have the gentleman answer this question: Under this proposed resolution it appears to me that a man drawn into the National Guard, no matter what his enlistment might be, is drafted until the emergency disappears.

Mr. MANN. He is drafted for the period of the emergency unless he is sooner discharged

Mr. CALDWELL. And why would he be discharged?

Mr. MANN. I should say that if Congress declared that the emergency exists it would take the same authority to declare that the emergency had ceased to exist. We could make that declaration at any time; but if in fact the emergency did cease to exist and we did not declare it the President would have the power to discharge the men regardless of our action.

Mr. CALDWELL. The point I had in mind was this: Suppose a man had enlisted for a period of three years and had served all of his term of enlistment except 30 days. In the meantime his business had become such that he did not want to reenlist, and we drafted him for the emergency, which continued for 20 years. Could we keep him there 20 years or could he get out at the end of his enlistment? The regular soldier goes out at the end of his term of enlistment.

Mr. MANN. He would be drafted for the period of the emergency. I think myself it would be wiser if there were some limitation as to the time of service put in in connection with the period of the enforced enlistment.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that not only the Organized Militia but the militia reserves are proposed to be drafted and compelled to serve, men who have been out of the militia for years.

Mr. HAY. I think the gentleman is mistaken about that. There would have to be some organization, and the mere fact that a man has been in the Organized Militia would not bring him under the terms of this resolution.

Mr. MANN. No; this is in relation to the Organized Militia; the mere fact that a man has been in the militia does not subject him to the draft. I suppose there will be some common sense used, but I don't know. [Laughter.] I would like to ask in reference to section 2, if I may. I do not want to take up very much more time. Under section 2, in reference to tactical units, would the President have the power to name officers in any branch of the National Guard who enlist, except where they are combined with others and require a superior officer?

Mr. HAY. The President has the right when the draft is made to name the officers of the different commands, and as a matter of fact he has heretofore and he would now undoubtedly name the officers who were in command of these organizations. Take a case, for example, where a State has not a brigade, where one State has one regiment and some other State has two, and those three regiments are put into a brigade. The President would have the right to name the brigadier to command that brigade. Or, if a State did not have a full regiment, if it had only one battalion, and a regiment had to be made up of different units, then the President would name the colonel of the regiment.

Mr. MANN. Sections 1 and 2 of this resolution under the gentleman's amendment are of a temporary nature, and section 3 is a permanent provision. It defines the relative status of officers of the Regular Army and of the National Guard, but it does not provide the status of the volunteer forces. Does the gentleman think it desirable to enact into a permanent statute a provision which necessarily is incomplete, so far as permanent law is concerned?

Mr. HAY. I think the gentleman will find in the volunteer act a provision as to the rank of volunteers.

Mr. MANN. I do not think the volunteer act provides for this, because it was not authorized at that time.

Mr. HAY. And therefore this act only applies to the Regular Army officers and officers of the Marine Corps, and of the drafted forces.

Mr. MANN. This act gives preference to Regular Army officers.

Mr. HAY. All acts do.

Mr. MANN. It gives preference to the Regular Army officers over the drafted forces. Now, then, where would the volunteer officers come in, because the volunteer act gives the Regular Army officers preference over the volunteer officers. Where will they come in in connection with the National Guard draft?

Mr. HAY. After the National Guard.

Mr. MANN. There is no such provision in the law.

Mr. HAY. There is not now, but when the volunteers are called for there will be. I think possibly it might be well to define in this connection the position in rank to be taken by officers of the Volunteer Army in the event the Volunteer Army is raised.

Mr. MANN. Of course I do not profess to be an expert on military legislation, but it would seem to me that the rest of this act being temporary in nature, this provision might be temporary, and that if volunteer officers are called for, you might properly say where they shall come in.

Just a word more, Mr. Speaker. The situation in Mexico is not an easy one for any of us, either the citizens of the United States or the people of Mexico. I do not know whether the troops ought to be kept in Mexico or brought out. It is quite evident to anyone, I think, that the troops of one country can not go into and remain in the heart of another country against the will of that country without producing friction and probably war. It may be that we can not bring our troops out of Mexico at present. I can not see what good they are doing in Mexico. They are not carrying out at the present time the policy for which they went into Mexico; but it seems to me quite certain that if we are to keep the troops in Mexico doing something or doing nothing, with the consequent friction that comes from that fact, it is absolutely essential that we materially increase our armed forces. If our regular troops are to stay in Mexico, we must prepare against the probability of war. Whether war should be declared or not, war of a kind now actually exists. The whole theory of the recent Hay law is that the National Guard constitutes the defense of the country, following the Regular Army, and the time has arrived, it seems to me now, if we are to maintain the position we have taken in regard to Mexico, when we must put the purpose of that act into effect. If the National Guard is to be our reliance, we must now call upon them; and if the theory of the Hay law, which the House approved, that the National Guard could be called upon and compelled to serve, is to be our reliance, I think that it is proper that we should put it into effect now and know that we have men in training and in the field to do those things which may become necessary under a wise or under a blundering administration.

Several Members rose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHIPERFIELD] for five minutes, because he promised to do so half an hour ago.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I am most heartily in favor of the widest possible use of the National Guard when any emergency exists that requires their services, under proper limitations. I am heartily in favor of the provisions of section 1 of this resolution under the declaration as made by the chairman of this committee that in the opinion of the President that an emergency exists requiring such use.

I have been filled with a good deal of admiration for the gallant manner in which the National Guard of this country have responded to the present call and for the enthusiasm with which they are ready to give their services to the country. [Applause.]

But, Mr. Speaker, out of respect for the National Guard, and with deference to their enthusiasm and to their rights, it occurs to me that the period of their service should be made absolutely certain and in no event to extend beyond the duration of the real emergency.

Under this resolution the President of the United States would have the right to say that the emergency continues to exist for one year or for five years or forever.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Yes; but I will ask the gentleman to be brief.

Mr. CALDWELL. Does the gentleman not think it would be wise to limit the period of the service under this draft of the period of enlistment of each individual man?

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. I do not. As a National Guardsman I believe that the service of every National Guardsman in this crisis of our country should be coexistant with the crisis. I do not think it should be prolonged indefinitely under any pretext or excuse, but I believe that so long as the crisis reasonably exists that the service of the National Guardsman should be at the call of his country.

There is another thing, however, to which I desire to direct the attention of the Members of the House, and I respectfully ask the attention of the chairman of the committee upon this proposition.

By this resolution and by the laws which you have enacted heretofore you are absolutely wiping out the militia of the United States. You are destroying the militia of the United States, after it is once drafted, unless you remedy it by the terms of this resolution.

Section 111 of the Army reorganization bill provides, without going into detail, that—all persons so drafted shall from the date of their draft stand discharged from the militia.

So when you call the National Guard into service under this emergency situation, you may continue to use them as a national force during the emergency, but under the terms of the law as it exists to-day when the emergency is over and they are discharged as a national force they are also discharged from the date of the original draft from the militia of the various States, and you have no militia left in the United States. That ought to be safeguarded.

You may say that these men will reenlist. Well and good, but millions of dollars and years of time have been devoted to the building up of the National Guard, and when you call them under this resolution you absolutely discharge them by the terms of section 111 as State militia, and thus you destroy their organization and leave the country without the second line of defense.

I have too much respect for the National Guard organization and I have too much regard for the welfare of the country to sit quietly by and see a condition created where when the emergency is over the National Guard is out of business completely.

I think it ought to be corrected at this time, and I think it ought to be that the members of the National Guard shall stand discharged for the period of the emergency, leaving the National Guard intact hereafter, and I respectfully call this phase of the situation to the attention of the chairman of the committee.

So far as the resolution itself is concerned, I think it will meet with the hearty approval of the National Guard to enable them to respond for the emergency, but I think in all fairness that the duration of the emergency ought to be no longer—and not by the opinion of any man, or in his discretion, but absolute—than that when the emergency is over Congress shall see that these men are discharged and returned to civil life. I think that situation ought to be taken care of at this time. [Applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, this is not altogether a strange performance to me. It is almost 20 years since I joined with the then Members of this House in authorizing the President of the United States to intervene in Cuban affairs. It was with our declaration that the Spanish-American War had its beginning. The President of the United States delivered to us a message before we gave him the authority. In that message he assigned several reasons for the intervention which we authorized. Thus the facts were placed on record before Congress made the decree. President McKinley summed up the reasons and then said he awaited the action of Congress. The response came quickly and with practical unanimity. The grounds for our conclusion were made plain to the world. They were made by the highest authority to be found in the whole Republic. They were not disputed by any American. They were held by mankind to be just, and the action of Congress was justified.

But where are the records upon which to base our judgment here? Who states the facts from which Congress shall conclude an emergency exists? Do we have the knowledge within ourselves, or shall we listen to the reports brought to us through unofficial channels?

When this resolution first appeared it had in it language which constituted the President of the United States the discoverer of this great event and the judge of the necessity. Why has the judge been changed? When did the change take place and why the necessity for it? let me ask the gentleman from Virginia. He knows my great esteem for him; and I now give him the assurance that I am ready to vote for any measure that will assist the President of the United States to maintain the dignity, preserve the honor, and secure the safety of our people [applause]; but I wish to have the ease of mind which a look at the record will give me, and a conscientiousness that there is some authority for this grave action beyond the mere statement of a Member of this House, but whose word I do not doubt or question. We have nothing here beyond the statement of the chairman to authorize the passage of this resolution. The President understands better than Congress whether or not an emergency exists. He has the official knowledge, and we live on reports alone. Why does not he speak to us? And yet, anticipating as I do the effect of this act, I am ready to assume my share of the responsibility which its adoption brings. I know that this act will result in the destruction of human life, the destruction of property, and perhaps a war for years to come. Ought there not to be some official statement put upon this record to justify us now and hereafter in the passage of this resolution? Why was the responsibility taken from the President and given to us? We have not been consulted here. Why should we not be advised now? The President has told us heretofore what he had done and what he proposed to do. Why not state the causes for this war we are drifting toward? He told us why he landed at Vera Cruz. Why should he not now declare this emergency? Why does he not now at this time make known to this Congress the reasons for the passage of this resolution which he wishes and which he shall have, and which will involve us in unhappiness and in trouble and tears for years to come? Nothing have we here except a message brought to this House by the gentleman from Virginia, the chairman of this committee, told him by somebody in the War Department——

Mr. HAY. I will say it was the Secretary of War.

Mr. BUTLER. That is higher authority than the gentleman gave heretofore.

Mr. HAY. No; I made that statement to the gentleman from Illinois, but the gentleman was not listening.

Mr. BUTLER. I was listening and I was endeavoring to understand. I restate my willingness and my readiness to assume my share of the responsibility with full knowledge of the consequences, but I do wish that we had an expression from the President of the United States that an emergency exists and that it becomes necessary for Congress to pass this resolution. Mr. Speaker, that is all I have to say.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield before his time expires? I wish to ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. BUTLER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman has long been a Member of this House, and was here when the Spanish-American War broke out. Is it not a fact that President McKinley sent a message to this House informing it of the situation——

Mr. BUTLER. And gave four reasons, with which I am as familiar as a saint is with the Lord's Prayer.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And we have not the information we ought to have that such an emergency exists?

Mr. BUTLER. None whatever, and that is what is troubling me; but, I repeat, I am ready to vote for this resolution.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, we are considering this resolution under very unusual circumstances. It was introduced only yesterday. It was issued in print only to-day. None of us have had a chance to read it. None of us but the gentleman who introduced it has given it study. No committee has considered it. The Committee on Military Affairs, to which it was referred, has not had a meeting. We have here before us a piece of unbaked legislation which, in my opinion, is of tremendous importance and of stupendous possibilities.

The word "draft" under some circumstances is a very good word; under other circumstances it is a most hateful and obnoxious word. When it means to force an American citizen into a uniform, when it means to conscript an American boy to go to fight against his will, when it means to take men out of their homes and put them upon the field of battle, it becomes to me a most hateful word. I regret to fear exceedingly that this is the interpretation that must be placed upon the word "draft" as it occurs in this resolution.

The resolution proposes to draft not only the National Guard, organized under the Army reorganization act, but it proposes to draft all the Organized Militia of the States; and on top of all that it proposes to draft all the Organized Militia Reserves and put them in uniform and send them into Mexico to do battle, for that is what is really intended. Let us look at this thing squarely and directly and with open eyes. The Army reorganization law provides for certain things to be done before militiamen are amenable to its terms. A great part of our militia, so I am informed, have not been organized under the Army reorganization act. There was another law in force when they volunteered for service as militiamen or as National Guardsmen in their States. The law under which those men enlisted in the National Guard did not give the power asserted by the Army reorganization act. They have neither agreed nor undertaken to do the things that the Army reorganization act requires them to do. So far as they are concerned, they are citizens, standing in the same attitude, and have assumed no additional obligations to those of other citizens. Some of the States have militia reserves, composed of men who have served in the militia and gone into the reserves after having served the period of their enlistment. No discrimination is made between any of those men by the terms of this resolution. All, without distinction, are forced into service. It is proposed here to levy upon those men, to conscript them, to send the conscripting officers into their homes and put them under arrest and carry them as unwilling conscripts into the ranks to fight.

Are we ready for that? Are we willing to stand for it? Have we come to the point when, no emergency existing in the large sense of the word, our Nation not being at war, when no powerful adversary threatens us—have we come to the time when, under such circumstances, we are going to force men into the Army? Other Representatives may be ready to vote for conscription; I am not.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY].

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 3, after the word "that," strike out "whenever" and insert "if," and after "emergency" insert "now," so that the same will read:

The SPEAKER. Is that intended as a substitute for the Hay amendment?

Mr. WALSH. Yes, sir; as a substitute, so that the first line will read:

That if, in his opinion, an emergency now exists which demands the use of troops—

And so forth.

Mr. Speaker, this is an important matter upon which we are called to pass, and it may, and very likely will, bring serious and grave results. I submit, sir, that we ought not to be expected to pass a resolution upon a matter of such grave import expressing the opinion of the Congress that an emergency now exists which will result in setting in action forces in a manner that may well be, and undoubtedly with some justification will be, considered by the Nation on our border as an act of war. Heretofore the situation has been handled as a military policy by the Executive of this Nation, and I do not now speak in criticism of the course he pursued; but, Mr. Speaker, it is not because of any act of the Congress that to-day our troops are upon foreign soil, menaced by armed forces, and regarded as hostile invaders. It is not by reason of any specific authorization heretofore enacted, I submit, that we should now give authority to send further troops upon foreign soil with the dire consequences which loom across a darkening sky until at least more authentic information than has been given us up to the present time is laid before us. This is indeed a serious situation, Mr. Speaker, and I submit here, coinciding with the views of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER], that it is sufficiently critical for the Chief Executive of this Nation to lay before us some facts and advise us as to what has resulted from the action that has heretofore been taken. I have no disposition to quibble, sir, but this is a question of military expediency, and the forces we set going here to-day may result in death and misfortune to many of our citizens. We have never shirked; but why stop at expressing an opinion that an emergency exists? Why not go the full length and admit what nonofficial advices seem to indicate—that a state of war exists? Whatever be decided upon the question raised by my amendment, let me say solemnly that I am ready to give him all the authority necessary to enforce the rights and the dignity of the United States. I am prepared to vote for the resolution as originally drafted, or with the amendment suggested by the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee. But I respectfully submit it were better, in view of the existing status and of the impending future, to continue the discretion of the Chief Executive to determine if, in his opinion, an emergency now exists, and to vest him with authority to take all necessary steps in the crisis. If we say that, in the opinion of the Congress, an emergency now exists we are acting merely upon a verbal message from the Secretary of War to the effect that an emergency exists, voiced here upon the floor by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, the able gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY]. But we have not even a letter from the President. But that is not a part of the official record, Mr. Speaker; at least, when the history of this Congress is written many pertinent facts will be missing, and I submit that we should have a message or a report in writing. We insist on that in the most trivial matters, and there is the greater reason in this instance, which the future may disclose to be the most serious action taken by this Congress. We all know what resulted in Europe in 1914 when the Russian Government began to mobilize its troops upon the border. Germany construed that as an act of war, and if we to-day, in expressing our opinion that an emergency exists, authorize these troops to be sent to the border or to cross that border onto foreign soil, it can be construed as equivalent to an act of war, if, indeed, as I said before, a state of war does not already exist between our Nation and Mexico. I submit, sir, that it is better to leave it to the Chief Executive of this Nation, the Commander in Chief of our military and naval forces, to exercise his discretion, and let him come before the Congress if a situation arises which further complicates matters and ask us to place on the record specifically and expressly a declaration of war. Let us not here to-day pass a declaration of war by indirection. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I will.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is there any difference in effect between the gentleman's amendment and the one offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY]? If you are willing to give to the President power to call the militia into the service of the country and to use them across the border, is there any difference, so far as international relations are concerned, from the Congress authorizing such use by its expression of the existence of an emergency?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, in reply I would say in effect that there is a difference; that under my amendment we ask the Executive to continue to assume the sole responsibility that he has heretofore borne, and I am willing to assume, properly so, without Congress having expressed any opinion that might have been construed as a declaration of war. Let the President decide when the emergency arises, and let us give him full authority to act when he so decides. In this way we can at the proper time take all measures necessary for our interests, whether the crisis continues for a few months or for years.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman is complaining because of the fear of that action. Nobody can blind himself to the fact that an emergency exists.

Mr. WALSH. We have no knowledge except by the papers.

Mr. SHERLEY. We have knowledge of the facts. Now, if the gentleman will permit, is there any difference between our authorizing the President to declare an emergency and our saying that an emergency exists?

Mr. WALSH. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that there is.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Virginia rise?

Mr. HAY. I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

The SPEAKER. The chairman of the committee, of course, has the right of way.

Mr. HAY. And I also want to ask that the debate on this amendment and all amendments to this section be closed in a reasonable time.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask whether under section 4 of Rule XVI it is now in order to move to postpone further consideration of this resolution until a day certain.

The SPEAKER. Of course, it is always in order to do that.

Mr. GARDNER. I move to do that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is not recognized yet. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] has the floor.

Mr. GARDNER. I asked to find that out.

The SPEAKER. There is a limitation on that. You can not take a man off the floor. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Massachusets when the gentleman from Virginia finishes.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the amendment now pending and amendments thereto and amendments to the section close in one hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that all debate on the amendment pending and amendments to the amendment pending and to the section itself be limited to one hour. Is there objection?

Mr. STEENERSON. Reserving the right to object, I would ask the gentleman if I could have 10 minutes. I understood when I withdrew the objection originally that I was to be recognized, but I have not been recognized yet. I would like to have 10 minutes in which to discuss this very question of draft.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not guarantee anybody 10 minutes.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask that one half of the time be controlled by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] and the other half by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman adds to his original request that one half of the hour be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY].

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I ask if I could be allowed 10 minutes of that time.

Mr. ANTHONY. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman from Virginia if he can not make that an hour and a half? There are many requests on this side.

Mr. HAY. I will make it an hour and a half.

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the gentleman give me 10 minutes?

Mr. ANTHONY. I would give the gentleman 5 minutes.

Mr. STEENERSON. I can not agree to this unanimous consent unless I get 10 minutes. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the time be 1 hour and 35 minutes, 5 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Minnesota, which, with 5 minutes which the gentleman from Kansas will give him, will satisfy the occasion.

Mr. STEENERSON. I will say that I was the chairman of the committee at the time this legislation originated.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri——

Mr. ANTHONY. I would like to say to the gentleman from Virginia that there is such an insistent demand for time, that I would like to make it 2 hours.

Mr. HAY. I will make it 2 hours.

The SPEAKER. The request is changed to 2 hours.

Mr. STEENERSON. Still reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from Minnesota that he is entitled to 5 minutes under this rule. This is the 5-minute rule. Now, if he can get the House to extend his 5 minutes——

Mr. DYER. I make that request, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER]——

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the general debate on this proposition, or debate on the proposition, shall be for 2 hours, one half to be controlled by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] and the other half to be controlled by myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STEENERSON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to know if I can get the 10 minutes I asked for?

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not inform the gentleman.

Mr. HAY. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. STEENERSON. No; I do not want to object; but it seems to me I should be given the opportunity to be heard.

Mr. GARDNER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I wish to inquire as to the status of my inquiry as to my right to move to postpone.

A MEMBER. Regular order!

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman who wishes to proceed in regular order will rise in his place and say so. I am proceeding in the regular order.

The SPEAKER. When the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] yields the floor, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] to make his motion to postpone.

Mr. GARDNER. But, Mr. Speaker, I am trying to interpose a parliamentary inquiry in regard to the debate on the motion to postpone, which, under the rules of the House, is one hour. Now, the question is whether, by consenting to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY], I have abrogated my right to debate the motion to postpone.

The SPEAKER. Whenever the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] yields the floor, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts to make his motion to postpone, and then we will proceed under the rules of the House. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAY. Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL].

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will take care of the gentleman's rights.

Mr. HAY. I was going to yield some time.

The SPEAKER. No; you can not yield the floor to do that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, Mr. Speaker, the House has just agreed to the gentleman's request.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows, but that does not prevent the motion to postpone.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, yes it does.

The SPEAKER. What authority has the gentleman for making such an assertion as that?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The authority of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will produce it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The House has just agreed to two hours' debate, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] and one-half by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY]. No one is entitled to the floor or can get the floor except by recognition of those gentlemen. The House has just agreed to that.

The SPEAKER. That does not suspend all the rules of the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no doubt about it, Mr. Speaker. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] will have to defer his motion until this debate is concluded. There is no question about it. The House has just agreed that those two gentlemen shall control the time for two hours. The gentleman from Massachusetts can not intervene now.

For instance, Mr. Speaker, let me call the attention of the Chair to this: A motion for the previous question is of higher privilege than the motion to postpone to a day certain, but the gentleman from Massachusetts could not take those gentlemen off the floor to intervene with a motion of the previous question. The motion for the previous question and the motion to lay on the table are more highly privileged than the motion to postpone to a day certain. Yet no one can intervene with any motion in view of the order just made by the House to proceed for two hours' debate.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is correct in his contention, in all probability. At the same time it was resting on that supposition that the Chair thought otherwise, that I did not withhold my consent to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY]. But under the circumstances I withdraw my motion to postpone, or rather I withdraw seeking recognition at the present time. But I wish to interpose another parliamentary inquiry as to whether or not, at the termination of this debate, it will then be in order to make the motion?

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly it will, if you get recognition from the Chair before anybody else does [laughter], and the Chair will state this, that having been forewarned that the gentleman desires to make that motion, when this two hours' debate is over the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts, unless somebody makes a superior motion. I hope the gentleman understands as well as the Chair does what is the status of these different motions.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Does it necessarily follow, under unanimous consent, that the debate shall commence at once?

The SPEAKER. That has been the universal practice of the House.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. But it did not fix the time when the debate should commence.

The SPEAKER. It did not fix the time when it should begin, but it fixed the length of it.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Yes.

The SPEAKER. And the universal practice of the House, so far as the Chair knows, is that when an order of that kind is made the debate commences instanter. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] is recognized.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL] is recognized.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for just a moment in order that I may ask that an amendment may be reported and be considered as pending with the discussion?

Mr. HAY. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHIPERFIELD].

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Let it be considered as pending.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CHIPERFIELD: At the end of line 5, page 2, insert "and when so discharged, the organizations shall return to their former States as National Guard organizations."

Mr. HAY. Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, there has been a statement made here to the effect that certain words in this section were incorporated for the reason that it was desirable to draft into the service of this country at this time the Organized Militia of the various States that have not——

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman proceeds further, I wish to say that the Clerk made an error in reading my amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GARNER). Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHIPERFIELD].

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, at the end of line 5, insert "and when so discharged, the organizations shall return to their former status as National Guard organizations."

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, the statement was made here that certain words were put into this paragraph for the purpose of drafting into the service of the United States members of the National Guard as they existed before the Hay bill went into effect, because they had not as yet taken the new oath of office. Now, I particularly direct your attention to section 61 of the act approved by the President June 3, 1916. That section provides:

No State shall maintain troops in time of peace other than as authorized in accordance with the organization prescribed in this act.

And when that act was signed the State militia went out of business, and we have no State militia except those who have taken the new oath of office; and those who have taken that new oath of office have taken it in the belief that they would serve in accordance with the law as we passed it on June 3. Under that law men who joined the State militia and took the oath of the United States took an oath that they would serve for the period of three years in active service and three years as reservists, and that during those six years they would be glad to bare their bodies to the enemies of this country and give up their lives if need be in defense thereof. But there is nothing in that oath and there was nothing in the proposition put to those men that by taking this oath of office they would serve for 20 years, or 10 years, or 7 years, or 6 years and 1 day. They proposed to serve during the term of their enlistment. When you enlist a man in the Regular Army as a regular soldier he serves four years with the colors and three years with the reserves, making seven years in all, and no matter what the emergency, when his seven years of service have expired he goes home to his mother, if she be still living, or to his wife and children, feeling that he has performed his duty to his country. Now, gentlemen, when you have voted on the Hay amendment I propose to offer an amendment which will limit the service of these men who, in their patriotism, have volunteered to defend the country in its hour of emergency to the extent that these men shall not be required to serve longer than the period of their enlistment; and I am going to ask the Clerk to read my proposed amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CALDWELL: Page 2, line 5, after the word "discharged," insert "Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed as extending the period of service of any such member beyond the period of his enlistment."

Mr. CALDWELL. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to impress upon this House this one great thing, that the American people have always been fair to their soldiers. These men have taken the oath of office, and they are the only National Guardsmen in the Nation.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. What is the period of enlistment under this resolution?

Mr. CALDWELL. Under this resolution the period of the draft is as long as the emergency exists. When we went into the Philippines we stayed there for nearly 20 years, and we are likely to stay more than 10 years more. Who is going to say how long the emergency will be?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Precisely that. A man enlists during the period of the emergency, evidently. The gentleman's amendment proposes that he shall not be required to serve beyond the period of his enlistment.

Mr. CALDWELL. Certainly.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Well, the period of his enlistment is the period of the emergency.

Mr. CALDWELL. No; under my amendment a National Guardsman will go out of the service, if he wants to, after his period of enlistment, and some one else can take his place.

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for this joint resolution. I think it might well be amended in some particulars. It is proposed to be amended in one important particular, which improves it. I believe we ought to dispose of this resolution promptly, without postponing it.

As to the President, who is Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, and who has much capacity to talk, whether he should transmit a written message or whether he would come before the House and Senate and deliver it in person, I do not know. Perhaps that is a matter of taste, although he has been quite content in talking to the last Congress and to this Congress, when he had something perhaps of not as much importance as this to communicate. [Applause.] However, when this resolution is passed, the Secretary of War vouching for it and the President signs it, then he is for it, and his friends can not say Congress forced this proposed law upon him.

There is a good deal of talking about an emergency and about a declaration of war. Why, you may call a spade a trowel, but that does not make it a trowel. You may say there is no war; yet, with or without authority under the law, they are fighting down in Mexico. So, whatever you call it, whether an emergency or a war, they are at it. Now, so far the President is responsible, because this is the first time that he has consulted Congress, though once before——

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. SHERLEY. Congress once before authorized the President to send the Army——

Mr. CANNON. Was that the Vera Cruz matter?

Mr. SHERLEY. It was not limited to a particular place or time, and the forces are there under authority expressed by Congress. [Cries of "Oh, no," on the Republican side.]

Mr. CANNON. It followed what happened at Vera Cruz, and if I recollect aright—I was not in that Congress—it was after the transaction.

Mr. BUTLER. It was.

Mr. CANNON. And Congress gave him an indorsement. Now, has there been any authority for going over into Mexico at this time?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. In that very message did not the President state to Congress that he did not need the authority of Congress?

Mr. CANNON. Very well; but that Congress fell over itself to ratify what he had done. [Applause.] Now, it seems to me we ought to quit splitting hairs. If the President of the United States chooses to call this an emergency, when it is a war, that does not change it. It is a war and not an emergency. I have no gratification in criticizing the President; and yet I have in my hand the morning Washington Post, containing a communication that I presume the Secretary of State was authorized to communicate to the diplomatic representatives of this continent. With the consent of the House, I will put it in my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Well, all right. [Applause.]

Mr. ANTHONY. Does the gentleman want more time?

Mr. CANNON. You might give me two minutes more.

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois two minutes more.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I will ask unanimous consent very briefly to extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Now, there was a condition of copartnership between the President and Carranza and Villa, the bandits. That partnership ceased when Huerta was put out of Mexico after a year, and then the copartners quarreled with each other. We are trying to find and punish one, and the other is saying that we can not stay in Mexico. The devil is to pay and no pitch hot. [Laughter.]

When is this to cease? Can we scatter thousands of soldiers performing police duty along the long southern border for protection? What is defense? If you want to defend and defend well, you can not wait for the robbers and bandits to come up to the border and cross into the United States, destroying the property and taking the lives of our citizens. When our soldiers cross over into Mexican territory, if anybody can call it anything else than war I would be glad to know the difference between war and what it would be necessary to do; and if we are to defend against Mexico, if we are to defend against Mexican attacks and Mexican anarchy, we must so act that either they or we will establish a responsible Government in Mexico. [Applause.]

I insert, by leave of the House, the letter of Secretary of State—Mr. Lansing—to the diplomats of foreign countries, as follows:

DIPLOMATS NOTIFIED BY LANSING OF UNITED STATES ATTITUDE TOWARD MEXICO.

Secretary Lansing yesterday sent a memorandum to the diplomatic representatives of South and Central American nations reviewing the situation existing between the United States and Mexico, and announcing that if hostilities should eventuate the purpose of the United States would be to defend itself against further invasion and not intervene in Mexican affairs.

The memorandum, dated June 21, follows:

"I inclose for your information a copy of this Government's note of June 20 to the secretary of foreign relations of the de facto Government of Mexico on the subject of the presence of American troops in Mexican territory. This communication states clearly the critical relations existing between this Government and the de facto Government of Mexico and the causes which have led up to the present situation.

"Should this situation eventuate into hostilities, which this Government would deeply regret and will use every honorable effort to avoid, I take this opportunity to inform you that this Government would have for its object not intervention in Mexican affairs, with all the regrettable consequences which might result from such a policy, but the defense of American territory from further invasion by bands of armed Mexicans, protection of American citizens and property along the boundary from outrages committed by such bandits and the prevention of further depredations by force of arms against the marauders infesting this region and against a Government which is encouraging and aiding them in their activities.

"Hostilities, in short, would be simply a state of international war without purpose on the part of the United States other than to end the conditions which menace our national peace and the safety of our citizens."

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, it is sometimes difficult to tell whether gentlemen are criticizing the administration because it does not go to war, or because it has endeavored to avoid war.

There is now pending in the House a resolution that makes available the trained militia forces of the United States for immediate use. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] proposes to amend the resolution so that it shall read that the Congress declares that an emergency exists, and to authorize the President to utilize the National Guard as a part of the Regular Army. It means to utilize the National Guard if necessary beyond the borders of the United States.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] proposes that Congress shall not declare that such an emergency exists, but that if the President believes an emergency to exist he shall have the same power as now proposed to be given.

Does anybody in this House doubt the existence of an emergency? Is anybody here unfamiliar with what has happened in Mexico and on our border during the past three years? Is anyone ignorant of the fact that a large portion of the Regular Army of the United States is now in Mexico threatened by the armed forces of the Mexican Government in the field, and warned by military authorities that if they do anything other than to march toward their own country they will be attacked? Is anyone ignorant of the fact that our forces engaged in the conduct of a legitimate enterprise for which they went into Mexico were fired on yesterday at Carrazal, resulting in some being killed, some wounded, and others taken captive by hostile forces? Is anyone here unaware of the fact that officers and men of the Navy of the United States on a proper mission in Mexico were fired on yesterday at Mazatlan? Do we not all know that a situation exists that may require instant action upon the part of the Executive—the marshaling of all of the available military resources of this Government, mayhap for war, mayhap for defense, but in a great military enterprise that if it continues means war, whatever else it may be called? If anybody in this House does not know that this emergency exists, if he is so ignorant of what has happened and what is being done to be unable to say that that emergency does not exist, he should not vote for this resolution.

When the Hay bill was before the House the wording of certain provisions of the act was discussed and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], speaking about the language, said he did not know what the language should be, but he declared:

I do think, however, that when a situation is so delicate that the President thinks that war is imminent, he ought not to make it public, he ought not to say so so that anyone knows that that is his opinion; that he ought to be able to go ahead without saying so.

That is what the gentleman from Virginia now proposes, not to put the President of the United States in the attitude of expressing an opinion that war is imminent, not to have him as the head of the Government do anything or take any action that may precipitate war, but to put into his hands the power to mobilize and utilize the military resources of all available military strength of this Government, so that if the necessity does arise he will not have to wait for action by Congress, but will be in a position to act for the best interest of the country. [Applause.]

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. TEMPLE].

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, it seems to me that there is no room for doubt that an emergency exists. The President has called into the service of the United States a large part of the National Guard of the various States. This in itself is his announcement to the people of the United States and to the world that there is such an emergency. Why he has not thought it wise to say so to the Congress of the United States I do not know. He has said so practically to everybody else, but he has not asked us directly for any action. We have, of course, a message from the Secretary of War that comes to us through the chairman of the Military Committee. We know that an emergency exists. We ought not to stand on our dignity at such a time. Even though we have not been formally notified by the President that a necessity has arisen for the use of troops in excess of those of the Regular Army, we may act on our knowledge. I hope that this resolution may be amended so as to fix some limit to the term of service that may be required of the men it calls for. If it is so amended I shall certainly vote for it.

The National Guard has been called out, I believe, under the terms of the Dick bill, which provides for the use of the National Guard within or without the territory of the United States. I believe that is the exact language of that law as amended by the act of May 27, 1908—"within or without the territory of the United States." To be sure, the Attorney General—not the present Attorney General—has given it as his opinion that the provision allowing the use of the guard outside of the boundaries of the United States is unconstitutional. I believe the gentleman from Minnesota is going to discuss that after awhile.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TEMPLE. My time is too short. I believe it is the first time in the history of the Government that such expression of opinion has been allowed to override the law passed by the Congress of the United States.

The boys that enlisted in the National Guard, organized under the Dick law as amended in 1908, knew that they could be called into the service of the United States for duty during the term of their existing enlistment. It is now proposed to draft them for an indefinite period. That provision of the resolution now under discussion ought to be changed before we come to the final vote. Within the last week I spent a few days at home, and I know that boys were enlisting upon the call of the President, because they believed that the country required their services. They were volunteering. Men whose time had expired were reenlisting, some of them coming back from distant States to do it. It is now proposed that we say to them, "We are going to draft you for as long as we please, no matter what the terms of your enlistments are." We are not treating those boys fairly and we are not encouraging the spirit of patriotism. [Applause on the Republican side.] We are making drafted men of volunteers. The new bill, I understand, does not go into effect until the 1st of July.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. MANN. It is in effect now.

Mr. TEMPLE. These men are called out under the terms of the Dick law, are they not?

Mr. HAY. I do not so understand it.

Mr. TEMPLE. Announcement has been so made.

Mr. HAY. I do not know who made it.

Mr. TEMPLE. That announcement has been made in certain of the States where men are being enlisted, and those men are not treated fairly if we draft them for an indefinite period.

I recognize that the new bill providing for the reorganization of the Army and of the National Guard is the law of the land, but many of its provisions have not gone into effect and can not go into effect until the appropriations for the next fiscal year become available. That will be on the 1st of July. The new law provides that in certain States the existing National Guard shall be recognized pending its reorganization to conform to the terms of the new act. Here is the language of the act, section 70—

> Enlisted men in the National Guard of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia now serving under enlistment contracts which contain an obligation to defend the Constitution of the United States and to obey the orders of the President of the United States shall be recognized as members of the National Guard under the provisions of this act for the unexpired portion of their present enlistment contracts.

There is a like provision also for commissioned officers of the National Guard. In the States referred to in that section, the provisions of the new law for reorganizing the National Guard and changing the period of enlistment from three years to six have not gone into effect. If the pending resolution should be passed without amendment it would take the men into the service of the United States not only for the unexpired portions of their present enlistment contracts, but for an indefinite period.

The only provision in the new law for calling the National Guard into the service of the United States reads as follows:

> When Congress shall have authorized the use of armed land forces of the United States for any purpose requiring the use of troops in excess of those of the Regular Army, the President may, under such regulations, including such physical examination, as he may prescribe, draft into the military service of the United States, to serve for the period of the war unless sooner discharged, any or all members of the National Guard and of the National Guard Reserve.

Congress has not authorized the call provided for in this act; if that had already been done there would be no necessity for passing the resolution now under discussion; therefore I have accepted the statement that the call under which the National Guard is now being mobilized was the call provided for in the Dick law, under the terms of which the President may call out the Organized Militia without waiting for any authorization by Congress. The language of the Dick law is as follows:

> Whenever the United States is invaded or in danger of invasion from any foreign nation, or of rebellion against the authority of the Government of the United States, or the President is unable with the regular forces at his command to execute the laws of the Union, it shall be lawful for the President to call forth such number of the militia of the State or of the States or Territories or of the District of Columbia as he may deem necessary to repel such invasion.

And so forth.

Whether under the Dick law, which does not require any authorization by Congress, or under the new act without the authorization which it requires, the National Guard is being mobilized for service which the country needs. We should modify this measure so as to fix a definite term of service, and we should in all honor and honesty recognize as Volunteers the men who are responding to the call, for they are offering themselves as willingly as men ever offered and will obey as loyally whatever orders the President may give them.

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Speaker, fearing that I may not have time to finish, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN].

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that it is very hard to please our Republican friends who deem it proper to criticize the course of President Wilson, whatever he may do, touching the Mexican situation. I remember that on that side of the aisle in 1913 and throughout all of the hot days of 1914 those gentlemen were rearing upon their hind legs, complaining and ranting because the President of the United States did not send the armed forces into Mexico; and now when the watchful-waiting policy that the American people indorse has been justified, when the President of this Republic has patiently considered the emergencies as they have arisen, and when the crucial hour has come and the dignity of the United States requires that the armed forces be sent to the borders of Mexico, and even beyond into that disturbed Republic, we have gentlemen on that side objecting to this resolution which is necessary to cause the national military forces already organized to be at once mobilized and ready for the emergency as it may be occasioned by conditions there. Mr. Speaker, 145,000 national guardsmen in this Republic are anxious and willing that this resolution shall be passed, and when the gentleman from the State of Pennsylvania [Mr. TEMPLE] says that it is a reflection upon those men because the word "draft" is in this resolution he does not know and understand the patriotic motives that inspired these men to enlist in the National Guard to serve the United States. It is as plain as the noonday sun that the men who are real national guardsmen are anxious to go to serve the country on the border, and even in Mexico. The President of this Republic is entitled to this resolution. Every fair-minded man who knows anything at all, if he has sense enough to be a Member of this Congress, is aware of the fact that a serious emergency is now at hand. We must pass this resolution and do all other things necessary in voting men, money, and guns and ammunition to fully empower the President to defend and protect the dignity and honor of our country against Mexican aggression. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield me a little more time?

Mr. HAY. I am very sorry, but I have not got it.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I think that Members, at least some of them, forget that the militia has already been called into service. It is called into service under the power and authority of the President of the United States, who is authorized to do so in case of invasion or to execute the laws of the United States. Certainly he is amply justified in calling the militia or the National Guard into service under his constitutional rights, and has done so. We have this proposition now before us in this resolution that these men already called into service are to be drafted and made a part of the Army of the United States under the authority of section 111 of the Hay Act. It occurs to me that it was not contemplated that this should be done except in case of war. It will be noticed by gentlemen upon reading the terms of this section that it provides "when Congress shall have authorized the use of the armed land forces of the United States for any purpose requiring the use of troops in excess of those of the Regular Army"—contemplating, as it seems to me, the usual course of procedure in cases where war is declared by Congress and when by its act authority is given to the President of the United States to call the armed forces of the country into use. It seems to me that this view is very strongly, if not absolutely, shown by the language used in section 111, because it says "to serve therein for the period of the war unless sooner discharged"—not during the existence of an emergency. We have to consider this resolution under the terms of the Hay Act in regard, not to an emergency, but with regard to the continuance of war. We may have a condition of war, but we have not declared war, and until we have declared war it occurs to me that we have not authority under this act to call for these men under a draft of the President to serve as is suggested in this resolution.

However, this joint resolution will have the effect of law if adopted and will repeal the terms of the Hay Act if inconsistent. It is entirely proper, therefore, to consider the resolution on its merits.

Section 111 of the Hay Act provides for drafting the National Guard into the service of the United States. It was intended to force the unwilling men into service. In our earlier wars parts of the militia refused to serve outside the boundaries of the country, and it was in contemplation of a recurrence of such conditions that this provision was inserted in the act. Under its terms Congress is given the determination as to whether this drastic action shall be taken. Certainly it was not contemplated that it would be taken unless necessary. A draft has never been popular with the American people, because it implies a want of patriotism on the part of those who are thus compelled to serve whether they consent or not. A drafted man carries an imputation of unworthiness. If men are ready and willing to serve voluntarily, they should not be forced to do so.

Conditions at present are no justification for a draft. As long as the National Guard is to serve only as a border patrol to protect the people and the property within the territory of the United States from invasion by Mexican bandits, and as long as for such service the National Guard is entirely competent and entirely willing to serve, the draft measure is not required and should not be used. If a further invasion of Mexico is intended, that will mean war, and a draft would be authorized. Still, I do not believe it should even then be used unless necessary. I do not believe it wise or justifiable to cast an aspersion upon the patriotism of men who are willing and glad to serve their country voluntarily and to follow the flag wherever their country's interests require without compulsory process.

For these reasons I regret that this resolution is now presented. I shall support it with reluctance, because I believe it unnecessary. Just at this time, when the National Guard are making such a splendid response to the call of duty all over the country, I can not believe it wise or just to them to discredit their patriotism and to cloud their service by a draft, which in effect says to them, "It makes no difference whether you are willing or not, you must serve." Especially is this true when by every act we are shown that compulsion is unnecessary and that the National Guard are ready and willing to give voluntarily loyal service and complete devotion to the country whenever and wherever it needs such service.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON].

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I am sure there is no one who does not desire to do everything in his power to uphold the hands of the President of the United States in an emergency like this, but we have here a proposition in this resolution to draft certain members of the National Guard. That is to say, it is proposed in this resolution to authorize the President to compel members of the National Guard to render military service. Is it not strange that this last resort of a nation in a crisis should be exercised upon the most patriotic of all our citizens that are members of the National Guard of the various States—men who at their own expense and in their own time have been preparing themselves to serve their country in case of need—that they, forsooth, shall be picked out as the men who will be compelled to serve against their will? I think this strange result is due to a lot of blundering legislation, for which Congress is not altogether to blame.

I want briefly to recall to the Members here the legislative history of the militia. I happened in 1908 to be chairman of the Committee on the Militia, and there was a general demand throughout the country for a revision of the Dick law passed in 1903. The National Guard, represented by very able gentlemen of the different States and of the War Department, came before our committee and were heard on the proposed law. That law is the law referred to by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. TEMPLE], and among other things it authorized the employment or calling forth, as the Constitution says, of the militia, to repel invasion and to serve within or without the United States. We heard Gen. Davis, the Judge Advocate General of the United States Army, together with his staff of lawyers in the War Department. There were several very eminent lawyers on the committee, not counting the chairman. Among others I recall Mr. Floyd, of Arkansas, a very able lawyer, and for many years a member of the Committee on the Judiciary. We discussed this matter pro and con, and concluded that it was perfectly constitutional to enact this law to authorize the employment of the militia outside of the United States for the same reasons that we employ any army—that is, to repel invasion, actual or threatened, or to enforce the laws of the Union. That was in 1908. In 1912, during the administration of President Taft, the question arose as to sending an expeditionary force to Mexico, and the War Department for some reason wanted the opinion of the Attorney General, and it framed a question that was entirely unusual and extraordinary, because it contemplated a state of facts that showed it was the intention of the Government to violate international law. The question was put to the Attorney General:

> Whether or not, under existing law, the President has authority to call forth the Organized Militia of the States and send it into a foreign country with the Regular Army as a part of an army of occupation, especially should the United States intervene in the affairs of such country under conditions short of actual warfare.

To send an army into a foreign country short of actual war! Well, the obvious answer was, it was unlawful to send an army into any foreign country, whether it was the Regular Army or the Militia. That is unconstitutional under the law, but on the strength of the opinion of Attorney General Wickersham the War Department was upset entirely. They at once assumed that the great authority of the Attorney General was enough to override the law. Heretofore we had supposed that it took a judicial decision to nullify laws as being unconstitutional, but here is an opinion—an ex parte opinion—of the Attorney General, which on its face misquotes the Constitution which I have heretofore pointed out—an ex parte opinion of Attorney General Wickersham made to serve to overturn a solemn act of Congress which was enacted by both Houses and signed by the President of the United States. The War Department assumed that that law was unconstitutional, and they went to work to invent some law whereby they would authorize the National Guard to serve outside of the United States in an emergency, which is outside of the reasons described in the Constitution.

In 1914 the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] reported the Volunteer Army act which provided for the reenlistment of the militia in the Volunteer Army. I asked him at that time if the main reason for that provision of law, which sought to transform the militia into a volunteer army, was not the opinion of the Attorney General made upon a supposititious case which could not legally exist, and he admitted that that was the excuse and the reason for providing for this transformation of the militia into a volunteer army. This same excuse or reason, I understand, was put forth by the department for asking for the recent reorganization act, whereby they seek to transform the National Guard into the United States Army.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEENERSON. I would like to have the 10 minutes I understood I was to have.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will state to the gentleman we have been forced to cut the allowance down to accommodate the Members who desire to speak. If the gentleman insists on having the two minutes more, I will give it to him.

Mr. STEENERSON. I hope I will not be considered rude in asking for the 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas controls the time.

Mr. ANTHONY. If the gentleman insists on the two minutes more, I will have to give it to him.

Mr. STEENERSON. I do.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman two minutes additional.

Mr. STEENERSON. The trouble is that owing to this misunderstanding of what constitutes the National Guard we have got into this difficulty with some of the militia. The gentleman from Massachusetts stated there were a thousand members of the National Guard of the various States who had failed to come in since the militia was called forth by the President of the United States. The gentleman from Virginia, I believe, stated some 1,000 failed to answer the call and refused to serve, and this, as I understand it, is the emergency that requires the passage of this resolution authorizing the drafting of these men.

Now, these men would not refuse to answer to the call if their legal status was clear. It is a result of this bungling legislation, of jumping at a conclusion that the act of 1910 was unconstitutional because somebody said so, without hearing any argument upon it and without any judicial decision upon the question. That is the cause of these militiamen throughout the country having doubt about their rights in the premises. It is not lack of patriotism in these men. I dare say the members of the National Guard through every State of the Union are the most patriotic of all our citizens. They have all given proof of that by their volunteering to serve and training for war, and here, although I am perfectly willing to do everything in my power to support the Government and support the President, yet it seems to me that this term "draft" casts a reflection upon members of the National Guard, which we ought not to have done, and if there is any way to avoid it I should like to see it avoided. There ought to be found some other word, like "enlist," "enroll," or the like.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

I here insert my remarks on the voluntary Army bill, April 27, 1914:

"Mr. STEENERSON. As I understand this bill, it does away with the Organized Militia to the extent that they come into this volunteer force.

"Mr. HAY. It does away with the Organized Militia as such in time of war. That is, I mean if the Organized Militia wants to be a part of the force that is going to war it must volunteer.

"Mr. STEENERSON. And it must cease to be an Organized Militia of the State.

"Mr. HAY. Yes.

"Mr. STEENERSON. The necessity for that is the opinion of the Attorney General, rendered a couple of years ago, that the Organized Militia law, act of March 21, 1908, the bill for which was reported by me as chairman of the Committee on Militia, providing that the militia might be called out and sent either within or without the United States—that that law was unconstitutional.

"Mr. HAY. Yes.

"Mr. STEENERSON. And it is to obviate that constitutional objection that this bill is written, endeavoring to transfer the militia into a volunteer army.

"Mr. HAY. That is one reason.

"Mr. STEENERSON. Is not that the principal reason?

"Mr. HAY. I can not say that that is the principal reason for this bill. We would have to have volunteers anyway, because the Organized Militia would not be sufficient.

"Mr. STEENERSON. If the ruling of the Attorney General should turn out to be erroneous, that the Organized Militia law amendment to the Dick law referred to, if that law should be determined to be constitutional, so that it would be legal and constitutional for the President to send the Organized Militia outside the United States, then the necessity for this provision would not exist.

"Mr. HAY. No; it would not.

"Mr. STEENERSON. I want to say to the House that the only authority was the ruling of Attorney General Wickersham on that point, and when the Committee on Militia considered the Dick law and amendment that was requested by the War Department it contained this provision, that the militia might be used outside the United States. The Judge Advocate General of the United States Army made an elaborate argument and cited many authorities, to the effect that when the President calls forth the militia pursuant to a declaration of war it is in reality and effect to execute a law of the Union, and therefore within the Constitution.

"The opinion of the Attorney General of February 17, 1912, to the Secretary of War was in answer to the following question:

"Whether or not under existing laws the President has authority to call forth the Organized Militia of the States and send it into a foreign country with the Regular Army as a part of an army of occupation, especially should the United States intervene in the affairs of such country under conditions short of actual warfare?

"The question seems to have been unfortunately framed, for under the conditions specified it is at least open to grave question whether the President could legally send any army whatever into a foreign country. It seems to me that the sending of an army by the President into a foreign country 'under conditions short of actual warfare' would ordinarily be an act of war and would be illegal unless previously authorized by law; that is, by declaration of war in due form enacted by Congress. Commenting on the clause of the Constitution which says—

"The Congress shall have power to provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, to suppress insurrection, and to repel invasions—

"The opinion says:

"What is certainly meant by this provision is that Congress shall have power to call forth the militia in aid of the civil power, for the peaceful execution of the laws of the Union, wherever such laws are in force and may be compulsorily executed.

"But Congress is nowhere authorized to call forth the militia. That power rests with the President. All that Congress can do is to provide by law for calling it forth. It is the President who, as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States and of the militia, does the calling and not Congress.

"The whole opinion is based upon the theory that the laws of the United States have no extraterritorial force. Speaking of ordinary laws, that is true; but there are other laws of the United States that do have extraterritorial force and which do require to be executed. Congress has the power to 'define and punish piracies and felonies on the high seas and offenses against the law of nations.' Manifestly laws enacted in pursuance of this authority operate extraterritorially. Congress also has power under the Constitution 'to declare war, grant letters of marque and reprisal, and make rules concerning captures on land and water.' Obviously laws enacted pursuant to this authority also have an extraterritorial force and require to be executed. The same can be said of laws enacted pursuant to the authority 'to raise and support armies, to provide for the maintenance of the Navy, and to make rules for the government and regulation of land and naval forces.' There are three cases in which the militia may be called forth by the President: First, to execute the laws of the Union; second, to suppress insurrections; and third, repel invasions.' The power to declare war is vested in Congress and is legislative in its character, and its exercise is an act of Congress and a law and is subject to the approval of the President. To repel invasions or suppress insurrections requires no declaration of war, and hence no law. It is one of the duties of the Executive of the United States, incident to his office, to do both of these things without any further legislation; that is, suppress insurrections and repel invasions. But offensive war must be commenced by a declaration of war, and the power to declare war is in Congress, and therefore must be preceded by a law which requires execution.

"At the time of the adoption of the Constitution the Regular Army consisted of 75 men; 50 were at West Point and 25 were at Pittsburgh, and the framers of the Constitution recognized full well that Congress was not under the slightest obligation to establish a standing army or to provide for any other military forces than the militia, with a view to national defense, and volunteer forces seem not to have been known to the framers of the Constitution, for it is a subject never mentioned either in that instrument or in the debates. The first appearance of volunteer forces seems to have been in 1812. The militia was used in the War of 1812, in the War with Mexico, and in the Civil War, and was sent beyond our borders whenever necessary, and when so sent they were sent to execute the laws of the Union, enacted pursuant to the Constitution.

"The act of May 27, 1908, 'To further amend the act entitled "An act to promote the efficiency of the militia,"' etc., provides for the calling forth of the militia by the President, and that he may specify in his call the period of time for which such service may be required, and that the militia so called shall continue in the service during the term specified, either within or outside of the territory of the United States. The question of the constitutionality of this provision was carefully considered before its enactment, and I have seen no reason since to change my opinion as to its validity.

"The construction adopted by the Attorney General wipes out of the Constitution the first cause for calling forth the militia entirely and makes the clause read as if it said 'to suppress insurrection and repel invasions for the purpose of enforcing the laws of the Union,' but as the sole object and purpose of suppressing insurrections and repelling invasions is to enforce all domestic laws, both of the States and the Union, such a limitation on the power to call forth the militia would be absurd.

"Besides declarations of war there are, as we have seen, other laws of the Union, authorized by the Constitution, that operate extraterritorially, and require to be executed. These laws do not follow, but accompany our flag wherever our forces may be. Assuming, therefore, that circumstances could arise when it would be lawful in time of peace to send an army of occupation into a foreign country, it could only be to execute those other laws of the Union, and therefore the use of the Army and the militia for such an enterprise rests exactly upon the same footing, and there is as much authority for the one as the other.

"Mr. HAY. I did not yield to the gentleman to make an argument.

"Mr. STEENERSON. Of course, we are going to pass this bill because of the emergency that now exists. We will stand by the President and give him what he asks for the defense of the Nation and its honor. At the same time it will be well to bear in mind that this measure, so far as it relates to the militia, is revolutionary in character. It wipes out the militia and allows its men a preference in enlisting in the new volunteer force. The Constitution of the United States provides that Congress shall have power 'to provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia, and for governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States, reserving to the States, respectively, the appointment of the officers, and the authority of training the militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress.' Under this bill not only have the States nothing to say about officering the transformed militia organizations, but only those men are accepted whom the United States accepts, the same as new recruits."

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR].

Mr. FARR. Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, if we pass this legislation it will give the President the authority to send these drafted troops into Mexico. I would like to ask the chairman of this committee if that is a true statement.

Mr. HAY. He would. That is the purpose of it.

Mr. FARR. Then, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, this practically is a declaration of war.

Mr. HAY. I should say that the purpose of the resolution is to give the President control of these troops, and if in his opinion it is necessary he can send them.

Mr. FARR. Without further action on the part of the House?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. FARR. Then I repeat that this is a declaration of war.

Our forces are now in Mexico by the courtesy of Carranza. An arrangement was entered into with Carranza, as the head of the Government recognized by the President of the United States, to permit our troops to go there and catch Villa if we could. We have not succeeded, and Carranza, the head of the de facto Government of Mexico, so recognized by the President, requests that American soldiers be withdrawn.

Mr. GORDON. And if the President had never sent these troops into Mexico would the gentleman still think it a declaration of war to pass these resolutions?

Mr. FARR. But the fact that we are keeping these troops in Mexico against the protest of recognized Mexican authority means that we are in a belligerent state. The civilized world recognizes that fact, and history will write it down as an unrighteous proceeding and make this country responsible for the bloodshed that may follow. We are trespassers in Mexico today. Let us reverse the situation and suppose Mexican troops were on our soil under the arrangement that our soldiers are in Mexican territory, and the President should say, "We want you to retire," what would we do? We would regard that as trespassing. We are trespassers. If we want war, let the President proceed along the present lines, continue our troops in Mexico, and conflicts will be certain. In our consciences we will call it an unrighteous war, a war that will lose hundreds of thousands of our people, with its awful wake of sorrow and misery, and cost millions and millions of dollars of American money.

Mr. GARRETT. Do I understand the gentleman to assert that our troops being there now is unjustifiable?

Mr. FARR. It is unjustifiable. We have no right on that soil. And so far as what happened up to the raid on our troops at Columbus, it is a closed book. We can not go back of that as a reason for war NOW. It is true that we have cause to arraign the Mexican Government for many and serious things that they have done to our people, and we have been patient and tolerant, but the moment that we entered into the agreement with Carranza and he permitted our troops to enter Mexico on a punitive expedition, and that under certain conditions we would permit Carranza's troops to come into our territory, precludes as a justification for war to-day what happened previously to this agreement.

The fact is that long before this we should have had sufficient troops on the Mexican border to protect our people and their interests. That would have prevented the attack at Columbus and made unnecessary the punitive expedition—the cause of our most serious trouble with Mexico.

Does the issue of war rest with Carranza? Have we no responsibility?

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks and insert in them a letter that I sent to Mr. Burleson day before yesterday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman's request will be granted.

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Now, gentlemen, I am inherently a a man of peace. My life has been one of turmoil, but I have always believed in peace, but there are times when war is an absolute necessity and righteous. There was a time when God Almighty Himself commanded the sun to stand still while his chosen army crushed a heathen despotism that righteousness, religion, and justice might prevail over the land through war as a last resort. We have borne intolerance, outrage, rapine, and plunder that no nation on earth would have permitted. We have borne it realizing our great strength. But the time has come when, in a stretch of nearly 2,000 miles, for 20 miles inside the border families can not go to sleep at night except in dread of invasion and outrage. In scores of towns they put out pickets at night before they go to bed, dreading the consequences of nightfall. We have seen our homes ruthlessly outraged and the sanctity of our homes desecrated. We have seen our property stolen and carried across the river to make booty for freebooters, and we have borne it all because we are cognizant of our strength and willing to extend mercy because there is no stable government in Mexico. We have tried in every honorable way to help establish a government there. I have indorsed the policy the President has taken thus far. I indorse the move here to-day. We have reached a point where we must do something. Religion demands it; justice to ourselves demands it; business demands it; civilization demands it. We have a serious situation in Mexico, whether we call it war or not. We did not call it war when we moved against the Black Hawks and other Indians, but we called it stopping the riots and outrages of an irresponsible people. Under the Monroe doctrine we must do something. Can we say to the world that our neighbor Republic shall wreck itself and outrage civilization and deny them the right to go into Mexico and take care of their own rights and we refuse to take care of them and their property? That is wrong in the sight of God and wrong in the sight of humanity. The time has come, gentlemen, when we must do something; we must tranquilize Mexico for ourselves, for them, and for humanity. [Applause.]

The situation is not only acute and stressful but it has reached a stage that demands immediate relief. War, with me, must be a last resort, and in this case that point has been reached. I repeat that God Almighty Himself, while teaching the world to love peace for its glory and tranquillity, commanded the sun to stand still while His army crushed an intolerable and unscrupulous foe to the peace and harmony of civilization. So it is with us and Mexico. Our homes desecrated and outraged, on our own soil we have suffered murder, rapine, and plunder; and yet in the name of our great strength and power we declined to interfere and crush a weak and war-torn neighbor. But to forbear longer would not only be humiliating and exasperating, but would tend to invite further aggression. Civilization demands now that this great Republic act and settle the Mexican problem with dispatch, certainty, and security. We can not justly refuse to allow foreign peoples to go there and take care of themselves and their property unless we assume the responsibility to take care of their rights. This is one of the virtues of the Monroe doctrine and must be respected by us.

This letter to Gen. Burleson amplifies my views and feelings on this very vexing problem:

JUNE 20, 1916.

Hon. A. S. BURLESON,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR FRIEND BURLESON: Though a devout lover of peace, standing for war only as a last resort, I think we should now intervene in Mexico.

As a measure of self-protection we owe it to our own country. Under the Monroe doctrine we owe it to the other nations whose rights, peoples, and property, like our own, have been shamefully and wantonly disregarded and abused by Mexico. Knowing our strength and power, we have been extremely patient with this war-torn country. Having a high regard for the friendship of Mexico and the Latin countries south of her, President Wilson has used all honorable means to avert a conflict. So long as their slaughter and butchery toward our people was confined to their own territory we undertook in good faith to warn our people out of their country and suffered unspeakable outrages rather than invade their country.

We have aided in every honorable effort that sought to tranquilize that country and give them a stable government. Their incursions now bring murder, outrage, and savage banditism into our own country. This we can not tolerate or condone. The American people, in their own homes, following their own peaceful pursuits, must be protected. Our people have been ruthlessly slain and robbed by a guerrilla warfare carried on against us on our own soil by the people of Mexico. That is their answer and return for all our kindness, all our forbearance and generous forgiveness and fortitude for the past three years.

I am not an advocate of dollar diplomacy and of sacrificing men to save money invested under rules of aggression and imperialism in foreign countries in a scramble for world power. But the vast millions of business investments in Mexico deserve consideration. That is a neighbor country, lying at our own door, and people who are there in honorable and fair enterprise have a right to expect protection against wholesale cruel assassination and of willful destruction of their property.

I have indorsed to the fullest the whole course of the administration in dealing with this vexing Mexican problem. It has been prompted by the noblest impulses and directed with the sublime purpose of preventing war if possible. The President's action now must have the patriotic response of all loyal citizens. Two thousand miles of border line and several millions of our people look to the administration for protection, and civilization looks for and demands that we settle the Mexican problem and restore peace.

As one who is often referred to as an extreme pacifist, I write this letter tendering my hearty support to the President's program.

With best wishes,

J. H. DAVIS.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT].

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, I realize that to say anything here it is necessary to fire rapidly and fall back speedily. I have high respect and regard for the chairman of this Military Affairs Committee. I realize the hindrances and interferences that have met him in his work.

I wish to make several observations that, I believe, reflect the common sentiment of not only the Democratic side of the House but the Republican side. Just a few days ago I was up in my home in Pennsylvania. My business manager is a captain in the National Guard there, and has been for a number of years. When the call was issued to mobilize those men, there were enough additional men volunteered to make half a dozen companies. Therefore, I indorse what was observed by my young friend a while ago on the Democratic side when he said he regarded as odious and obnoxious the word "draft." I do not believe it is necessary to use any "draft" to recruit 500,000 men or a million men in Pennsylvania alone if it is necessary.

And a second observation is that I regret exceedingly to see this great National Guard of the United States absorbed by the Federal Army, and then, after serving for what has been called an emergency, cease to exist as an arm of our military force. And another mistake which will be commented upon adversely, if ever the President was criticized for anything, although I do not stand here, my friends, and criticize, but I merely want to make some observations, and that is because of the fact that he falls short in not assuming his share of responsibility in this entire matter by a failure to come here and lay his cards on the table and tell the country and this Congress what it is all about—this marshaling the hosts from every State and not telling Congress, which is the true lawmaking body, about it. We alone in the last analysis are responsible. We must go back to the people and say why we really declared war without having official knowledge of what it was about. I sincerely trust that before this resolution passes the President, whom I respect and will support in every movement involving the honor of our country, will feel it to be his duty to the American people and to disarm any critic who may undertake to declare that this is more of a political campaign than a military one, and that situation will be remedied if he comes here and tells the Congress upon what exigency he takes this action. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE] is recognized for four minutes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I think we all realize that at this time it may be inopportune to undertake to anticipate too many legal, constitutional, or judicial objections to the possibilities that may lie within the text of this proposed resolution. We are confronted by an emergency in some form or another, whether anybody at the White House declares it or not, and not so much by the vague theories that may be engendered by speculation as to what this emergency may lead to.

I only want to discuss or touch upon, as well as I can in the four minutes allotted to me, two or three points that have been raised here, and will attempt to indulge in no oratory about it.

The question is raised as to what will be the status of these National Guard troops when the emergency has passed, inasmuch as there is no distinct provision in the act of June 3, 1916, that they shall resume their status as National Guardsmen which they occupied before the emergency arose that called them into the service of the United States. While the law does not make an explicit and mandatory direction as to what shall finally become of the troops called into service under this draft, yet I think you will discover upon reflection that it was wisely omitted from the statute, because if troops called into the Federal service under section 111 of the act of June 3, 1916, should—and God forbid—be employed in the field in war for one or two or three years and should have performed splendid veteran service in defense of the flag of the county, it would simply be imposing an additional burden of sacrifice and hardship upon them to say that as a matter of compulsion at the end of that service they should immediately go back and resume their service as National Guardsmen.

It ought to be left optional with an individual member enrolled in the service whether, having performed almost the "last full measure of devotion," he should go back and take up National Guard work again. Perhaps they will have done all that a soldier may be expected to do, and it may be left for other men to fill the ranks in the National Guard made vacant by their sacrifice and heroic service.

Another thing that is suggested here is that the term "emergency" is indefinite and that no one can tell whether they are likely, under some construction or whim of a man empowered to construe the law, to be retained in the service two or three or four years, or whatever it may be, because there is no express limitation of the "emergency." A prominent feature of the fundamental basis upon which our English-speaking parliamentary system is grounded is the power of the purse in the hands of the Commons. No Executive can maintain an army in the field any longer than the Congress is willing for him to do so, and any longer than the Congress will furnish the money to keep the soldiers there. [Applause.] King Charles the First learned that, and all English-speaking men have profited by the example.

Then, as to the use of this odious word "draft," I quite agree with you all that if that word "draft" stood alone in the meaning which is applied to it in the dictionary, it is an odious word. It does seem to mean service under compulsion. But it was written in the act of June 3, 1916, not to make certain that these men would go under compulsion, but to make certain that these men who wanted to be Federalized soldiers, wanted to be a part of the Federal Army, without any constitutional doubt intervening between their willingness to serve and the opportunity of service, could sign an enlistment paper, consenting to the word "draft," so that their own patriotic purpose might be accomplished without the possibility of any intervening law or construction of law to prevent. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Vermont has expired.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I intend to support the Hay amendment to this resolution and to oppose the Walsh amendment.

The resolution as originally drawn provided that the President of the United States, when in his opinion an emergency exists, might call into action these forces. The Hay amendment provides specifically that Congress now declares that an emergency does exist that authorizes the President to call for these forces. The Walsh amendment is an attempt to replace the original proposition of the responsibility of the President.

I need scarcely remind you that this is not a declaration of war, and yet it is of so high a nature that Congress should retain within its own control the decision as to when the emergency exists requiring the use of these citizen soldiers. An attempt to place that responsibility upon the President of the United States is an attempt to evade a responsibility which this Congress must assume and ought to assume, and in the last analysis shall assume. It will not evade the responsibility to put the decision again upon the President of the United States. Gentlemen say, on the other side, or covertly criticize the actions up to date, that they are anxious and willing to support the President and the administration in the policy it thinks right. I want to call the attention of gentlemen to the fact that if they keep the responsibility in the House of Representatives they are the sole judges on their own oath and conscience as to when the emergency exists. No man can escape the responsibility now or hereafter by voting for or against this resolution on the ground that the President of the United States should have assumed and does assume the responsibility. If any gentleman on that side of the House or on this side, upon his oath as a representative of the people in this Congress, believes that an emergency does not exist, it is his constitutional duty to vote against it, and his vote for it can not be excused upon the ground that he is doing it to sustain the President of the United States. [Applause.]

It belongs with this Congress, and it should remain with this Congress. I want to call your attention to the fact that we can not close our eyes to the existence of the emergency. Ever since October, 1912, a condition of revolution has prevailed in the country adjoining our southern border.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. I would be glad to, but I feel that I have not the time.

Mr. NORTON. How long does the gentleman think this emergency has existed?

Mr. BORLAND. An emergency is usually something that culminates, and I think this is one that has culminated. There have been two constitutional governments in Mexico since October, 1912. Both of them have gone down. To-day there is a de facto government in Mexico, a government which has been recognized as a de facto government since the 9th of October, 1915, a government which apparently can not discharge the duties of maintaining civil order and protecting its border adjacent to our southern States. Since that condition of affairs exists, gentlemen can take the responsibility upon their own consciences of voting against calling out an adequate military reserve for that purpose. The responsibility is as much upon them as it is upon any member of the executive. During all that time raids have occurred into American territory. American lives and property have been sacrificed.

Mr. McKENZIE. I yield two minutes to my colleague [Mr. CHIPERFIELD].

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Mr. Chairman, in the haste of drawing my amendment, with the idea of returning the militia to the National Guard, I think the proper language was not used. I now ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment and to substitute another one, which I ask to have reported in my time, and with that I will yield the floor.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman need not have it reported in his own time, but as a matter of right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment and to offer another.

Mr. MANN. He has a right to withdraw it. We are in the House. He withdraws his amendment and offers another.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks he should put the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHIPERFIELD]. If he wants to ask unanimous consent, he ought to have that right.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. I will accept the suggestion of our leader.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman withdraws his amendment and offers another, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CHIPERFIELD: In line 5, after the word "discharged," insert "Provided, That all persons so drafted from the date of their draft stand discharged from the militia during the period of their service under such draft."

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. I have submitted this to the chairman of the committee, and I think it is acceptable to him. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. McKENZIE. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS]. [Applause.]

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I would not vote for this resolution as it is written and sent to us by the War Department unamended, because I think there is danger of extending the Executive function over the legislative function, and that that danger is quite apparent in this as well as in other Congresses. We are the war-declaring power, but this might authorize the Executive to make war. I hesitate to vote for the amendment as suggested by the chairman of the committee, and which is now before us, because it is a specific statement that there is an emergency now existing. We do not have all the facts upon which to make such a statement. I would very much prefer to leave that to the source of the information, which is the Executive Department. I would prefer to vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], which says "if an emergency exists now, in the opinion of the President." He has the information, but he has not communicated it to us. I would not want to say "whenever an emergency exists." That would be general delegation of power upon any emergency. The two are quite different. The Walsh amendment limits the authority to the present situation.

However, I want to make this specific statement to this House as to what I think is the duty of the Congress on an occasion of this kind. While the specific facts are not clear as they have come through the press, and are not considered as official, yet we do know certain things. We do know that our troops are in Mexico, and if they went in without the consent of the de facto government it was an act of war. If they went in with the consent of the de facto government, it is not an act of war. Going in with the consent of the de facto government, and now being ordered out by the de facto government, if we do not withdraw I am sure there can be but one result. We have been ordered to withdraw. Now, as to whether we ought to withdraw or not, I say emphatically that we ought not. We can not under the circumstances come out at this moment. We are there, and whether we went in orderly or not—I believe we did—I would have preferred that we had quelled the bandit in a different way. But we are in, we have not yet gotten what we went after, and I do not believe that the American people would consent to our coming out at the orders of the head of the de facto government under the circumstances, and I would hesitate long before I would vote to withdraw our troops at this time.

I think, my friends, that it ought to be conceded on both sides of the House that the Mexican situation is a distressing one. I do not believe that the watchful-waiting policy will ever be indorsed by the American people. It has been most unfortunate, and the attitude of the administration has been both academic and amateurish.

When Madero was killed, but nine days before Wilson was inaugurated, Taft properly conceded to the incoming administration the right to indicate its wish, and not to turn over the Government to Wilson with a war.

Wilson came to the Congress on the 27th of August, six months after his inauguration, to lay before the Congress the Mexican situation.

His animosity toward Huerta was well known. His instructions to John Lind, his personal representative dispatched to Mexico, indicates his conception of duty toward the country. Here are his words as reported by him to Congress on the 27th of August touching Huerta:

A satisfactory settlement seems to us to be conditioned on—

(a) An immediate cessation of fighting throughout Mexico, a definite armistice solemnly entered into and scrupulously observed;

(b) Security given for an early and free election in which all will agree to take part;

(c) The consent of Gen. Huerta to bind himself not to be a candidate for election as President of the Republic at this election; and

(d) The agreement of all parties to abide by the result of the election and cooperate in the most loyal way in organizing and supporting the new administration.

It was at this time the President announced he would lay an embargo on shipment of arms to Mexico. This was to cripple the de facto government, as it would not affect the revolutionists, since the shipments were to the de facto government. Here are his words:

For the rest, I deem it my duty to exercise the authority conferred upon me by the law of March 14, 1912, to see to it that neither side to the struggle now going on in Mexico receive any assistance from this side of the border. I shall follow the best practice of nations in the matter of neutrality by forbidding the exportation of arms or munitions of war of any kind from the United States to any part of the Republic of Mexico—a policy suggested by several interesting precedents and certainly dictated by many manifest considerations of practical expediency.

It was at this time it was suggested that Americans leave Mexico. If the embargo on arms to Huerta was right, then the lifting of it on behalf of Carranza was a frightful blunder.

On the 20th of April, 1914, the President again addressed Congress on "Our dealings with Huerta." Here is where he asked Congress to cooperate with him in virtual expulsion of Huerta unless he salutes our flag.

In his address on the issue, he said:

Such a salute Gen. Huerta has refused, and I have come to ask your approval and support in the course I now purpose to pursue.

This Government can, I earnestly hope, in no circumstances be forced into war with the people of Mexico. Mexico is torn by civil strife. If we are to accept the tests of its own constitution, it has no government. Gen. Huerta has set his power up in the City of Mexico, such as it is, without right and by methods for which there can be no justification. Only part of the country is under his control. If armed conflict should unhappily come as a result of his attitude of personal resentment toward this Government, we should be fighting only Gen. Huerta and those who adhere to him and give him their support, and our object would be only to restore to the people of the distracted Republic the opportunity to set up again their own laws and their own government.

This request was to land our marines ostensibly to compel the salute. Before the authority was given, and while it was being discussed in the Senate, our marines were landed in Vera Cruz. A score of our boys were killed, and at least 200 Mexicans were killed.

Mr. Speaker, when the President made his appeal to this House, I confess I did not like the President's statement that he was fighting Huerta only. I felt then, as I feel now, he had no constitutional nor human right to say that Huerta must go, nor that he could not be a candidate for election. This was a question not for us to determine.

I felt then, as I feel now, he could not upon any sort of grounds justify a position to force the Huerta, the only sort of government then in Mexico, out, unless he was prepared to accept what would follow the going.

Notwithstanding my deep convictions on this point, I, of course, knew that landing our marines for whatever purpose on Mexican soil was an act of war, and believing the time had come for decisive action, I gave him the support he asked.

I did not expect it to be a marching up the hill in order to march down again and a further invitation for insult.

The flag was never saluted, but Huerta was driven out. His departure was but a signal for conditions to go from bad to worse.

The intervening days which saw flirtation with Villa, and final recognition of Carranza, and the raising of the embargo upon arms, could lead but to one end—total confusion and pitiable impotence. If to recognize Huerta was wrong, then the recognition of Carranza was worse than wrong.

On January 8, 1915, the President expressed himself at Indianapolis as follows:

I hold it as a fundamental principle, and so do you, that every people has the right to determine its own form of government; and until this recent revolution in Mexico, until the end of the Diaz reign, 80 per cent of the people of Mexico never had a "look-in" in determining who should be their governor or what their Government should be. Now, I am for the 80 per cent. It is none of my business, and it is none of your business, how long they take in determining it. It is none of my business, and it is none of yours, how they go about the business. The country is theirs. The Government is theirs. The liberty, if they can get it, and God speed them in getting it, is theirs. And so far as my influence goes while I am President nobody shall interfere with them.

These words are ominous in the light of the present moment. He continues:

That is what I mean by a great emotion, the great emotion of sympathy. Do you suppose that the American people are ever going to count a small amount of material benefit and advantage to people doing business in Mexico against the liberties and the permanent happiness of the Mexican people? Have not European nations taken as long as they wanted and spilt as much blood as they pleased in settling their affairs, and shall we deny that to Mexico because she is weak? No.

This orgy of blood spilling has continued unabated. It began with the death of Madero. It was continued under Huerta, then by Carranza, then by Carbajal, then by Gutierrez, then by Garza, with its culmination in Villa, and now by the combined groups of Mexican bandits.

I will not say this blood spilling is the sort of thing our President declared at Indianapolis should not be interfered with so long as he was President.

But I here and now declare that it is the inevitable outcome of such utterances backed by "watchful waiting." Mr. Speaker, the murderous attacks upon our border, the assassinations at Columbus, N. Mex., which are but items of a protracted campaign of outrages, demand drastic action. If life means anything, if national honor has any significance, such events can not be tolerated. The President is justified in demanding reparation. I doubt the wisdom of the punitive expedition. A reward for the murderers, dead or alive, would have assured the capture without our attempting what is bound to end in conflict.

But we went into Mexico. It is now too late to ask the wisdom of it. We are there. We are ordered out. We will not come out until our mission is satisfied. I am convinced that the de facto government, now tottering on its last legs, has sought this episode as an opportune time and incident to attempt to unify the Mexican factions. I therefore have small hope that its head will act the better part, but I fear will insist upon his demands. The President's recent note depicts a situation too grave to let pass and too serious to permit withdrawing now. It continues:

Continuous bloodshed and disorders have marked its progress. For three years the Mexican Republic has been torn with civil strife, the lives of Americans and other aliens have been sacrificed; vast properties developed by American capital and enterprise have been destroyed or rendered nonproductive; bandits have been permitted to roam at will through the territory contiguous to the United States and to seize, without punishment or without effective attempt at punishment, the property of Americans, while the lives of citizens of the United States who ventured to remain in Mexican territory or to return there to protect their interests have been taken, in some cases barbarously taken, and the murderers have neither been apprehended nor brought to justice.

We are in Mexico, in my opinion, in all probability to stay, and just as surely as we are in this Chamber that means war, and we might as well face it. With that statement of my deep conviction I am willing to uphold the dignity of the Nation and to vote for the resolution. I would prefer to vote for the Walsh amendment. If that can not carry, I will vote for the Hay amendment, because I am sure that we will not come out of Mexico, for if we do it will mean war ultimately, because it will still be an unsettled problem of the border, and if we do not it is almost certain war anyway, and we might as well face it. This is no time to quibble over the past. It is a question of the moment. A decisive stand is the best possible insurance now. We can not correct the inevitable fruits of "watchful waiting" by withholding our vote to take care of a situation which all of us deplore has developed at our very door and while we have had our eyes wide open. There is but one thing now to do—command the situation as befits a great Nation.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HULBERT].

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Speaker, some time ago, when the Army reorganization bill was before the House, there was quite a discussion with regard to that feature of the bill which provided that when war is imminent or upon the declaration of war certain things should be done. A substitute was offered by my colleague from New York [Mr. BENNET] containing the words "when in his judgment the public interests may require." My colleague at that time affirmed his belief that this House and the people of this country could put their trust in the President to exercise that right with care, caution, and prudence. But the majority of the Members of this House, and, if my recollection serves me right, a majority of the Members upon that side of the aisle, voted against that amendment, because they contended that it would usurp into the hands of the Executive a power which belongs to this House alone.

Their attention was called to the fact that President Polk, in connection with the Mexican War, took the Army of the United States into Mexico and then notified Congress that a state of war existed by the action of Mexico. I recall that men asserted on the floor of the House at that time that it should not be left to the discretion of one man to determine when war was imminent, and that there should be a restricted provision in the bill making it necessary that the President of the United States should come back to this House for his authority; and that, Mr. Speaker, is what has been done to-day in the presentation of the resolution which has been offered by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, and I intend to support it. [Applause.]

Mr. BENNET. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULBERT. I can hardly yield in the five minutes allotted to me, but after I have put in the RECORD what I have secured the time to do, if I have any time left, I will be glad to yield. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. TEMPLE] has referred to the opinion of an Attorney General of a previous administration who, he said, declared unconstitutional that provision of the Dick law which gave the Government the right to send the militia outside of the borders of the United States. I want to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, by including the opinion of former Attorney General Wickersham, rendered on the 17th of February, 1912, upon the question whether or not under existing law the President has the authority to call forth the Organized Militia of the States and send it into a foreign country with the Regular Army, as a part of the army of occupation. I concede that in his opinion the Attorney General held that it could not be used for such a purpose, but he also explicitly declared that there could be no doubt of the right of the President of the United States, without specific authority other than that conferred by existing law, to send the militia of the several States and Territories under this decision along with the Regular Army across the border for the purpose of repelling an invasion. Some gentlemen have asserted that there is great danger—and I do not think there can be any doubt about it—that we will be invaded by a superior force from the south of us unless we supplement the members of the Regular Army who are already there, and the President has the authority under this decision. [Applause.] But he asks the authority and concurrence of Congress. This is a time for patriotism, not of partisanship.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The opinion referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, February 17, 1912.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

SIR: I have the honor to respond to your note of the 8th instant, in which you ask my opinion upon the following question:

"Whether or not, under existing laws, the President has authority to call forth the Organized Militia of the States and send it into a foreign country with the Regular Army as a part of an army of occupation, especially should the United States intervene in the affairs of such country under conditions short of actual warfare."

From very early times, in both England and this country, the militia has always been considered and treated as a military body quite distinct and different from the regular or standing Army; governed by different laws and rules, and equally different as to the time, place, or occasion of its service. One of the most notable points of difference is this: While the latter was in the continued service of the Government and might be called into active service at all times and in all places where armed force is required for any purpose, the militia could be called into the actual service of the Government only in the few special cases provided for by law. Their service has always been considered as of a rather domestic character, for the protection and defense of their own country, and the enforcement of its laws.

This has always been the English doctrine; and in some instances acts of Parliament have expressly forbidden the use of the militia outside of the Kingdom.

Our ancestors who framed and adopted our Constitution and early laws got their ideas of a militia, its nature and purposes, from this, and must be taken to have intended substantially the same military body, with the same limitations of the occasion and nature of their service If they had intended to enlarge this, they would have said so, just as they have when they intended to further limit or restrict the occasion or nature of their service.

When the Constitution gives to Congress the power "to raise and support armies" and to provide "for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions" and makes the President "the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and the militia of the several States when called into the actual service of the United States," it is speaking of two different bodies, the one Regular Army, in the continuous service of the Government and liable to be called into active service at any time or in any place where armed force is required, and the other a body for domestic service and liable to be called into the service of the Government only upon the particular occasions named in the Constitution. And acts of Congress relating to the Army and the militia must have the same construction.

It is certain that it is only upon one or more of these three occasions—when it is necessary to suppress insurrections, repel invasions, or to execute the laws of the United States—that even Congress can call this militia into the service of the United States or authorize it to be done.

As "insurrection" is necessarily internal and domestic, within the territorial limits of the Nation, this portion of the sentence can afford no warrant for sending the militia to suppress it elsewhere. And even if an insurrection of our own citizens were set on foot and threateningly maintained in a foreign jurisdiction and upon our border, to send an armed force there to suppress it would be an act of war which the President can not rightfully do.

The term "to repel invasion" may be, in some respects, more elastic in its meaning. Thus, if the militia were called into the service of the General Government to repel an invasion, it would not be necessary to discontinue their use at the boundary line, but they might within certain limits at least) pursue and capture the invading force even beyond that line, and just as the Regular Army might be used for that purpose. This may well be held to be within the meaning of the term "to repel invasion."

Then, too, if an armed force were assembled upon our border, so near and under circumstances which plainly indicated hostility and an intended invasion, this Government might attack and capture or defeat such forces, using either the Regular Army or the militia for that purpose. This, also, would be but one of the ways of repelling an invasion.

But this is quite different from and affords no warrant for sending the militia into a foreign country in time of peace and when no invasion is made or threatened.

The only remaining occasion for calling out the militia is "to execute the laws of the Union." But this certainly means to execute such laws where, and only where, they are in force and can be executed or enforced. The Constitution or laws of the United States have no extraterritorial force, and can not be compulsorily executed beyond or outside of the territorial limits of the United States.

It is true that treaties made in pursuance of the Constitution are, equally with acts of Congress, the supreme law of the land; but their observance, outside of our own jurisdiction, can not be enforced in the same way. The observance and performance, outside of our own jurisdiction, of treaty stipulations and obligations are left much to the honor, good faith, and comity of the other contracting party, reenforced at times by a regard for the consequencies of a breach. We can not send either the Regular Army or the militia into a foreign country to execute such treaties or our laws. Such an invasion of a foreign country would be an act of war.

Outside of our own limits "the laws of the Union" are not executed by armed force, either regular or militia.

The Constitution had already given to Congress the unlimited power to declare war at any time and for whatever cause it chose. It did not, in this provision, attempt the useless thing of giving to Congress an additional power to declare war, or to afford an additional ground for doing so.

What is certainly meant by this provision is that Congress shall have power to call out the militia in aid of the civil power for the peaceful execution of the laws of the Union, wherever such laws are in force and may be compulsorily executed: Much as a sheriff may call upon the posse comitatus to peacefully disperse a riot, or execute the laws.

Under our Constitution, as it has been uniformly construed from the first, the military is subordinate and subservient to the civil power, and it can be called upon to execute the laws of the Union only in aid of the civil power and where the civil power has jurisdiction of such enforcement. Even the Regular Army can be thus called upon only on such occasions; and, certainly, the militia can not be thus called upon at any other.

Then, as the civil power is without force in a foreign country, and as even the Regular Army can not be sent into another country to there execute the laws of the Union, it follows that the Constitution confers no power to send the militia into a foreign country for the purpose stated in the question here considered. On the contrary, by its specific enumeration of the only occasions for calling out the militia, it clearly forbids this.

In all this I am not unmindful that nations sometimes do make hostile demonstrations and use armed force to compel the observance by another nation of its treaty obligations and sometimes send armed forces into another country to protect the lives and rights of its own citizens there.

I shall briefly notice these in their application to our own country, its Constitution, and laws. It will be observed, and as controlling and conclusive of the present question, that, in case of a hostile demonstration against or a forcible attack upon another nation to enforce its treaty obligations, or to punish their infraction, there is no question involved of executing the laws of the invading nation, for such laws have no force or existence there. While the Constitution makes itself and the laws and treaties in pursuance thereof the supreme law of the land, it is only in our own land where such laws are supreme or of any force. As to the other contracting party, a treaty is a mere compact, depending for its observance upon the good faith, comity, or other moral considerations. The Constitution can not make itself or the treaties or laws made under it the supreme law of any other nation, or give to either any force or existence beyond our own borders. So that when an armed force is used to compel the observance of treaty obligations or to punish or obtain compensation for their violation, there is no question of executing any law of the Union, for there is no such law there. It is but the forcible compelling of the observance of an agreement or compensation for its breach. The provision referred to does not warrant the use of the militia for this purpose.

Just so, it is, when in troublous times an army of occupation, large or small, is sent into a foreign country to protect the lives and the rights of our own citizens. Here, too, no law of the Union is being executed by such invasion, for no law of the Union exists, or can be enforced there.

While it is the duty of every nation to afford proper protection to foreigners who are lawfully within its borders, yet this is not because of any law of the nation of which such foreigners are subjects, for no such law exists, or has any force there. No one can say in such a case that we are executing or enforcing any law of the Union. We are but aiding or compelling the foreign government to execute its own laws and to perform its own duty. As no law of the Union is being executed by such invasion, the militia can not be called out under this provision to take part in it. As no law of the Union can exist or be in force in any foreign country the militia can not be called out to enforce any such law there.

The plain and certain meaning and effect of this constitutional provision are to confer upon Congress the power to call out the militia "to execute the laws of the Union" within our own borders, where, and where only, they exist, have any force, or can be executed by anyone. This confers no power to send the militia into a foreign country to execute our laws, which have no existence or force there, and can not be there executed.

If authority is needed for the conclusion here reached the following may suffice:

In Ordronaux, Constitutional Legislation, page 501, it is said:

"The Constitution distinctly enumerates the three exclusive purposes for which the militia may be called into the service of the United States. Those purposes are: First, to execute the laws of the Union; second, to suppress insurrection; and third, to repel invasions.

"These three occasions representing necessities of a strictly domestic character, plainly indicate that the services required of the militia can be rendered only upon the soil of the United States or of its Territories. * * * In the history of this provision of the Constitution there is nothing indicating that it was even contemplated that such troops should be employed for purposes of offensive warfare outside the limits of the United States. And it is but just to infer that the enumeration of the specific occasions on which alone the militia can be called into the service of the General Government was intended as a distinct limitation upon their employment.

"Being the ministers of the law to enforce its commands, they can only be summoned by the lawmaking power to act within the extent of its jurisdiction and in the manner prescribed by the Constitution. They can not consequently be used to invade the territory of a neighboring country or to enforce any public rights abroad. * * *

"The militia of the States restricted to domestic purposes alone are to be distinguished, therefore, from the Army proper of the United States, which, whether in the form of regular troops or volunteers, may be used to invade a foreign country as well as to repel the attack of foreign enemies."

And Von Holtz, Constitutional Law, page 170, it is said, "the militia can not be taken out of the country."

In Kneedler v. Lane (45 Pa. St., 238), Judge Strong, speaking for the court, said:

"Apart from the obligations assumed by treaty, it is well known that there are many other cases where the rights of a nation and of its citizens can not be protected or vindicated within its own boundaries. But the power conferred by Congress over the militia is insufficient to enable the fulfillment of the demands of such treaties, or to protect the rights of the Government or its citizens in those cases in which protection must be sought beyond the territorial limits of the country."

And see Houston v. Moore (5 Wheat., 1) and Martin v. Mott (12 Wheat., 19, 27).

It is true that the act of January 21, 1903, as amended by the act of May 27, 1908 (35 Stat., pt. 1, 399), provides:

"That whenever the President calls forth the Organized Militia of any State, Territory, or of the District of Columbia, to be employed in the service of the United States, he may specify in his call the period for which such service is required, and the militia, so called, shall continue to serve during the term so specified, either within or without the territory of the United States, unless sooner relieved by order of the President."

But this must be read in view of the constitutional power of Congress to call forth the militia only to suppress insurrection, repel invasions, or to execute the laws of the Union. Congress can not, by its own enactment, enlarge the power conferred upon it by the Constitution; and if this provision were construed to authorize Congress to use the Organized Militia for any other than the three purposes specified, it would be unconstitutional. This provision applies only to cases where, under the Constitution, said militia may be used outside of our own borders, and was doubtless inserted as a matter of precaution, and to prevent the possible recurrence of what took place in our last war with Great Britain, when portions of the militia refused to obey orders to cross the Canadian frontier.

I think that the constitutional provision here considered not only affords no warrant for the use of the militia by the General Government, except to suppress insurrection, repel invasions, or to execute the laws of the Union, but, by its careful enumeration of the three occasions or purposes for which the militia may be used, it forbids such use for any other purpose; and your question is answered in the negative.

Respectfully,

GEO. W. WICKERSHAM,
Attorney General.

[By unanimous consent, Mr. STEPHENS of Texas, Mr. FARR and Mr. FESS were given leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.]

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, if the President of the United States is prepared to declare to the Congress that an emergency exists, I am prepared to vote him all the support he deems necessary. The President has made no such declaration in this instance, but a message has come to the House, through the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee, that the Secretary of War has indicated that there is a necessity for the passage of this resolution.

I do not think we should be asked to pass this resolution with the Hay amendment attached on any such meager information as has been given to the House. What we are about to do is to take over upon Congress responsibility for the drafting of the National Guard by declaring that an emergency exists, about which the President has given us no official information. Our responsibility here is that of direct representatives of the people. We have as much right to information warranting a declaration of war as has the President himself. It is due to us that we should have sufficient information before we vote the people of the country into war or before we vote them into taxes to sustain war; but, as a matter of fact, there has been no official communication upon this very serious matter, even such as we would require from any one of the departments before we passed the most trivial legislation. For one, I object to Congress constantly submitting itself on grave and important questions to some other will than its own. We have had too many instances of legislation passed without that careful deliberation which this body ought to insist upon as a matter of right.

The Constitution of the United States provides what the duties of the President shall be. He is undoubtedly the Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy of the United States and he has power to call out the militia, but the President has no right to declare war without the consent of Congress nor to impose taxes upon the people for the purposes of war without consulting that body. The right to declare war is specifically conferred upon Congress, because Congress is supposed to be more closely in touch with the plain people, who have to do the fighting and who must bear the burden of supplying revenue. The President has taken to himself certain powers with respect to sending armed forces into Mexico which might fairly be challenged under the Constitution. If Congress has any rights under the Constitution with respect to these matters, undue advantage should not be taken of them even by the President. We are here as Representatives of a sovereign people to act on matters of vital interest to their welfare, even in the matter of taxes, life, and death. Presidents have recognized this coordinate jurisdiction in numerous instances. President McKinley was not above coming to Congress to ask its support and its confidence before we embarked upon the Spanish-American War. He made plain to this body the difficulties which confronted him and he received unanimous support. An appropriation of $50,000,000 was voted to him without question.

President Wilson, who is a great historian and whose present responsibilities are very great, can not be oblivious of the coordinate jurisdiction of Congress in the matter of a declaration of war. The President has gone far beyond other Presidents in coming to Congress in person. He has been upon the rostrum yonder time and time again, and we have listened to the oral delivery of his suggestions. In this very matter of Mexico he has been here at least twice—once to tell us about his policy of "watchful waiting" and again to urge us to support him in a declaration of war upon one Victoriano Huerta. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, of course it was impossible in four minutes to fully discuss so serious a question as that of drafting for an indefinite period of service in the Regular Army of the United States 100,000 young men attached to the National Guard of the various States who are to be taken from their homes to engage in a perilous service at the discretion of the President. But under leave to extend these remarks I will continue what I had hoped to say in the four minutes allotted to me. I observed that the President had been here to tell Congress about his "watchful waiting" policy, which resulted in Americans being driven from Mexico without the protection of their flag, and that on another occasion he had addressed the Congress, requesting its support in his war upon Gen. Victoriano Huerta, the President of Mexico.

What President Wilson said in his second address on Mexico had to do with an alleged insult to the American flag on a small boat in Tampico Harbor. The President sought to have the flag saluted, and in the course of his address stated that he had already sent the American fleet under Admiral Mayo—to insist that the flag of the United States should be saluted in such a way as to indicate a new spirit and attitude on the part of the Huertistas.

That was in April, 1914—two years and more ago.

Then the President, who had already made his declaration, said to the Congress:

Such a salute Gen. Huerta has refused, and I have come to ask your approval and support in the course I now propose to pursue.

Later on in his address the President, recognizing the right of Congress to be consulted in matters of this kind, said:

No doubt I could do what is necessary in the circumstances to enforce respect for our Government without recourse to the Congress and yet not exceed my constitutional powers as President, but I do not wish to act in a matter possibly of so grave consequence except in close conference and cooperation with both the Senate and House. I therefore come to ask your approval that I should use the armed forces of the United States in such ways and to such an extent as may be necessary to obtain from Gen. Huerta and his adherents the fullest recognition of the rights and dignity of the United States, even amidst the distressing conditions now unhappily obtaining in Mexico.

In this instance the President came to Congress, and, while circumstances were not of so momentous a character as those which now seemingly confront us, he laid his war proposition before the Congress, as under the Constitution it was his duty to do, and he obtained the sanction of this body to go ahead. There was very little debate upon the matter because of the desire of Congress to support the President, even though he had sent our warships upon an apparently hostile errand before Congress officially knew anything about it.

Gentlemen say we have sufficient information about the present Mexican situation to warrant us in passing this resolution, relieving the President of the necessity of declaring an emergency, sufficient to draft the National Guard, and putting that responsibility over upon Congress, even though there has been no official word or line from the President or his Secretary of War. Gentlemen in their haste to pass the so-called Hensley peace resolution, shortly before the outbreak of the European war, gave the same kind of assurance then. They told the House that because some newspaper reported that Winston Churchill had recommended a year's cessation of naval construction, therefore the United States Congress should fall in line and recommend that all shipbuilding for naval purposes should stop for one year. That resolution was contested by so few Members that it passed almost unanimously, and the United States was on record at the outbreak of the European war as favoring no more battleships. We had no word at that time from any department on the subject. It was an instance of loose legislation, notwithstanding it gave expression to an idealistic dream.

I am inclined to believe that a serious situation confronts us in Mexico, but I am not wholly willing that the Congress, which has not been consulted or even informed as to the sending of American troops into a foreign country, shall be obliged to assume entire responsibility for that condition. If the President needs the 100,000 young men whom we are now to draft for the Regular Army service, he should at least inform us of that fact. The young men who have enlisted are ready and anxious to serve their country, and I assume that we have been put in such a position in Mexico as to require their services. I shall vote to give the President authority to send them wherever needed to uphold the honor and the dignity of the flag, but I shall do so regretting that the true conditions, as known to the President and the War Department, are not more fully confided to the representatives of the people assembled in Congress.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CRAGO].

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Speaker, I want to assure you that I have no criticisms to make at this time regarding our diplomatic and other relations between the United States and Mexico. I do, however, want to say a word about this resolution.

We seem to be agreed that we are here to support the President of the United States in any emergency which may arise, and I take it that we do this as citizens and not as partisans. However, in considering a resolution of this kind we have another duty to perform. We are legislating here not only for the head of the Army, but we are legislating here for the men and boys of this country who shoulder the rifles and follow the flag wherever they are told to go; and I want to say that it makes a great deal of difference how these men are called and under what terms and conditions they are taken into the service of the United States. They are not concerned about this to-day. These young men who are flocking to the colors are not asking about the terms of enlistment or anything of that kind, but in the years to come, after 6 months or 12 months or 2 years or 3 years of service for their country they and their friends will be asking and wondering what the terms of their service were and why their rights were not properly safeguarded. I know the chairman of this committee too well, I believe, to think that he would want any resolution put through here which would not safeguard the rights of these men who are going to the colors. I take it that if the obligation prescribed in the new Army act had been taken by these National Guardsmen it would make no difference what kind of a resolution we passed here, whether it prescribed the terms of enlistment or not; but inasmuch as that oath has not been taken, I think it a vital matter that a limit be put upon the time for which these men shall be taken into the service of the United States. I am not so much concerned as to what shall happen to the National Guard in this country when this emergency is over.

In 1898 and 1899 there emerged from the old National Guard a better guard than we had when war was declared upon Spain. The men came back. Probably 50 per cent of the reorganized companies were composed of men who had seen service, but the younger element also came in, and they promptly formed the new regiments. We have provided in our Army reorganization bill a reserve battalion for each regiment. I am not concerned so much as to that, but I have a vital concern about the safeguarding of the rights of these men who are being called to the colors, and I believe it is very necessary that some limitation should be placed upon the length of this service. Another thing. I do not want to see this mobilization carried on just as an emergency very long, because we are calling hundreds of thousands of our citizens into the Army, and they will receive no benefits from the volunteer soldier acts which have been passed in the past; none of the pension laws will be applicable to them save the ones applicable to the Regular Army, and none of the benefits which would accrue to the volunteer soldier in time of war will be coming to them, because they are serving really in time of peace; so I do not want this emergency continued very long. This joint resolution properly amended should be adopted. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL].

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, this resolution and this day call the Congress of the United States to the performance of a serious and solemn duty. If by voting against this resolution we could prevent war, I would vote against it. If by voting against this resolution we could postpone war, I would vote against it. We are confronted with a state of war that already exists in Mexico, and that was inevitable from the very hour the President, on his own responsibility, sent the troops of the United States into Mexican territory.

This action on the part of the Executive followed a series of blunders covering a period of three years. All these blunders led in the direction of war. Instead, therefore, of this resolution being before the Congress for consideration to-day—not at the direct request of the President of the United States, but by his direction left on our front steps—it should have been before Congress the very day the President sent the Army of the United States into the interior of a foreign country that was already in arms. [Applause.]

There has never been an hour since our troops entered Mexico that war has not been inevitable. The question now is to sustain our troops that are already in the field. The question now is to prevent prolonging the war. The question now is to prevent the slaughter of our soldiers by giving them proper support. It is a matter of duty that squarely faces the Congress of the United States, whether the President has been willing to do his duty or not. He should have taken such steps as the consequences of his first step made necessary or he should not have taken the first step.

The President should have been upon this rostrum yesterday or this morning telling Congress and the country the exact state of our troops that he sent into Mexico. Our soldiers are there by his direction; they need support. We are taking what is the common knowledge of all men as a basis for action, and are acting upon our responsibilities as Representatives to aid and support our soldiers whom the President sent into the interior of a foreign country—itself an act of war. A condition of war has existed ever since. A state of war exists to-day. There was a battle on yesterday. Men wearing the uniform of our country were killed in battle. Others wearing our uniform were taken as prisoners of war and held as prisoners by the soldiers of a foreign country. No one knows what their fate is or shall be. They must not be abandoned to the fate to which the President seems willing to leave them. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON].

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, one can not say very much in three minutes, and there is a great deal to be said here. I do not like some of the arguments that have been advanced upon the Republican side. It seems that they are playing politics. There are men who would play politics at the grave of a brother. The gentleman who preceded me, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], did not have the courage to vote against an appropriation of money for the Villa expedition. That was the time to deliver the speech that he has delivered just now. It is not for him to criticize. The real question before Congress at this moment is, Shall the Army of the United States be sent to protect the border of the United States or shall it be permitted to invade the territory of Mexico? The right to use the National Guard must be restricted to the territory of the United States. That is the only way to save the country from war. Protect your own border, and withdraw the Army from Mexico.

There is no dishonor in withdrawing from Mexico. You are a hundred million strong. Mexico is distracted, writhing in the agony of revolution, small, miserable, helpless. No one will doubt that you are powerful enough to defeat Mexico; you are not asked to retire before a stronger army; you are not withdrawing before a superior power; you are not retreating because you are afraid; but you do retire from Mexican soil because you are afraid to commit a wrong, to do an injustice; and I submit that to be afraid to do a wrong, to be afraid to commit an injustice, is not cowardly, but a manly thing. There is no glory in licking a weaker fellow. Nor is any question of dignity involved. It has been Mexico's misfortune to be ruled by foreign capital. The American people are not seeking either revenge or acquisition of Mexican territory. The American investor has no higher claims to security than the Mexican people themselves. He has chosen to invest American capital in Mexico. Shall he be permitted to drag the American Army with him to protect his investment?

In what positions do you put yourselves, Democrats, responsible for the conduct of the Government?

The President has been proclaimed the great pacificator. The hope has been held out to the world that he will not only keep the United States out of the maelstrom of war, but that he will help to restore peace to Europe. Shall all these hopes be blasted? If you once enter Mexico, you will never withdraw from it without appropriating a large slice of Mexico. The same influences that have forced the Villa outrage and then the blundering Villa expedition, will force the retention of the invaded Mexican territory, all, of course, in the name of American dignity, and as compensation for the blood which the American people will pour out. Perhaps I am too much of an optimist, but I refuse to abandon the hope that the President will for the sake of this Republic, for the sake of unfortunate Mexico, for the sake of Europe, anxiously looking to him to pick up the torn threads of international peace, continue to keep this country free from the horrors, the crimes, and the insanities of war.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, may I ask unanimous consent to speak for five minutes, not to be taken out of the time agreed upon?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes, not to be taken out of the time agreed upon.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia objects.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the President of the United States, acting within his authority and on his responsibility, has called to the Federal service certain organizations of the National Guard. In view of the situation which exists upon the Mexican border it seems altogether probable that it will be necessary to use those troops to guard the border and very possibly some of them in Mexico. In that condition of affairs it is essential that those troops shall take the oath and undergo the enrollment that is necessary for foreign service. We are called upon now to legislate upon that point. We have not made the situation in Mexico—that is, Congress has not. Congress is not responsible for the situation in Mexico and on the border. The American people will finally determine upon whom the responsibility for that situation rests; but we have the responsibility, in view of the situation there known to us—not officially, it is true, but through the newspapers—and that responsibility we are about to discharge by the passage of this resolution, which will make the militia available for service in Mexico in case they shall be needed there.

I do not like the word "draft" in this resolution. It is not necessary. I do not want these boys to go to the border as "drafted" men. [Applause.] Therefore I shall offer an amendment, which will leave the resolution just as effective under the law as in its present form, substituting the words "enlist" and "enroll" for the word "draft." With such a change in the language of the resolution our boys will go from every State in the Union to the border and across the border if it becomes necessary in the maintenance of American honor as enrolled and enlisted and not as drafted men. [Applause.] The adoption of this resolution can not be properly construed as an act of war or necessarily in contemplation of war. It is an act made necessary in order to so increase our available forces that we may be in position to protect our border and protect American rights whatever may happen.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], or such time as remains on this side.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, we are really in a state of war now. We know it. I think we are justified in taking action such as has been suggested here. I will remind the House that in 1898 preceding the Spanish War my distinguished colleague from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] introduced in the House a joint resolution, I believe, or a bill, providing for the appropriation of $50,000,000 for the national defense. Everyone knows that that was preliminary to the Spanish War in the hope of preventing it, but with the intention of preparing for it. We did not then wait for a special message from President McKinley on the subject. I do not think we had as much information in the House at that time in regard to the situation as we have now. I am glad to say that at that time that resolution was passed by a vote of 313 yeas to no nays. [Applause.] It represented the attitude of the Congress as being solidly in favor of a defense of our national honor and the realm. I believe that whenever the occasion rises that requires our united action in behalf of our country we will stand united. I think that the emergency now, under all the circumstances of the case, requires that we should have the National Guard enter the service as the Regular Army of the United States [applause] and be prepared for the worst, hoping that this step may help to bring about that peace which we seek but which we do not now have. [Applause.]

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. OGLESBY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. OGLESBY. Will the gentleman from Virginia allow me to ask a question before he begins?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. OGLESBY. I have not the slightest doubt but what the members of the National Guard will go to this war whether it is drafted or whether enlisted or how you word it, but what I would like to know is this, whether the gentleman proposes to make any provision in his other bill which is now being considered to take care of the families of those men who go, which families would otherwise be left destitute? I know of a number of instances in my district where the families of those men would be left destitute unless some provision were made.

Mr. HAY. I will say to the gentleman I expect to offer an amendment to this resolution providing for that very thing. [Applause.] Mr. Speaker, there has been so much confusion, apparently, about the question of enlistment and the question of volunteering and drafting that I desire to call the attention of the House to the reason why the word "draft" is used in this resolution. There is no way under the Constitution that the Organized Militia of the States can be used beyond the confines of the United States so long as they remain militia, and therefore when we passed the reorganization law we provided that when Congress came to the conclusion that the land forces of the United States should be used in excess of the Regular Army the President should be allowed to draft the National Guard, because the National Guard is to-day the second line, or, I might say, almost the first line, of defense. The National Guard have told us over and over again that they have enlisted, that they have gone into the service for the purpose of rendering service to the National Government, and if they had not had that hope the National Guard would not have been to-day what it is, and therefore I will say, without fear of contradiction, that the word "draft," as used in this resolution, is not obnoxious to members of the National Guard. [Applause.] They are in the service with the full knowledge that they may be called and may be drafted into the service of the United States. They want to go, they are ready to go, to the defense and the aid of the soldiers of the United States who are now in peril in Mexico, and they are not quibbling about a word. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I think there is some force to the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CRAGO] that there should be some limitation put upon the term of service of these troops; and, therefore, at the proper time I shall offer an amendment providing that their term shall not be longer than three years, which is the term of service in the Regular Army and in the National Guard both. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL], which proposes that these men shall——

Mr. CALDWELL. If the gentleman will permit, I will say I will withdraw my amendment if he will introduce his.

Mr. HAY. Very well.

As to the amendment proposed to my amendment by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], the amendment which I propose lodges—or, rather, keeps—within the jurisdiction of the Congress what it has always kept—the right to say when troops should be called for in excess of the Regular Army. I believe that Congress ought not to surrender that right, and to say that the President should take the responsibility of saying that an emergency exists and that Congress should not say so seems to me a quibble and a begging of the question. Why, gentlemen, we know that an emergency does exist, and why are we afraid to take the responsibility of declaring that fact and taking steps to send soldiers to protect and to aid and to assist in preserving the lives and the honor of the soldiers of the United States who are rightfully in Mexico and who at any moment may be attacked and who, if they do not have the aid which we send them, may be murdered, as some have already been murdered. I, for one, am not ready to quibble in a situation of this kind. I want to see this thing done, and done now.

I have heard gentlemen talk about preparedness a great deal on this floor, and now one of the men and apostles of that creed wants to postpone this measure of active preparedness which we are now proposing. I say, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] said, this is a matter largely of preparedness, to meet an emergency, and, if possible, thereby to get peace; but if there is no peace, then let us be ready, and ready now, not only to send men there, but to give to the President of the United States all the men, all the money, all the ammunition, all the things that will enable him to successfully maintain and uphold the honor of this country. [Loud applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] as amended.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] offers an amendment to my amendment, and the question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk informs the Chair that that was adopted.

Mr. HAY. Oh, no. The amendment that was agreed to was the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Page 1, line 3, after the word "That," strike out the word "whenever" and insert the word "if"; and after the word "emergency," insert the word "now," so that the same will read:

"Resolved, etc., That if in his opinion an emergency now exists which demands the use of troops in addition to the Regular Army of the United States, the President be, and he is hereby"—

And so forth.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 24, noes 122.

So the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I offer a further amendment.

Mr. MANN. There is an amendment pending offered by my colleague.

Mr. HAY. I understand that, but mine comes first. His comes at the end.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL] to make some kind of an agreement.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman said that he would withdraw his amendment when I offered mine. But I withdraw mine now for the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHIPERFIELD].

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my amendment now, to get it out of the way.

The SPEAKER. The vote will be taken on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHIPERFIELD]. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 5, after the word "discharged," insert:
"Provided, That all persons so drafted shall from the date of their draft stand discharged from the militia during the period of their service under said draft."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAY. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, in line 5, page 2, by striking out the words "the emergency" and inserting the words "three years," so that it will read:

To serve for a period of three years unless sooner discharged.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 5, strike out the words "the emergency" and insert in lieu thereof the words "three years," so that the lines will read: "To serve for the period of three years unless sooner discharged."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, in reference to the amendment that was just adopted, does not the gentleman think it might be wiser to say to serve for the period of the emergency "not to exceed three years, unless sooner discharged"?

Mr. HAY. I think myself that the emergency is going to be for a very short period.

Mr. MANN. It seems to me that perhaps that might be a wiser provision.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment just agreed to be reconsidered and the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Illinois be accepted in its place.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment just voted on and agreed to will be reconsidered, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] offers an amendment in lieu thereof.

Mr. MANN. To insert, after the word "emergency," the words "not exceeding three years," so that it will read:

To serve for the period of the emergency, not exceeding three years, unless sooner discharged.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 5, after the word "emergency," insert the words "not exceeding three years."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the amendment by striking out the word "three" and inserting the word "two."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] moves to strike out the word "three" and insert the word "two," making it two years instead of three.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I do not think the gentleman from Pennsylvania should do that, because the three-year amendment has already been adopted.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman think this war is going to continue three years?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know whether there is going to be any war at all.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If so, these young men who are to be drafted ought to be advised so that they can make their arrangements. I insist upon my amendment, Mr. Speaker, striking out "three" and inserting "two."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. A division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania demands a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 25, noes 126.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment as a new section.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will wait just a moment. The question is on agreeing to the Hay amendment as modified by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Virginia permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HAY. All debate is over.

Mr. ANTHONY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HAY. Then I will yield.

Mr. ANTHONY. How does the gentleman construe the words "unless sooner discharged by the President"? Can he discharge them?

Mr. HAY. Surely.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think the President has the authority to discharge an enlisted man, but I doubt whether he has the authority to discharge a commissioned officer.

Mr. HAY. He can muster him out.

Mr. ANTHONY. It occurred to me it might be more explicit.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Hay amendment as modified by the Mann amendment.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. MONDELL: Page 1, line 6, strike out the word "draft" and insert the words "enlist and enroll."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I offer a new section.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY].

The Clerk read as follows:

New section, after line 5, page 2, insert:
"The sum of $1,000,000 is hereby appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, for the purpose of maintaining, at a cost of not more than $50 per month, the family of each enlisted man of the National Guard called or drafted into the service of the United States until his discharge therefrom, which family during the term of service of said enlisted man has no other income, except his pay, adequate for the support of said family; and the word 'family' shall include dependent mothers and sisters, as well as brothers under the age of 14 years."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Virginia permit me to ask him whether he would accept an amendment including dependent fathers? Fathers are not mentioned.

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman accept that?

Mr. HAY. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the word "fathers" be inserted.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia if he would include the word "mothers"?

Mr. HAY. It is already there.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I know of instances where there are dependent fathers.

Mr. HAY. I accept the amendment.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. Has any estimate been made as to what this thing will cost?

Mr. HAY. No estimate has been made, because it has not been possible in the time within which this emergency arose to have an estimate given.

Mr. FERRIS. Let me ask the gentleman another question. We have appropriated $100,000,000 for 450,000 militia or National Guard. If the 450,000 men were secured and filled up to that extent, what would it cost?

Mr. HAY. I can not say, for the reason that some of these men are rich men.

Mr. MADDEN. What difference does it make what it costs? [Applause.]

Mr. HAY. A large number of them are single men, who have no families dependent upon them, and until the War Department can ascertain which of these men's families are entitled to this relief it is impossible to tell what it will cost or how many men it will affect.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may again be reported.

Mr. HAY. And include the word "fathers."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will, in the first place, report the Hay amendment as a new section and then the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, following line 5, insert a new section, as follows:

"The sum of $1,000,000 is hereby appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, for the purpose of maintaining, at a cost of not more than $50 per month, the family of each enlisted man of the National Guard called or drafted into the service of the United States until his discharge therefrom, which family during the term of service of said enlisted man has no other income, except his pay, adequate for the support of said family; and the word 'family' shall include dependent mothers and sisters, as well as brothers under the age of 14 years."

Amendment offered by Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania: "Insert the word 'fathers' following the word 'mothers' in the second from the last line of the amendment, so that the amendment will read: 'and the word "family" shall include dependent mothers, fathers, and sisters, as well as brothers under the age of 14 years.'"

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to inquire whether the term "enlisted man" in the proposed amendment would cover enlisted men of the Regular Army?

Mr. HAY. It would not.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course, this is a distinct and substantive piece of legislation?

Mr. HAY. Sure.

Mr. STAFFORD. And I assume it is not intended to cover the enlisted men in the Regular Army, but only those in the National Guard?

Mr. HAY. It relates only to the National Guard.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I think this legislation suggested in the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] is the most humanitarian expression of public sentiment that has ever been proposed in this House. [Applause.] There is nothing on earth that the people of America should not do to maintain in comfort the wives, children, and dependents of those who offer their lives to the service of their country. I hope there will not be a dissenting vote, either on the passage of this amendment or of the resolution when it is amended. [Applause.]

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Kansas rise?

Mr. TAGGART. A parliamentary inquiry. I do not want to make a speech.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will propound his inquiry.

Mr. TAGGART. Does the word "family" include the wife, where there are no children?

Mr. HAY. Why, certainly; of course it does.

Mr. TAGGART. There have been lawsuits on that question——

The SPEAKER. If that is a parliamentary inquiry addressed to the Speaker, he will answer it in the affirmative. [Applause.]

Mr. TAGGART. I want to put a question to the chairman of the committee, if he will answer it.

Mr. HAY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TAGGART. There are exemptions to a family in some States, and there have been some lawsuits to determine whether or not the wife, there being no children, could claim those exemptions. The word "wife" is not mentioned in this amendment.

Mr. HAY. If there is any question about it, Mr. Speaker, I will ask that the word "wife" be included.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. HAY. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire further to amend by inserting after the word "family" the words "out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the word "wife" will be included in the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to know if this is a congressional determination that a man's wife is a part of his family?

Mr. HAY. I had always believed that a wife was a part of a man's family.

Mr. MANN. Everybody knows it. What is the use of our declaring it? We might as well say that a man's children are a part of his family.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman from Kansas insists that a lawsuit has arisen in some State upon the very question as to whether a man's wife is a member of his family.

Mr. MANN. We are not governed by lawsuits in Kansas. I think it is a reflection on our intelligence to declare that a man's wife is a part of his family.

Mr. HAY. If they are separated, or something of that kind, there might be some question. I do not think it will do any harm to put it in.

Mr. MANN. Or if a man's wife is dead, then are the children a part of his family? It is a silly question.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman, Does the limitation of age apply both to brothers and sisters? It says "sisters and brothers under 14."

Mr. HAY. No; it says, "as well as brothers under the age of 14 years." I drew it so that the limitation of age should not apply to sisters.

Mr. FESS. The limitation of age applies to brothers only?

Mr. HAY. Just to brothers.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, would the gentleman consider favorably a proposition to increase that age limit from 14 years to 16 years?

Mr. HAY. I think a boy 14 years of age can take care of himself.

Mr. ROGERS. In many States he is not allowed full freedom to labor. He has to go to school, and so forth.

Mr. HAY. I think this is pretty liberal.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Virginia desire to withdraw the amendment about wives?

Mr. HAY. I did not offer it. The gentleman from Kansas suggested it.

Mr. TAGGART. I move that the word "wife" be included.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas moves to include the word "wife" in this amendment.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. KEARNS. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division. The word "family" does not include the wife where there are no children.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 104, noes 67.

Accordingly the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, will the clerk report the last amendment that I suggested—about the appropriation?

The SPEAKER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HAY: After the word "appropriated," in the first line of the amendment, insert the words "out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment which I wish to send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will send it up.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add, at the end of the new section, the words:

"Provided, That the same allowances be made to the families of soldiers in the Regular Army."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARDNER: Add, at the end of the new section, the following:

"Provided, That the same allowances be made for the families of soldiers in the Regular Army."

Mr. HAY. I make the point of order that this resolution does not deal with the Regular Army, but deals entirely with the National Guard, and therefore it is not germane.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire to be heard?

Mr. GARDNER. It is clearly out of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Of course it is.

Mr. GARDNER. I should like to have a few minutes.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Virginia reserve the point of order?

Mr. HAY. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, that is just the sort of thing that kills the Regular Army. [Applause.] It is just a sheer piece of injustice, such as we are always performing. It is no wonder that we can not get enlistments in the Regular Army when we deny Regulars the same treatment which we grant to militiamen. These Regulars are the ones that do the real fighting. These militiamen are going into camp for instruction. We know it. We pretend that the National Guard is going down to Mexico to do the fighting, but at heart we do not expect them to do anything except guard the lines of communication and police the border. We go through this humbug day after day, knocking the soldiers and officers of the Regular Army. Everyone knows that the Regulars did the fighting in the Spanish War, but we pretend that it was the Volunteers. Now, let us look these facts squarely in the face. [Applause.]

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I must take issue with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER]. These men are just as liable to do the fighting as the men in the Regular Army, and are just as willing to do it as the Regular Army. [Applause.] And they will do it just as well as the Regular Army when they get in the presence of the enemy. [Applause.] The Regular Army men are men who make a profession of arms. They go into the Regular Army for the purpose of making a career out of it. These men in the National Guard are called from their business suddenly, without any warning; they leave their families behind them; they have to leave them. They stand upon a very different footing from the soldiers in the Regular Army, and we ought to take care that they are encouraged so that when the time comes and we want other men they will be ready to volunteer to give their services to the country, knowing that their wives, sisters, and mothers will be taken care of by the Government. [Applause.] I insist upon the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STINESS. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, after line 5, add a new section as follows:
"The provision of section 112 of the national defense act of June 3, 1916, shall be applicable to any officer or enlisted man drafted into the service of the United States pursuant to section 1 of this joint resolution."

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take the gentleman from Rhode Island off his feet, but the provisions of the defense act are that when any officer or enlisted man of the National Guard is drafted into the service of the United States in time of war and is disabled by reason of wounds or disability received or incurred while in active service of the United States in time of war he shall be entitled to all the benefits of the pension law.

Mr. MANN. But that does not apply to this case.

Mr. HAY. No; it does not, but I think it ought to. I am willing to accept the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Rhode Island.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman from Virginia a question. Where soldiers are sons of dependent fathers who formerly belonged to the Confederate States' Army, will those fathers be entitled to these benefits?

Mr. HAY. Beyond a doubt.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I wish to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that he is mistaken.

Mr. HAY. If I am mistaken, why did the gentleman ask me the question?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I thought the gentleman knew the law.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Rhode Island.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That when organizations the members of which are drafted under the provisions of this resolution do not constitute complete tactical units the President may, by combining such organizations, organize battalions, regiments, brigades, and divisions, and may appoint officers for such units from the Regular Army, from the members of such organizations, from those duly qualified and registered pursuant to section 23 of the act of Congress approved January 21, 1903, or members of the Officers' Reserve Corps, as provided in section 38 of the national-defense act of June 3, 1916, officers with rank not above that of colonel to be appointed by the President alone and all other officers to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Virginia who are the persons duly qualified to register under section 23 of the act of Congress approved January 21, 1903.

Mr. HAY. That will apply to such people who take an examination as to their being eligible for duty in time of war or in an emergency.

Mr. BENNET. Can the gentleman state whether there are quite a number of these persons?

Mr. HAY. Yes; the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] is one.

Mr. BENNET. So that they will have a discretion to appoint officers from three sources—the Regular Army, the drafted militia, and from this list.

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I suppose the chairman of the committee has taken notice of the fact that in the text of that act referred to in the section of the resolution we are considering there is an express provision that these men who are to go on the list for a commission may not be put into the Organized Militia.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman called my attention to it this morning.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I only asked the question so that the gentleman might put his views upon that point in the RECORD.

Mr. HAY. I will try to do that.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That whenever in time of war or public danger two or more officers of the same grade are on duty in the same field, department, or command, or organizations thereof, the President may assign the command of the forces of such field, department, or command, or any organization thereof, without regard to seniority of rank in the same grade. In the absence of such assignment by the President, officers of the same grade shall rank and have precedence in the following order without regard to date of rank or commission as between officers of different classes, namely: First, officers of the Regular Army and officers of the Marine Corps detached for service with the Army by order of the President; second, officers of forces drafted into the military service of the United States: Provided, That officers of the Regular Army holding commissions in forces drafted into the service of the United States shall rank and have precedence under said commissions as if they were commissioned in the Regular Army; but the rank of officers of the Regular Army under their commissions in the forces drafted into the service of the United States shall not for the purpose of this article be held to antedate muster or draft into the service of the United States.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, lines 21 and 22, after the word "that," strike out "whenever in time of war or public danger" and insert "under the emergency described in section 1 of this act."

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I am not so anxious about striking out the words "war or public danger," but I do think there ought to be the insertion of the words "pending the emergency described in section 1 of this act," because it might be an emergency which did not involve public danger.

Mr. HAY. How would the gentleman draft the amendment leaving out the words "war or public danger"?

Mr. GARDNER. By inserting after the word "danger" the words "or pending the emergency described in section 1 of this act" or "during the emergency described in section 1 of this act."

Mr. HAY. "Pending the emergency declared in section 1 of this act"?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes.

Mr. HAY. I have no objection to that amendment as amended.

Mr. GARDNER. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to so modify my amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAY. I understand that after the word "danger" the gentleman proposes to insert the words "or the emergency declared in section 1 of this act," not striking out anything?

Mr. GARDNER. That is correct.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 22, after the word "danger" insert the words "or during the emergency declared in section 1 of this act."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be permitted to change the numbering of the sections.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the Clerk be allowed to rearrange the numbers of the sections. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the joint resolution.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 334, nays 2, not voting 99, as follows:

So the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if I may have a moment——

The SPEAKER. Without objection the gentleman from Illinois will be recognized for two minutes. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, while I hope that the pairs will be announced, still as far as this side is concerned if any gentleman on that side is paired with a Republican Member I take the responsibility of saying that he is entitled to vote notwithstanding the fact, and I hope the same may be true of this side of the House, as both sides would vote the same way. While the House can not take any official action in reference to this and the pairs may be announced, still the pairs will not be binding to prevent gentlemen voting on this resolution. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent just to make a statement of half a minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I arranged to pair with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. GILLETT, during the two political conventions. The gentleman from Massachusetts is ill at home and unable to be present. I have taken, however, the liberty to vote for this resolution because I am convinced that if the gentleman from Massachusetts were present he would vote for the resolution also.

Mr. ALLEN. May I have a moment?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, I am paired this week with Mr. LONGWORTH. I know that he would vote for this measure if he were present, and I am therefore taking the liberty of voting, notwithstanding I am paired with him.

Mr. GREGG. Mr. Speaker, I have a pair with the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. STEENERSON, and when my name was called he was not on the floor and I therefore voted "Present," so I ask to vote "aye," as he has seen fit to vote.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

From June 3 to July 22:

Mr. CALLAWAY with Mr. PETERS.

From June 22 to June 26:

Mr. TALBOTT with Mr. HAYES.

From June 19 to June 26:

Mr. ALLEN with Mr. LONGWORTH.

From June 3 to June 26, inclusive:

Mr. LEE with Mr. WINSLOW.

Until further notice:

Mr. SUMNERS with Mr. DANFORTH.

Mr. WALKER with Mr. DUNN.

Mr. TAGUE with Mr. KENNEDY of Rhode Island.

Mr. PATTEN with Mr. LEHLBACH.

Mr. RIORDAN with Mr. WARD.

Mr. HOUSTON with Mr. GUERNSEY.

Mr. MORGAN of Louisiana with Mr. COOPER of West Virginia.

Mr. WILLIAM ELZA WILLIAMS with Mr. SULLOWAY.

Mr. GLASS with Mr. SLEMP.

Mr. JONES with Mr. MOONEY.

Mr. SLAYDEN with Mr. MCKINLEY.

Mr. RANDALL with Mr. MILLER of Delaware.

Mr. POU with Mr. KAHN.

Mr. HENRY with Mr. GRAY of New Jersey.

Mr. DOREMUS with Mr. CHARLES.

Mr. ADAIR with Mr. FAIRCHILD.

Mr. BELL with Mr. GOULD.

Mr. MORRISON with Mr. LAFEAN.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY with Mr. FOSS.

Mr. WEBB with Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts.

Mr. STOUT with Mr. FREEMAN.

Mr. BARNHART with Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin.

Mr. MCANDREWS with Mr. KINKAID.

Mr. LIEB with Mr. HEATON.

Mr. GALLIVAN with Mr. AUSTIN.

Mr. EDWARDS with Mr. SELLS.

Mr. HART with Mr. CAPSTICK.

Mr. FLYNN with Mr. ROWE.

Mr. DOOLING with Mr. SCOTT of Pennsylvania.

Mr. MAHER with Mr. KIESS of Pennsylvania.

Mr. OVERMYER with Mr. HUSTED.

Mr. HILLIARD with Mr. COSTELLO.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana with Mr. COLEMAN.

Mr. DRISCOLL with Mr. BACHARACH.

Mr. SCULLY with Mr. PLATT.

Mr. SMITH of Texas with Mr. MUDD.

Mr. CONRY with Mr. BOWERS.

For balance of session:

Mr. GARNER with Mr. BARCHFELD.

Mr. CASEY with Mr. PARKER of New York.

Mr. KONOP with Mr. MILLER of Minnesota.

For the session:

Mr. FIELDS with Mr. LANGLEY.

Mr. LIEBEL with Mr. ROWLAND.

Mr. DEWALT with Mr. MCFADDEN.

Mr. STEELE of Pennsylvania with Mr. GRAHAM.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I promised to pair with the gentleman from Rhode Island, Mr. KENNEDY. I voted "aye," and he also desires to vote "aye."

The name of Mr. TAGUE was called, and he voted "aye."

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with my colleague Mr. FIELDS. He would vote "aye," if he were present, and I therefore vote "aye."

The name of Mr. LANGLEY was called, and he voted "aye."

Mr. LEE. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. WINSLOW. If he were here, he would vote "aye," therefore I desire to vote "aye."

The name of Mr. LEE was called, and he voted "aye."

Mr. GUERNSEY. Mr. Speaker, I have a pair with the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. HOUSTON. I voted "aye," and if he were here he would vote "aye."

The name of Mr. GUERNSEY was called, and he voted "aye."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call my name.

The name of Mr. CLARK of Missouri was called, and he voted "aye."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the title.

The SPEAKER. In what respect?

Mr. HAY. "And certain other purposes."

Mr. MANN. That is all in there; the title does not need amendment.

Mr. HAY. Very well. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen may have five legislative days in which to print remarks on this joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that all gentlemen have five legislative days to extend their remarks in the RECORD on this bill. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, though I believe I will not, it is such a refreshing thing to turn to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of 1898, at the time we passed the $50,000,000 appropriation by a unanimous vote, and find the RECORD contains only what took place and is not padded with a lot of long, diffused, and, I was going to say confused, information, but some of it is not. However, I shall not object.

Mr. HAY. The only reason I am making the request is that a good many gentlemen have asked me to do so. I am not going to put in anything myself.

Mr. MANN. I understand; I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

On motion of Mr. HAY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the two gentlemen who voted against the joint resolution may have five legislative days in which to change their votes.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote by which House joint resolution 242 was passed, and lay it on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

NOTE OF SECRETARY OF STATE LANSING TO THE SECRETARY OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS OF THE DE FACTO GOVERNMENT OF MEXICO (H. DOC. NO. 1237).

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the note addressed by the Secretary of State to the Secretary of Foreign Affairs of the de facto Government of Mexico, dated June 20, and also that it may be printed as a House document.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] asks unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the letter of Secretary of State Lansing to the Secretary of State of the de facto Government of Mexico, and also asks to have it printed as a House document. Is there objection?

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman have any objection to have printed as a House document the letter of Secretary Aguilar, of May 22?

Mr. FLOOD. If the gentleman desires, I have no objection.

Mr. NORTON. That would be interesting and I make that suggestion to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will put the request of the gentleman from Virginia first.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I understand the gentleman from Virginia asked unanimous consent to print this also as a House document. Does the gentleman know whether any action has been taken by the Senate in reference to this?

Mr. FLOOD. I think not—certainly there has not been.

Mr. MANN. I would be very glad myself to have extra copies printed of the House document.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, is the gentleman aware of the fact that one of the gentlemen who has spoken this morning—the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]—has already requested unanimous leave to print the very communication which he now seeks to have incorporated in the RECORD? What is the need of having it incorporated in the RECORD twice?

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I am asking to have it made a House document.

Mr. STAFFORD. Part of the speech was in the RECORD the other day.

Mr. FLOOD. The gentleman from Illinois read a part of it.

Mr. MANN. It is the best Republican document I have seen.

Mr. FLOOD. I ask that it be printed as a House document and in the RECORD.

Mr. STAFFORD. It has already been printed in the RECORD as a part of the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. What is the need of having it twice in the RECORD of the same date?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I would like to have a reply to the question.

Mr. FLOOD. As a part of the speech. Would not the gentleman from Illinois put it all in? The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] put part of it in the other day.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I asked leave to insert it as a part of my remarks and intend to print it as a part of my remarks. The gentleman, as I understand, intends to make a document of it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have no objection to having it printed as a document.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I modify my request and ask to have it printed as a House document.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to print the letter of Secretary of State Lansing to the secretary of foreign affairs of the de facto government of Mexico as a public document. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

NOTE OF THE SECRETARY OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS OF THE DE FACTO GOVERNMENT OF MEXICO.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the note of secretary of foreign affairs of the de facto government of Mexico of May 22 be published as a public document.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Alfred J. Henry (Rept. No. 1134, H. R. 18166, 2d sess., 63d Cong.), no adverse report having been made thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, on June 3 I asked leave to print as a part of my remarks a part of the speech of the Secretary of War. Now I ask unanimous consent to print the balance of that speech.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

SUNDRY CIVIL BILL.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 15836, the sundry civil appropriation bill, and I wish to give notice, Mr. Speaker, that I hope the Members will remain here until about 11 o'clock to-night in order to finish this bill.

Mr. BUTLER. Why not say 11.30 to-night?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, midnight.

Mr. MANN. It is out of order. It was the intention yesterday, as stated by the gentleman last evening, to keep the House in session late this evening, with the view of passing the sundry civil bill to-night, because possibly we might be able to dispose of the Army appropriation bill to-morrow. Of course, that is out of the question now. You can not get through the sundry civil bill to-night, but it does not make any difference to me, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If we sit to-night, it will be possible to pass the bill by to-morrow, and I think we should try to pass it. Saturday night Members do not wish to remain here.

Mr. MANN. If we run until 7 o'clock to-night, we could pass the bill to-morrow without any trouble.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think if we sat until 10 or 11 o'clock we surely would get through.

Mr. MANN. It is a matter of convenience to the Members. It is quite certain now under the ordinary practice of the House that if you sit late to-night, after what has been going on to-day, you can not do much business to-morrow.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If we sit late to-night and meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow, we can finish the sundry civil bill.

Mr. MANN. I think we can finish the sundry civil bill to-morrow, anyhow.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Some matters later on may give rise to some discussion. The bill has proceeded very rapidly. I think it desirable that this bill gets to the Senate.

Mr. MANN. I think it ought to be passed to-morrow, but if we make fairly good progress this afternoon I think we will be able to run until 7 o'clock to-night with the expectation, if necessary, to meet at 10 o'clock in the morning.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I hope the Members will arrange to stay here, if necessary, to-night.

Mr. MANN. Well, let us accommodate the Members of the House. If it is necessary, we will meet at 10 o'clock in the morning, but do not let us run later than 7 o'clock to-night.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I simply wish Members to know, so that they will not make other arrangements for to-night. I have to work anyway, and I would like to have company.

Mr. MANN. So far as I am concerned, I have made my arrangements to stay here to-night. I would just as soon stay here as to work at home.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not only does the Senate committee not wish to work on a Sunday, but as soon as this bill is finished in the House it will be necessary for me to start on some urgent deficiency bill.

The SPEAKER. What is the request?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is necessary for the Members to be here, and, if necessary, to stay late.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. HULBERT, for five days, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. EAGAN, for five days, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. BRITT, indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Speaker, before I depart on that leave of absence I desire unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an editorial from the New York American of yesterday on the subject of mobilization.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York Mr. [HULBERT] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting the editorial indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request—to insert an editorial from the Albany Evening Journal.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the editorial indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SUNDRY CIVIL BILL.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 15836, the sundry civil bill. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 15836, the sundry civil bill, with Mr. HAY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 15836, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15836) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

SURVEYING THE PUBLIC LANDS.

For surveys and resurveys of public lands under the supervision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office and direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $700,000: Provided, That in expending this appropriation preference shall be given, first, in favor of surveying townships occupied in whole or in part by actual settlers and of lands granted to the States by the act approved February 22, 1889, and the acts approved July 3 and July 10, 1890, and to survey under such other acts as provide for land grants to the several States and Territories, and such indemnity lands as the several States and Territories may be entitled to in lieu of lands granted them for educational and other purposes which may have been sold or included in some reservation or otherwise disposed of, except railroad land grants, and other surveys shall include lands adapted to agriculture and lands deemed advisable to survey on account of availability for irrigation or dry farming, lines of reservations, and lands within boundaries of forest reservations. The surveys and resurveys provided for in this appropriation to be made by such competent surveyors as the Secretary of the Interior may select, at such compensation, not exceeding $200 per month each, as he may prescribe, except that the Secretary of the Interior may appoint not to exceed two supervisors of surveys, whose compensation shall not exceed $250 per month each, and, except in the District of Alaska, where a compensation not exceeding $10 per day may be allowed such surveyors and such per diem in lieu of subsistence, not exceeding $3, when allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914, and actual necessary expenses for transportation, including necessary sleeping-car fares, said per diem and traveling expenses to be allowed to all surveyors employed hereunder and to such clerks who are competent surveyors who may be detailed to make surveys, resurveys, or examinations of surveys heretofore made and reported to be defective or fraudulent, and inspecting mineral deposits, coal fields, and timber districts, and for making, by such competent surveyors, fragmentary surveys, and such other surveys or examinations as may be required for identification of lands for purposes of evidence in any suit or proceeding in behalf of the United States: Provided further, That the sum of not exceeding 10 per cent of the amount hereby appropriated may be expended by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, for the purchase of metal or other equally durable monuments to be used for public-land survey corners wherever practicable:

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I have offered an amendment, which the Clerk has before him.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BURNETT). The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MONDELL offers the following amendment: Page 104, line 9, after the word "prescribe," insert "except in Alaska, where a compensation not exceeding $300 per month each may be allowed such surveyors." In line 10, after the word "appoint," strike out the words "not to exceed two supervisors" and insert in lieu thereof the words "a supervisor." In line 11 strike out the sum "$250" and insert in lieu thereof the sum "$300." In line 11 strike out the word "each" and insert the following: "And not to exceed 10 surveyors, who may be employed in a supervisory capacity, whose compensation shall not exceed $250 per month each."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I should not have offered this amendment had I not come to the conclusion, after pretty careful consideration, that perhaps the subcommittee had not gone into this item as fully as it should have done. It was considered, and the committee finally concluded that this authorization of increases asked for by the department should not be made. After very carefully considering the matter from every standpoint it seems to me that the department should be authorized to allow the increases if we are to do justice by these officials.

The situation is a rather peculiar one. The practice has grown up in the Land Office of fixing the salaries of field officials of all classes on the theory that a per diem in lieu of subsistence of $3 a day could and should be paid such officials when at headquarters as well as in the field. The result of that policy of the department was that the field employees of the General Land Office practically received $90 a month in addition to their regular salaries. Last April or May a year ago the comptroller held that these officials were not entitled to the per diem in lieu of subsistence unless they were in the field; that they were not entitled to the per diem when they were at headquarters. That holding was probably correct according to the law, but it upset the pay system of the Public Land Office field service.

The committee, taking all this into consideration, did allow the increases asked by the Land Office for the greater part of its field service. You will find on pages 100 and 101 the item for the payment of those men who were employed in the protection of the public lands, amounting to $475,000, and under that item the committee authorizes an increase in compensation of not to exceed $500 per annum for certain classes of officials.

It is not, of course, understood or believed by the committee that every one of these clerks will have his salary increased by $500. It is the intent of the commissioner, as stated to the committee, to increase salaries to the extent which he finds necessary to reimburse employees for loss of pay by reason of the opinion of the comptroller to which I have referred.

Now, the same condition exists in the surveying division that exists in the division having charge of depredations on the public lands.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I want to ask the gentleman, whether, if the amendment which he has offered is adopted, it will take care of the situation in Alaska, where they complain because they have been deprived of this $3 a day for subsistence?

Mr. MONDELL. The amendment which I have offered is the language proposed by the department in order to meet the situation in Alaska and in the States created by the decision to which reference has been made. It does authorize an increase of not to exceed $600 per annum in the salaries of surveyors in Alaska.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I want to ask the gentleman whether or not under the language now carried in the bill it results in the reduction of the compensation of the surveyors in Alaska?

Mr. MONDELL. The comptroller's decision resulted in the reduction of the compensation of practically every man in the field force of the General Land Office—the surveyors, the special agents, the men charged with inquiring into the depredations upon public timber, all of them, or at least many of them, were affected by this decision, because all of them had, I believe, been receiving their per diem. The men in Alaska were not affected any more than were the men in the balance of the country. They were affected in the same way, and the amendment I have offered takes care of them.

As a member of the committee, I think it is my duty to present every side of this matter to the House. This argument may be made with regard to this class of employees, as distinguished from the payments made to certain other employees of the field service. Some of the men employed in the field service, particularly the men employed at and about field-service headquarters, are in the field only a portion of the time, some of them, perhaps, only a small portion of the time; and by reason of the comptroller's decision those men suffer a loss of possibly as much as from $600 to $800 a year. Men at headquarters practically all the time, or a large portion of the time, lose the per diem during that period; and the increases I have proposed may not compensate such men for the entire loss they have suffered under the comptroller's decision. Now, when it comes to the matter of surveyors, it may be urged with a good deal of force that a surveyor should be in the field, that his business is in the field, that the major portion of the time, at least, he should be actively engaged in field service; and when he is, of course, he receives the per diem, because the comptroller's decision was only to the effect that the per diem could not be paid when the man was at headquarters.

As to surveying in Alaska, however, owing to the short season there, even though the men are transferred to other work, they may lose nearly six months in the year from actual field service. The balance of the time might, I assume, be occupied in service at or about headquarters. The other surveyors should not be at headquarters, it seems to me, more than three or four months in the year. If they are at headquarters three months a year on an average they have lost by the comptroller's decision about $275 to $300 a year. If they are in the field as much as it seems they should be they would not lose as much as $500, that is, the men who are employed otherwise than in Alaska.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. The commissioner tells us, however, that it is not intended, anticipated, or proposed to increase these salaries more than is necessary to compensate these men for the amount they lose, owing to the decision of the comptroller. If a man's service is such that he should be in the field 10 months in the year, then his salary will not, I assume, be increased as much as $500 per annum. If his service is such that he must be at headquarters the major portion of the time, and his salary has been fixed on the basis of per diem all the time, it will be necessary to give him the full increase of $500 in order to compensate him for his loss under the decision, and in some cases the increase of $500 might not, I assume, give him as much as he is now receiving. These matters were not, so far as the surveyors are concerned, pressed upon the subcommittee as forcefully as they should have been.

I do not think that under the circumstances the subcommittee is subject to criticism for what it did or what it failed to do, but as a member of the subcommittee I had some doubts about the justice of our action at the time, and those doubts have been strengthened as time has passed, and I have carefully inquired into this matter. It is very clear to me that unless we do adopt an amendment of this kind these men will, some of them at least, suffer a decrease in their salaries of from $300 to $500 a year. They are now suffering such a decrease by reason of the comptroller's decision, and they will continue so to suffer unless we adopt this language. It is not intended to give these employees of the Government, much as they may deserve it, more than they have been receiving. With some knowledge of what private parties pay men of this class, I am confident that the pay they have been receiving from the Government is not on the average greater, and in some cases is less, than the same class of men receive for the same kind of work in private employment. This amendment is necessary, not to increase salaries, but in order to maintain salaries as they were before the decision to which I have referred.

The committee has uniformly refused to increase the salaries carried in this bill, though there are many paid under it whose salaries and wages should be increased, and therefore we are not perhaps justified in increasing these salaries, but we should at least save these men from a decrease of compensation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, this matter was considered thoroughly by the committee. The rather surprising practice had grown up of making these allowances to the men not only when in the field but also when at headquarters. In my opinion, that was a very extraordinary provision. The special agents who were employed in the Interior Department were very largely men who had been in the service a great many years, as a result of which they had become very expert. They had been receiving this compensation, and it seemed to the committee that perhaps it would be an injustice to do anything other than to continue to permit them to receive the same amount of money that they had been receiving. In the survey work it is somewhat different. Until the fiscal year 1912 this survey work was done by contract. In 1912 the system was initiated by the Government of doing the survey work itself, and the same practice was started of allowing this subsistence to the men employed, while stationed at their headquarters. If that practice is to prevail, then all these field men will get this allowance all of the time, whether in the field or at headquarters. If we grant it to these field men, every field man in every other department of the Government will be justified in asking some modification of his compensation, so that he will receive this allowance not only while in the field but while at his headquarters. As a matter of fact, there was an effort made to provide in the very same way for all the special agents in the Internal-Revenue Service, and it was impossible to estimate just how large the additional expense would be. Now, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] is very familiar with surveys. He is familiar with the market price of the services of such men. I am sure that from long years of experience he knows that the provision made here for these men is reasonably fair. That is about all we can expect to do, not to be perfect but just to be reasonably fair, and when we have attained that stage of perfection where our actions can be characterized as reasonably fair, then we are doing justice to the employee and justice to the people of the United States. Less than that I would not do. More than that I can not do.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Is the gentleman from Wyoming correct in his statement that this will result in decreasing the compensation of the surveyors in Alaska about $600 per annum?

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the compensation be changed at all, it is an accomplished fact. This provision will not change the compensation they are actually receiving now.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. It will not give them what they have been receiving.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It will not permit them to receive as much as they would prior to the decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury, which cut off this allowance to them at headquarters and which was intended to be given them only in the field. It is done, and they are going on very nicely, and we should not stir up sleeping dogs.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. This one is very much awake.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I believe that the compensation paid now is as reasonable as could be expected. We can not indulge in these wholesale grants of very liberal compensation in view of all the things for which we must provide money.

Mr. COX. How much would this proposed amendment involve?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I can not stop to calculate that in the gross. It would take money out of the Treasury that the committee believes should not be taken out for that purpose, and the principle is the same whether the sum be large or whether it be small. Under the circumstances I am compelled to insist on the point of order.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman want to discuss this matter?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I hope everybody from the public-land States will not want to discuss it.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I was going to suggest that there was one way that the gentleman could stop the talk, and that was by withdrawing the point of order to the amendment. I am sorry that the gentleman made the remark that he did just before he took his seat, in view of the fact that he has been pleading with us to sit here to-night and help him out. As a matter of fact, this is a reduction of compensation by a ruling of the department. These men have for seven or eight years——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, the gentleman should not exaggerate; for three years.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I was taking the statement of a member of the committee.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If I was as careless with money as the gentleman is with figures, the Treasury would be bankrupt. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The reason I am careless with the facts is that I got the information from a member of the gentleman's committee. Hereafter I will look somewhere else when I want accurate information. But whether it has been one year or ten years, it is a fact that the compensation of these men has been reduced from what Congress undoubtedly intended that they should receive and from what they did receive.

No one ever complained that they were overpaid, and it does seem to me to reduce the salary at this time of these surveyors in Alaska $600 a year is unjust. I do not believe that the Members of the House would do it if they had an opportunity to vote on it. Living in Alaska to-day is higher than it ever was, and these people have been at expense, and to reduce their wages $600 a year I say is unjust. I am satisfied that if the Members of the House had an opportunity to vote on it they would not do it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have not the same confidence in the gentleman's prophetic power as the gentleman has.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. If the gentleman has not let him give us a vote.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have no objection to doing anything the gentleman can do under the rules of the House.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The gentleman says he has no faith in my prophecy, but he does not dare to test it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, on page 105, line 5, by inserting after the word "approval" the word "of." I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McCULLOCH] may proceed for five minutes in relation to another matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 105, line 5, after the word "approval," insert the word "of."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McCULLOCH] may have five minutes?

There was no objection.

A METHOD PROPOSED TO TAKE THE TARIFF OUT OF POLITICS.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Mr. Chairman, millions upon millions of dollars are being appropriated by Congress for various purposes, and as I have listened to the discussions on the floor of the House I have been impressed with the fact that a great deal more consideration is being given to finding ways and means of spending money than of providing ways and means of raising money. Next week, if I am properly informed, certain important revenue measures will be brought up for the consideration of the House. I have always been a strong believer in what is termed indirect taxation rather than direct taxation. I believe that the best method of raising revenue for carrying on the Government is by levying protective tariff rates of duty on imports. The history of the fiscal policy of this Government proves that sufficient revenue for the needs of the Government is always raised under the operation of a protective tariff. Sometime ago I introduced a tariff-commission bill which provides for a new method of fixing tariff rates of duty, and in order that the Members of the House may have an opportunity to consider the provisions of that bill in the light of the arguments which I shall advance in their support, I have asked the privilege at this time of presenting these arguments.

I should not presume to take the time of the House under the present stress of important business in a general discussion of the tariff, but I have asked for the privilege of addressing the House in order that I may present for its consideration certain propositions which, so far as I have been able to find in my investigations, have never been presented in just the form in which it is my purpose to bring them before the House. I was told early in my service here that there had been so much discussion of the tariff on the floor of the House that it is threadbare, and that I probably could not hope to present anything that is new. I do not say that my propositions are new, but I do say there are phases about them which have never before to my knowledge been presented.

BELIEVES IN PROTECTION.

I think that it is fair for me to say at the outset that I believe in the protective-tariff principle as a legitimate policy of government. I believe that in view of our development and standard of living a protective tariff is absolutely necessary if we are to maintain prosperity in normal times and the higher wages paid in this country as compared with the wages paid abroad. But while I believe in protection I do not believe in high protection, but reasonable and fair protection. I believe that rates of duty should be fixed so as to equalize the differences in the cost of production at home and abroad as nearly as they can be determined, and I was opposed to adding to the foregoing provision "plus a reasonable profit." I am against the Government guaranteeing profits, or attempting to do so, whether large or small, by protective-tariff rates of duty. If the American manufacturer and producer is placed upon an equal basis with the foreign manufacturer and producer, that is all he ought to ask from the Government in the way of protection, for the question of profit will take care of itself. The foreigner can not do business successfully without profit any more than the American manufacturer can afford to do so. The question of profit, therefore, is legitimately one of competition.

The propositions which I shall present will probably not meet the approval of the high protectionists. They certainly will not meet the approval of the free trader, or of those who believe in tariff for revenue only, but they should meet the approval of those who believe in a just, equitable, sound, and reasonable protective tariff.

PROMPTED BY EXPERIENCES.

I feel that it is but fair to the House and to myself to say that I would not attempt a discussion of this subject, important and broad as it is, if it were not for the fact that I have had some practical experience in dealing with the subject, not as a Member of this body, but from the outside. I mention this in order that the House may consider what I may have to say somewhat in the light of that experience, and that Members may have some idea of how some persons on the outside of this Chamber view the method and manner in which this tariff question has been handled by Congress. I appeared before the Ways and Means Committee and the Finance Committee of the Senate each time the tariff was up for consideration and public hearings were had since 1908, presenting briefs and arguments in regard to certain paragraphs, and I want to say that it was a marvel to me that such an important business proposition so vital to the welfare of all the people of this country should have been handled in such an unbusinesslike manner as the tariff was handled by Congress. [Applause on the Republican side.] No one would think of deciding a lawsuit on the testimony of the parties in interest alone if it were possible to secure unbiased and impartial testimony. Yet in considering the tariff question those who made up the record of information and evidence were the parties in interest—the American manufacturer on the one side and the importer and foreign manufacturer on the other side, volunteer witnesses in many cases testifying without being sworn. I hope I may be pardoned for saying that to me the hearings were farcical and the results in many instances deplorable. [Applause on the Republican side.]

So long as the tariff question is in politics, and it will be in politics just so long as the tariff policy of this country is settled by platform pledge and not by law, tariff rates of duty will be fixed as a result of pull and political influence, vote trading, logrolling, and wirepulling rather than by a consideration of the facts and conditions upon which just and equitable rates should be determined and fixed.

OPPOSES THE SYSTEM.

My attack, or my objection, to put it milder, is against the system or the method that has been followed in dealing with this great subject. So long as this system remains Members of Congress are to be excused for endeavoring to secure for their constituents the best possible rates of duty, and I have observed that the most ardent advocates of a tariff for revenue only or free trade are sometimes the most aggressive champions of protection for the industries in their own districts, although against protection for everybody else, and as long as the tariff question remains in politics rates of duty will be fixed largely upon political influence. I think the time has come when the system should be changed and the tariff taken out of politics and rates of duty fixed in accordance with some just and equitable standard which will insure adequate protection to all. I shall not presume to hope that my poor efforts will bring it about, but I feel that it is my duty to present my views frankly and honestly, with the hope that in the future, if not in the present, some good may be accomplished.

STRONG BELIEVER IN TARIFF COMMISSION.

It is because of the injustice that has resulted and is bound to result from ex-party proceedings that has made me a strong believer in a tariff commission, or in any body that will secure accurate and impartial information which can be used in fixing tariff rates of duty—and while I am in favor of a commission for that reason, and shall probably support and vote for the tariff commission provided in the bill now under consideration by the House, yet I feel that the commission provided for in the Rainey bill would fall far short of meeting the situation. I feel that it is a commission advocated for political expediency; that it is not intended to accomplish the big, broad, and important results that the people hope may be accomplished by a tariff commission, namely, the fixing of tariff rates of duty scientifically, equitably, and justly. I believe that if the Rainey bill is passed in its present form, the same conditions which have confronted us will continue and that the individual interests of the constituents of Members of Congress will still be paramount in the fixing of rates; that the tariff will still be in politics; and that the old logrolling, vote-trading, wirepulling methods will continue.

FAVORS IMMEDIATE REVISION OF TARIFF.

Before I state my propositions I want to say that I believe that the first step that should be taken ought not be the creation of a tariff commission, but an immediate revision of the tariff along protective tariff lines, and then after the tariff is revised the commission should be created and proceed with its investigations, making readjustments and changes as the necessities may arise. I believe that the tariff should be revised immediately, because I regard the Underwood tariff law as destructive and clearly in the interests of the foreign producer. I believe that in normal times if it remains in operation it will result disastrously to all the people of this country and bring on depression and hard times, and especially do I believe that that will be true when the European war is over.

But our friends on the other side of the Chamber have declared in their platform adopted at St. Louis last week that—

We reaffirm our belief in the doctrine of a tariff for the purpose of providing sufficient revenue for the operation of the Government economically administered and unreservedly indorse the Underwood tariff laws as truly exemplifying that doctrine.

Therefore, the only hope of those who believe that the Underwood law has been a failure and would be dangerous in normal times is that there may be a revision of the tariff after March 4 next along protective-tariff lines by a Republican Congress.

A SETTLED TARIFF POLICY.

The bill I introduced providing for the creation of a tariff commission contains four sections in addition to the provisions of the Rainey bill as originally introduced. Sections 1 and 2 of my bill are the same as sections 1 and 2 of the Rainey bill, and create a tariff commission composed of six members and provide for their appointment and their compensation. The sections also provide for the organization of the commission.

Section 3 of my bill, which is a new section, provides—

SEC. 3. Tariff rates of duty on all articles imported from any foreign country into the United States, except as hereinafter provided, which articles come into competition with the same kind or similar articles manufactured in the United States, shall be fixed at an amount equal to the difference in the cost of the production of said articles in the United States and said foreign countries as nearly as it is possible to determine that difference; said difference to be computed by taking into consideration—

First. Relative labor cost.
Second. The relative material cost.
Third. Relative capital investment necessary.
Fourth. Relative fixed charges and overhead expense.
Fifth. Industrial and trade conditions and relative labor efficiency.

Should this section be adopted and made a part of the law it would settle until repealed the tariff policy of the country. Until there is a settled tariff policy provided by law the tariff question will remain in politics and in all presidential campaigns be one of the most important, if not the paramount issue; and after each presidential election the tariff will in all probability be revised, and the same uncertainty which has existed in regard to the tariff during all these years will continue.

HOW TO TAKE THE TARIFF OUT OF POLITICS.

The first step, therefore, necessary to be taken in order to get the tariff out of politics is to provide a definite tariff policy by act of Congress. So long as the tariff policy of this country remains only a platform or party pledge the uncertainty in regard to the tariff which has held back the industries of this country for half a century will continue.

Section 3 which I propose has two advantages: First, if adopted it will take the tariff out of politics; second, it provides for a just and equitable tariff policy. To equalize the difference in the cost of the production of articles at home and abroad as the section provides, placing the American manufacturer on an equal basis with the foreign manufacturer is, to say the least, fair. If rates of duty are fixed on a basis that will equalize the difference in American and foreign costs, they will protect the American wage earner and the high wages paid in this country as compared with wages paid in foreign countries, and enable the American manufacturer to hold the American market, providing he is content with a reasonable profit. It will prevent the foreign manufacturer and producer from underselling the American manufacturer and producer in our own market because of the lower cost of production abroad. It is all the honest American manufacturer ought to ask for, and this Government should not do less in protecting American industries, American enterprises, and American institutions against foreign competition. My proposition is that the tariff policy of this country should be determined by Congress and not alone by party platform pledge, and if it is possible for parties to carry out tariff policies such as are promised in the planks of their platforms, it is possible for the Congress of the United States to settle the question by statute law.

The agitation for a nonpartisan tariff commission has resulted from and is based upon the growing sentiment of the people, the manufacturers, the business men, and the laboring men that the tariff question be settled. The people will not stand much longer for the tariff being made the football of politics, especially after they know that there is a remedy within the power of the Congress of the United States. It is the most important business proposition with which Congress has to deal, and has a more far-reaching effect upon the individual welfare, happiness, and prosperity of the people than any other measure. Any mistakes in regard to the tariff will cause more widespread disaster, suffering, and hardship than mistakes in regard to any other question, and no man charged with responsibility who hesitates to do his duty in dealing with this important question, or who bows to party advantage which it may be claimed will be gained by this question remaining unsettled, will be able long to retain the confidence of his constituents and those whom he represents.

COMMISSION TO CALCULATE RATES.

Having created the commission by sections 1 and 2 and determined the tariff policy of the country by section 3, I add to my bill a section which I designate section 4, providing that the commission shall carry into effect the tariff policy of the country as determined by section 3 by fixing and promulgating the rates of duty.

Section 4 provides:

SEC. 4. That it shall be the duty of said commission to proceed at once to investigate and determine the difference in the cost of production of the articles named in the paragraphs in the several schedules of the existing tariff law and to arrive as speedily as possible at their conclusions as to the amount of rate or rates in each particular case or item which will be necessary to equalize the difference in the cost of production of the said article or articles in the United States and foreign countries; and said commission shall have the power to issue an order changing the existing rate or the rate then existing so as to make it conform to the conclusion reached by said commission as to the amount which will equalize said difference; but in no case shall said rate so fixed be less than said difference so determined; and upon the issuing of said order said rate shall be the amount of the tariff duty which shall be paid before any such article shall be cleared at the customhouse and received into this country. The orders of said commission shall be promulgated and proper notice given the customs officers throughout the United States and shall be effective from the date named by said commission: Provided, That every rate so adjusted by the commission shall at all times be subject to change on modification by Congress: Provided further, That said commission shall not fix rates of duty or issue any order or orders fixing rates of duty on the following-named class of articles, but such rates of duty shall be fixed by Congress: Tobacco and articles manufactured in whole or in part therefrom; spiritous and vinous liquors and all articles which come within this classification of luxuries. The commission shall not issue any order or orders or fix any rates of duty on or in regard to articles which do not come into competition with similar articles manufactured in the United States, but such rates of duty shall be fixed by Congress.

Section 4 providing that the tariff commission shall have the power to investigate in this country and abroad American and foreign costs and calculate the rates of duty on all competitive articles except only tobacco, liquors, and luxuries, and promulgate the rates of duty which will equalize the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad on the various articles enumerated in the paragraphs and schedules of the then existing tariff law, will insure the prompt and efficient carrying out of the policy provided in section 3 and relieve Congress of the fixing of tariff rates of duty on these competitive articles. Sections 3 and 4, should they be enacted into law, will stop the logrolling, vote trading and wirepulling which have characterized the enactment of every tariff law since the beginning of this Government. They will insure that tariff rates of duty will be fixed equitably and that the procedure will be free from politics. They will create confidence in the minds of the people in our tariff system, and will remove the prejudice that has heretofore existed in regard to protective tariff rates of duty. The protective tariff system will be regarded as a legitimate policy of government which safeguards the welfare and prosperity of all the people instead of being regarded as a graft system being used in the interests of the special interests and the capitalists.

That politics and pull have entered into the fixing of tariff rates of duty by both the Democrats and Republicans is beyond question or argument. That the special interests have secured special favors from both Democrats and Republicans has been a common charge which has been sustained in the opinion of many by the facts. Sections 3 and 4 will eliminate all this and be a godsend to the country.

OBJECTIONS ADVANCED TO PLAN.

There have been two objections which I regard worthy of consideration urged against these two sections:

First. That these sections would be unconstitutional as being a delegation of legislative power; and Second. That Congress should not give up its powers even though it could do so constitutionally, but should retain and hold to itself the right to fix rates of duty and not delegate that executive power to a commission.

FIRST OBJECTION.

I shall put in the RECORD, in connection with my remarks, a brief summarizing the decisions in regard to the delegating of legislative powers. But for the purpose of my argument in favor of these sections and their constitutionality, I desire to call attention at this time to but one decision, which, in my judgment, states the rule:

The general rule as to the delegation of power has been expressed by the Supreme Court of the United States, speaking through Mr. Justice Day, as follows:

The Congress may not delegate its purely legislative power to a commission, but, having laid down the general rules of action under which a commission shall proceed, it may require of that commission the application of such rules to particular situations and the investigation of facts with a view to making orders in a particular matter within the rules laid down by the Congress.

The policy fixed by section 3, it being determined by law that tariff rates of duty must be fixed on competitive articles so as to equalize the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad, the duty is left to the commission to effectuate the legislative policy declared in the statute. The commission has no option in the matter, but it must calculate the rates and promulgate them, a duty which is only ministerial or executive, as will be shown by the brief I shall place in the RECORD. The right of Congress to delegate this power or authority is sustained by a number of decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, and it does not amount to a delegation of legislative power or authority.

SECOND OBJECTION.

In regard to the second objection which has been raised that Congress should not give up its powers, I have only this to say, that it is a short-sighted statesmanship that refuses to hear a proposition which will benefit the whole people, which will settle in a businesslike way the most important business proposition with which Congress has to deal, that will result in just and equitable rates of duty being fixed, that will settle and remove the uncertainty which has existed in regard to the tariff during all these years because the representatives of the people would have to give up some power. It would seem to me to be the part of wise statesmanship and patriotic public duty to be willing to forego a little power in order to accomplish such important and far-reaching results. For myself, I am willing in the interests of the people, the laboring man, the business man, and the manufacturer to give up a little power in order that they all may be helped and the country at large may have the benefits which will result from a settled protective tariff policy in this country. I know that these sections will take away from my party its strongest and greatest issue, because the Republican Party is right upon the tariff question. The principle of protection will prevail because any other principle, such as tariff for revenue only or free trade, as history has shown, always results disastrously to the business of the country. But I am willing to give up that issue, and I believe that the Republican Party should be big enough and broad enough to be willing to give up that issue in the interests of our common country.

SUPPORT HOPED FOR.

These sections should have the approval and support of Republicans generally, because they write into the statute law of the land the protective-tariff principle. I have ventured to hope that they might have the support of northern Democrats who have come to believe that a fair and honest and just protection is necessary to our prosperity, those who are willing to abandon a theory and face the cold, hard fact that rates of duty that are less than the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad must either result in reduced wages to American workmen or loss of business to American enterprise. I have entertained no hope that the theoretical Democrat, without practical experience, who believes in tariff for revenue only or free trade, would accept my views; but practical northern Democrats, living in industrial communities and in the environment of industrial activity, should be able to see the practical side of this question, and I had ventured to hope that some such might be willing to support a fair proposition, even though it means writing into the law of the land the protective-tariff principle.

The fact that the administration has recommended and a Democratic majority has reported a bill creating a tariff commission at first seemed to me an abandonment on the part of the Democratic Party of the tariff-for-revenue-only theory, because a tariff board is absolutely unnecessary in carrying out a tariff-for-revenue-only policy. But the fact that in the Democratic platform adopted at St. Louis the old tariff-for-revenue-only theory was reaffirmed and the Underwood tariff law indorsed can only mean that the recommendation of a tariff board by the Democratic majority is done for the purpose of political expediency. But while the theory of the party is for a tariff for revenue only, yet I am convinced that a large percentage of the rank and file of the party and of the membership on this floor are for equalizing the difference in the cost of production of articles at home and abroad, whether you call that protection or use some other name; and it is because of that fact that I have ventured to hope that my position and my proposition might be supported, not only by Members upon this floor on the other side of the Chamber, but be approved by the people of the country generally, regardless of their party affiliations.

PUT TEETH IN THE BILL.

Section 5 of my bill should be adopted by those who desire to make the commission effective, even though my sections 3 and 4 be rejected.

Section 5 provides:

SEC. 5. In connection with the investigations of the commission of the relative cost of production of said articles in the United States and foreign countries said commission shall have the power to conduct its investigations in foreign countries by sending its members or its agents into any foreign country for said purpose, and the commission shall have the power to issue an order refusing admission into this country of the goods, wares, or merchandise of any foreign manufacturer, or goods, wares, or merchandise manufactured in any foreign country should said manufacturer, the exporter, or the importer thereof, or his or its agents, refuse to furnish said commission with the information or facts requested by the commission, or should said foreign manufacturer refuse to furnish the commission with or to produce any books, papers, or documents relating to any matter pertaining to such investigation, or should any of the officers or agents of said manufacturer, importer, or exporter refuse to appear and testify under oath and give the evidence required by the commission in making its investigations: Provided, That said order refusing the admission of the goods of any foreign manufacturer, or goods from any foreign country, shall only become effective after the President of the United States has issued a proclamation approving the order of the commission. When any such order of the commission has been approved by the President of the United States and his proclamation has been issued said order shall be placed in the hands of the proper customs officers by the commission and become effective as of the date determined by the commission and remain effective until the same is canceled by the order of the commission. Said order of cancellation shall also be approved by the President of the United States and shall only become effective on his proclamation.

Those who are in favor of a tariff commission, if they are sincere, should not refuse to make it an effective instrument for accomplishing the results for which it is intended. Right here I desire to say again that in my opinion the man who believes that a tariff commission is necessary in fixing tariff rates of duty for revenue only, either does not know what he is talking about or he is trying to fool somebody. You do not need to know anything about the relative cost of articles in America and European countries if all you want to do is to fix rates of duty for the purpose of revenue only. All you need to know in fixing revenue rates is how much revenue a rate will probably yield. But accurate information is necessary in fixing tariff rates for the purpose of protection, and in order not to injure American industry and that the American wage may be maintained. To accomplish this you need information, not only in regard to American costs but you must have information in regard to foreign costs. What will it benefit the American producer and how will it aid the American Congress in fixing protective rates of duty to have only one side of the proposition, to know only about the American costs?

The Rainey bill, should it be enacted into law as it now stands, will only serve to disturb American industry and American business, and to harass American business men by examining their books, and will get no results that amount to anything. We have enough commissions now that only disturb business without accomplishing any real good. We have enough commissions that provide soft berths for politicians and others and do no real service. The tariff commission, to be effective, must have the power to get foreign costs and there is no provision in the Rainey bill for getting foreign costs in an effective way. Section 5 would put teeth into the Rainey bill, and should it be adopted it will result in the commission having the power to get information in regard to foreign costs which will enable it to make its calculations as to the rates of duty that will equalize the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad. In order that no treaty arrangements may be violated by an order refusing to permit the goods to come into this country as provided in section 5, or of the country that refuses to give the commission information as to foreign costs, section 5 provides that the order shall not be issued except on the proclamation of the President of the United States. The President without doubt would make a thorough investigation of treaty arrangements and international relations before issuing such a proclamation which would safeguard us against any undue discriminations which might otherwise result from such an order.

SECTION 5 CONSTITUTIONAL.

The decisions I have referred to and which are summarized in the brief I shall put in the RECORD settles, in my opinion, the constitutional power of Congress to delegate the executive authority provided in section 5 to the commission and the President. The only reason that anyone might have for refusing to incorporate into the Rainey bill section 5 is that it is not desired to make the commission an effective instrument for the purpose for which it is intended and to fool the people of this country into believing that this Congress is doing something that will relieve this tariff situation when, in fact, they are only further complicating an already complicated system.

HEARINGS PROVIDED FOR.

SEC. 6. The commission shall in its discretion grant hearings to any American or foreign manufacturer, his or its agents or representatives, or to any person or organization upon a proper showing being made to said commission that the facts to be presented to the commission are material and would assist the commission in arriving at a proper conclusion in regard to any matter it has under consideration or is investigating, or in regard to any rate fixed by said commission.

Said hearings shall be held at such places and be subject to such rules as the commission shall determine. At such hearings any person may appear before the commission, subject to such reasonable limitation upon the amount of and duplication of testimony and arguments, or may be represented by an attorney or attorneys, and may file any written statement or documentary evidence bearing upon any matter which the commission may have under investigation or in regard to any rate fixed. Every vote and official action of the commission and of every member thereof shall be entered of record.

Section 6, providing for hearings, will insure to the American and the foreign manufacturer an opportunity of appearing before the commission and be heard in regard to the fixing of rates of duty, and while I do not regard it as so important a section as sections 3, 4, and 5, yet it will insure to those interested an opportunity to bring before the commission any facts and figures which will enable it to fix its tariff rates of duty equitably and justly.

OTHER SECTIONS.

The other sections of my bill are the same as the Rainey bill as originally introduced.

CONCLUSION.

In conclusion I desire to say that I have endeavored to show and to present a practical method for taking the tariff out of politics and for settling the tariff question by statute law. I believe that the sections which I have proposed would be constitutional if enacted, that the method is sound, and that should these sections be adopted they will accomplish all that I claim for them.

I believe confidently that the great mass of our people desire this tariff question settled, and that they will not approve of any captious arguments advanced in opposition to the question being settled. Even though my various propositions are not accepted at this time, yet I remain confident in the belief that the day will come when they will be accepted, and if I do nothing more on the tariff during my term in Congress than to leave the germ of the thought that the provisions of my bill contain, namely, that this question can be settled by law and should be settled by law, I will feel that I have accomplished a great deal.

A.—POWER OF CONGRESS TO REGULATE FOREIGN COMMERCE.

The power conferred upon Congress to regulate foreign and interstate commerce, like all other powers vested in Congress, is "absolute and complete in itself, may be exercised to its utmost extent, and acknowledges no limitations other than are prescribed in the Constitution." (Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat., 1, 196; Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat., 419, 446; Kidd v. Pearson, 128 U. S., 1, 16; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Brimson, 154 U. S., 447, 471; Brennan v. Titusville, 153 U. S., 280, 300; Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U. S., 100, 104; United States v. Joint Traffic Association, 171 U. S., 505, 571; Monongahela Navigation Co. v. United States, 148 U. S., 312, 336; Lottery Case, 188 U. S., 321, 353, 356; Buttfield v. Stranahan, 192 U. S., 470, 492; Addyston Pipe, etc., Co. v. United States, 175 U. S., 211, 228; Louisiana v. Texas, 176 U. S., 1, 21; Scranton v. Wheeler, 179 U. B.—DELEGATION OF POWER.

The general rule as to the delegation of power has been expressed by the Supreme Court of the United States, speaking through Mr. Justice Day, as follows:

"The Congress may not delegate its purely legislative power to a commission, but, having laid down the general rules of action under which a commission shall proceed, it may require of that commission the application of such rules to particular situations and the investigation of facts, with a view to making orders in a particular matter within the rules laid down by the Congress." (Interstate Commerce Commission v. Goodrich Transit Co., 224 U. S., 194, 214, cited and followed in Kansas City S. Ry. v. United State, 231 U. S., 423, 443.)

The same applies to delegation of the powers of Congress to the President, or to an administrative officer, for example:

A. TARIFF PROVISIONS, CONTINGENT UPON DETERMINATION OF FACT BY THE PRESIDENT, SUSTAINED.

The tariff act of 1890 (26 Stat., 567, 612) directed the President to suspend the free admission of sugar, etc., and to declare the operation of certain duties prescribed in the act, "Whenever, and so often as the President shall be satisfied that the Government of any country producing and exporting sugars, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides, raw and uncured, or any of such articles, imposes duties or other exactions upon the agricultural or other products of the United States, which in view of the free introduction of such sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides into the United States he may deem to be reciprocally unequal and unreasonable." The court, in upholding the validity of this provision, said: "That Congress can not delegate legislative power to the President is a principle universally recognized as vital to the integrity and maintenance of the system of government ordained by the Constitution.

The act of October 1, 1890, in the particular under consideration, is not inconsistent with that principle. It does not, in any real sense, invest the President with the power of legislation. * * * When he ascertained the fact that duties and exactions, reciprocally unequal and unreasonable, were imposed upon the agricultural or other products of the United States by a country producing and exporting sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, or hides, it became his duty to issue a proclamation declaring the suspension, as to that country, which Congress had determined should occur. He had no discretion in the premises except in respect to the duration of the suspension so ordered. But that related only to the enforcement of the policy established by Congress. As the suspension was absolutely required when the President ascertained the existence of a particular fact, it can not be said that in ascertaining that fact and in issuing his proclamation, in obedience to the legislative will, he exercised the function of making laws. Legislative power was exercised when Congress declared that the suspension should take effect upon a named contingency. What the President was required to do was simply in execution of the act of Congress. It was not the making of law. He was the mere agent of the law-making department to ascertain and declare the event upon which its expressed will was to take effect. It was a part of the law itself as it left the hands of Congress that the provisions, full and complete in themselves, permitting the free introduction of sugars, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides from particular countries should be suspended, in a given contingency, and that in case of such suspensions certain duties should be imposed." (Field v. Clark, 143 U. S., 649, 692; Lamar, J., and Fuller, C. J., dissenting from the opinion.)

B. PROHIBITION OF IMPORTATIONS UNDER STANDARD FIXED BY SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY SUSTAINED.

The act of March 2, 1897 (29 Stat. 604) prohibited the importation of "merchandise as tea which is inferior in purity, quality, and fitness for consumption to the standards provided in section 3 of this act. Section 3 directed the Secretary of the Treasury, on the recommendation of a board of seven experts appointed by him to "fix and establish uniform standards of purity, quality, and fitness for consumption of all kinds of teas imported into the United States." The court said that this statute "but expresses the purpose to exclude the lowest grades of tea, whether demonstrably of inferior quality, or unfit for consumption, or presumably so because of their inferior quality. This, in effect, was the fixing of a primary standard, and devolved upon the Secretary of the Treasury the mere executive duty to effectuate the legislative policy declared in the statute. * * * We may say of the legislation in this case, as was said of the legislation considered in Field v. Clark, that it does not, in any real sense, invest administrative officials with the power of legislation. Congress legislated on the subject as far as was reasonably practicable, and from the necessities of the case was compelled to leave to executive officials the duty of bringing about the result pointed out by the statute. To deny the power of Congress to delegate such a duty would, in effect, amount but to declaring that the plenary power vested in Congress to regulate foreign commerce would not be efficacious." (Buttfield v. Stranahan, 192 U. S., 470, 496.)

C.—STATUTORY PRECEDENTS FOR PROHIBITION OF IMPORTATIONS.

A. DEPENDING ON LABOR CONDITIONS IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

"That all goods, wares, articles, and merchandise manufactured wholly or in part in any foreign country by convict labor shall not be entitled to entry at any of the ports of the United States, and the importation thereof is hereby prohibited, and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to prescribe such regulations as may be necessary for the enforcement of this provision." (38 Stat., 195.)

The same provision occurred in earlier tariff acts beginning with that of 1890.

B. DEPENDING ON EXERCISE OF POWER BY AN EXECUTIVE OFFICER.

President authorized to prevent importation of adulterated food or drink, and goods from countries discriminating against American products. August 30, 1890 (26 Stat., 415, secs. 4, 5).

President authorized to prevent introduction of persons or property from countries where contagious diseases are prevalent. February 15, 1893 (27 Stat., 452, sec. 7).

Secretary of the Treasury authorized to prevent importation of adulterated or inferior tea. March 2, 1897 (29 Stat., 604-607); May 16, 1908 (35 Stat., 162).

Secretary of Agriculture authorized to declare birds and animals injurious to agriculture, and therefore prohibited. May 25, 1900 (31 Stat., 188, sec. 2; Crim. Code, sec. 241).

Secretary of the Treasury authorized to establish censorship of imported photographic films. October 3, 1913 (38 Stat., 151, par. 380).

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I observe that this section deals generally with the subject of surveys and lands. I desire to say a word or two about what might be called the promised land in connection with it. Whenever a party comes into power that has been out for some time, the members of the party are desirous of holding public office. It is a laudable ambition which afflicts Republicans as well as Democrats, and next to the Republican Party the party that I admire most is the Democratic Party. I desire to let my Democratic colleagues in on this information that there are jobs that ought to be filled by deserving Democrats. Ever since the 28th of February there have beeen a lot of good places going to waste, and what has been detaining the President of the United States I do not know. About that time a treaty with Haiti was confirmed, and that treaty by article 2 provided for two of the best jobs the President has to give away; that is, the President of Haiti must appoint a general receiver and a financial adviser, selected by the President of the United States. Those two jobs ought to be worth about $1,000 a month.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does not the gentleman know that the difference between a Democratic administration and a Republican administration is that under the Democratic administration positions are only filled in the interest of the public service, while under a Republican administration they are filled for the benefit of some members of the party? [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. It was that kind of talk that fooled the people four years ago, but they have got over it.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman know whether ratifications of that treaty have been acknowledged?

Mr. BENNET. They have, some weeks ago.

Mr. MANN. Then it has been done very recently.

Mr. BENNET. It has been done, and the President could fill those places if he wanted to.

Mr. MANN. They had not been exchanged when we passed the bill here.

Mr. BENNET. That was nearly two months ago.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Did the Democratic Party not have a rather painful experience down in that region in connection with an appointment to a position of this sort? A gentleman—it is not necessary to mention his name—who came from the city which my friend in part so ably represents held a responsible position in that section for a time, and in connection with him the administration had a rather painful experience. Does the gentleman suppose that that painful experience, fresh in their minds, has anything to do with their zeal in making these further appointments down there in the West Indies?

Mr. BENNET. I do not know. I am laying these jobs open to the whole United States. I am not confining them to the city of New York at all.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. Is this promised land to which the gentleman refers the promised land that is located on the east end of Long Island?

Mr. BENNET. Oh, there is no promised land there.

Mr. HICKS. Oh, the whole east end of Long Island is promised land.

Mr. BENNET. I know, but whenever they make you a promise in relation to Long Island you find that it is under water. I have been through that. I am alluding to real things. Here are two $12,000 jobs that they have in this article, and then you can place men without reference to the civil service up to 5 per cent of the collections and receipts of customs duties, unless by agreement otherwise between the two Governments, and I suppose they mean by that that they could appoint more if the Governments agree. Under Article XIII they can appoint engineers. Anybody can be an engineer. It does not say what kind of an engineer—no examination is prescribed. I think an engineer of the Democratic Party would be a very valuable thing in Ohio, New York, New Jersey, or Missouri in October next, and I am doing my party an ill service perhaps in calling attention to the fact, but I want my Democratic friends to get busy. I hate to think of these Democrats standing around with their tongues hanging out, deserving Democrats, looking for jobs when the time is so short.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, there is no hurry about that. We have five years yet in which to fill those places.

Mr. BENNET. Oh, after the 4th of next March we will attend to these details, but up to that time they ought to do their duty.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think that it is very much to the credit of Secretary Lansing and the administration that these positions in the foreign service have not been made a football for spoils politicians?

Mr. BENNET. If this treaty was necessary, if this legislation was proper, if these positions were necessary, then the places ought to be filled, and this being a Democratic administration I am willing that they shall be filled by Democrats, and hope they will be.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

For gauging streams and determining the water supply of the United States, the investigation of underground currents and artesian wells, and the preparation of reports upon the best methods of utilizing the water resources, $150,000.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 107, line 17, strike out "$150,000" and insert "250,000, of which $100,000 may be used to test the existence of artesian and other underground water supplies suitable for irrigation or domestic purposes in the arid and semiarid regions by boring test wells."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, on that I make the point of order. It is not authorized by law.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will reserve it for five minutes.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Chairman, in my judgment, this is a very necessary increase to the appropriation made to this department. In a locality in my district there is an area of about 15 or 18 square miles, that has been settled for the last five or six years. It is land that is equal to the best in general appearance. It was settled upon and improved by the early settlers, and I will say that there is not a vacant 160 acres in that area to-day, and there has not been any permanent water found except in one or two portions of the area. They came in there in an early day and did not try for permanent water for awhile, until they could get their other improvements ready, as very often is the case in that country. They dug shallow wells and were able to find pockets of water that were equal to their use for a time, but when they began to think about putting down permanent wells they found that they were unable to get water. I have received a number of petitions from people in this locality, praying for relief—one man put down 100 holes on his 160 acres to a depth—some of them—of 125 to 150 feet, and he has no water at the present time anywhere near his improvements. He has one well a mile and a half from his improvements, where at a great depth he has found a little water. It is growing less and less all of the time, and he is of the opinion that it will be as the other holes have proven to be, serving water for a little while and then drying up. The Geological Survey is of opinion that it is authorized to do this character of work, and it is only for the reason that they have not been provided with funds sufficient to carry it on that they have rejected the petitions. The Senate last year added such an amendment as this to the Agricultural appropriation bill, but it was not agreed to in conference, and it is the opinion of the department that an appropriation of this kind would lend great aid to a great many people interested, and it is in the interest of these people that I am asking that this appropriation be increased.

On what ground does the gentleman from New York insist that it is not in order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is not authorized by law.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Is not the Geological Survey authorized by law to do this kind of work? They hold in a letter that was presented at the hearing before the Senate committee that they are authorized to do that kind of work. The authority to gauge streams, to determine the water supply of the United States, and the investigation of underground currents and artesian wells, and the preparation of reports upon the best methods of utilizing waters, is within the prerogative of that office, and the Senate so considered the matter as in their judgment to approve of the claim made by the department and added to the appropriation bill the amount of $100,000. It, however, as I have stated, was not agreed to in conference. I would like to read a portion of a letter from the Geological Survey:

The legislative status of the question of Government test wells is that without question the Geological Survey has authority for such work in the wording of the appropriation item which for a number of years has provided for investigations of underground currents and artesian wells. Unfortunately, however, the appropriation of $150,000 under this item is inadequate for carrying on the stream gauging and other investigations relating to water resources already in progress. It would therefore be impossible to use any of that amount for drilling test wells without serious loss to work already in progress. It was to meet this condition that the estimates prepared the past year for submission to the present Congress included an addition of $100,000 to this item, making the total appropriation asked for $250,000, with specific mention of the purpose to test the existence of underground water supplies by boring wells. As included in the Book of Estimates, this item is worded as follows:

"For gauging streams and determining the water supply of the United States, the investigation of underground currents, and artesian wells, and the preparation of reports upon the best methods of utilizing the water resources, $250,000, of which $100,000 may be used to test the existence of artesian and other underground water supplies suitable for irrigation in the arid and semiarid regions by boring wells; one-half to be immediately available."

I desire to quote the following from a letter from R. D. George, State geologist, Colorado geological survey:

Among the most persistent of these inquiries have been those from the southern part of Lincoln County. There is in that locality a high level plain 150 square miles in extent, of rich, productive land, even under dry-farming conditions, but the problem of finding an adequate supply of water for house and stock is unsolved. The depth to the Dakota water-bearing sandstone is probably not less than 3,000 feet. This is prohibitive, so far as individual effort and expenditure are concerned, and would be a tremendous community burden for settlers on dry lands.

Would it not be a legitimate and commendable activity for the Federal Government to undertake to test the question of a possible water supply for this community? The development of this part of the State is just as dependent upon a water supply as is that of the areas in which the Government has undertaken irrigation projects. These people have put up a splendid fight and are a very desirable type.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The gentleman from New York makes the point of order, and the point of order is sustained.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I want to corroborate all my colleague [Mr. TIMBERLAKE] has said regarding the amendment which he has offered. There certainly could be no more advantageous expenditure of the Government's money than by a judicious prospecting for water upon the great plains of the West in various portions of the arid regions, and it does seem to me that with all the expenditures of millions and millions of dollars that the Government of the United States is spending in developing in all directions in the Agricultural Department especially, that this committee ought to have provided means, if possible, for the extension of this artesian water-development work. I feel that they have not given the matter the consideration that its importance deserves. While I do not mean to criticize them, at the same time, in my judgment, an expenditure of money toward the development of artesian water, the ascertainment of the underground flow of water throughout the arid regions of the West, is of tremendous importance to the development of that country. It is something that can not be handled by private enterprise. Men can not afford to spend thousands of dollars for the purpose of getting water for only his homestead claim of 160 acres of land, and under the public-land laws he would be not only limited to that amount but the chances are he would be penalized if he tried to get any more. For that reason I do feel that the committee ought to favorably consider this amendment and ought not to insist upon the point of order against it.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 107, line 17, strike out "$150,000" and insert "$200,000."

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For inquiries and investigations concerning the mining, preparation, treatment, and utilization of petroleum and natural gas, with a view to economic development, and conserving resources through the prevention of waste; to inquire into the economic conditions affecting the industry, including equipment, supplies, and expenses of travel, and subsistence, $70,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 110, line 4, after the sum "$70,000," insert the following: "Of which sum not exceeding 10 per cent may be used during the fiscal year 1917 for personal services in the District of Columbia."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 110, after line 4, add a new paragraph, as follows:

"For special investigation of lignite coals with a view to their most efficient treatment and use, especially with reference to their utilization in producing fuel for internal-combustion engines and in supplying benzine, toluene, and other basic materials required by the dyestuff and related chemical industries, $50,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that. I will reserve the point of order for five minutes.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I trust the chairman will accept this meritorious amendment.

One of the most important questions at the present time before the people of this country is the price and supply of gasoline and crude petroleum.

Due to the rapid development and the growing uses of automobiles and other internal-combustion engines during the past few years and the consequent increased use of gasoline for power production, the supply of gasoline and crude petroleum, from which for the most part gasoline is obtained, threatens soon to be exhausted. The production of crude oil in the United States and the entire world during the past 15 years is given in the following table, which summarizes in round numbers the total marketed production of crude petroleum in the United States from 1900 to 1915, inclusive, and shows for comparison the crude oil production of the entire world during that period, in barrels of 42 gallons:

Year.	United States.	Entire world.
1900	63,600,000	149,100,000
1901	69,400,000	167,400,000
1902	88,800,000	182,000,000
1903	100,500,000	194,800,000
1904	117,100,000	218,300,000
1905	134,700,000	215,400,000
1906	126,500,000	214,000,000
1907	166,100,000	264,900,000
1908	178,500,000	285,100,000
1909	183,200,000	298,400,000
1910	209,000,000	327,000,000
1911	220,400,000	345,700,000
1912	222,900,000	352,500,000

1915	[1] 267,400,000	[2]

[1] Estimated. [2] No figures available.

This shows that last year the production of crude petroleum in the United States amounted to 267,400,000 barrels. The production of gasoline in the United States last year amounted to about 41,000,000 barrels. It is estimated by the United States Geological Survey that the amount of crude petroleum remaining in the oil fields of the United States is 7,629,000,000 barrels.

The following table gives the production of the 10 principal oil fields of the United States up to and including the year 1915, and shows the present gasoline favor of each field and the percentage of exhaustion of each field:

Field.	Present gasoline factor (per cent).	Production including 1915 (millions of barrels).	Estimated percentage of exhaustion.
Appalachian	25	1,150	74
Lima-Indiana	12	438	93
Illinois	18	251	60
Mid-Continent	18	617	50
North Texas	20	44	41
Northwest Louisiana	20	58	47
Gulf Coast	3	236	79
Colorado	20	11	79
Wyoming	20	12	5
California	2½	835	34

With the exception of the Appalachian field, the Lima-Indiana field, and the Colorado field, all of these oil fields in the United States have had their principal development since the year 1900.

Taking into account the productive possibilities of all pools demonstrated to contain oil, as well as the productive possibilities of untested areas in which the geologic evidence is promising, the following conservative estimates of the percentage of exhaustion and of the quantity of petroleum that remains available for commercial extraction has been made by the Bureau of Mines:

Field.	Estimated percentage of exhaustion of total oil content.	Petroleum remaining in fields (barrels.)
Appalachian	70	481,000,000
Lima-Indiana	93	31,000,000
Illinois	51	244,000,000
Mid-Continent	25	1,874,000,000
North Texas	8	484,000,000
Northwest Louisiana	22	124,000,000
Gulf	13	1,500,000,000
Colorado	65	6,000,000
Wyoming and Montana	2	540,000,000
California	26	2,345,000,000
Total		7,629,000,000

At the present rate of consumption of gasoline and crude petroleum, this estimated supply would last the United States for only about 26 years. Thus it is at once seen that a serious question confronts us to discover some other source of supply for motor spirits, or a substitute for gasoline.

Recent investigations that have been carried out on a small scale by Prof. Babcock, of the University of North Dakota, at the substation of the State School of Mines, at Hebron, N. Dak., disclose that the lignite coal fields of the United States contain an almost inexhaustible supply of light oils which can be used in internal-combustion engines as a substitute for gasoline.

It is estimated by the United States Geological Survey that the original supply of lignite coals in the United States is 1,087,514,400,000 short tons.

Lignite coal is found chiefly in the western part of the United States, in the territory extending from Texas, through Colorado, Wyoming, Montana, and the Dakotas. In this area there is a comparative scarcity of bituminous coal and a negligible quantity of anthracite coal.

The railroad industries requiring fuel of a high character are obliged to haul bituminous coal from the East or to employ petroleum or otherwise burn raw lignite. The main objections to the use of raw sub-bituminous coal—sometimes called black lignite—and the brown lignite are: It rapidly weathers and disintegrates; it fires spontaneously.

When used on locomotives it throws sparks for long distances, setting fire to crops and houses; moreover, much of the fuel is wasted under forced draft.

On the other hand, to transport bituminous coal and anthracite coal from the East is expensive.

While petroleum is satisfactory to the fuel users, it is becoming increasingly expensive, and it is exceedingly wasteful to use the raw oil as a fuel. Moreover, the resources, as I have called attention to, are becoming rapidly depleted, and the country must look for other sources of mineral oil than that from petroleum wells.

Lignitic coals of the Western States vary widely in composition, containing moisture as mined ranging from 10 to 40 per cent, and ranging in appearance from the sub-bituminous coal or high-grade black lignite (which behaves very similar to bituminous coal) to the brown lignite, found in some parts of North Dakota and Texas, which is little more than peat.

Necessarily there is quite a variation in composition which requires careful investigation to determine what method will produce the best briquets and the maximum quantity of by-products.

In 1909 a small experiment station was started by the College of Mining Engineering of the University of North Dakota, at Hebron, under the direction of Prof. E. J. Babcock, and the last few years a cooperation was effected on a very small scale with the Federal Bureau of Mines in order that the results might be published and thus be of benefit in the study and utilization of the lignites on the Government lands. At this experimental station, a description of which is given in Bulletin 89 of the Bureau of Mines, entitled "Economic Methods for Using Waste Lignites," briquets have been made which have withstood handling and weathering for six months or more in the open air. This was made from lignite which would begin weathering and disintegrating in a few days. They have also been dried and burned in a type of furnace and tried on local railroad locomotives. It is reported that one ton of briquets was equal to one ton of the best bituminous coal in keeping up steam, and equal to a ton of the best anthracite coal for use in furnaces and heating stoves.

The analysis of the briquets is not unlike that of the Pocahontas coals, except for slightly higher ash. The briquets are almost smokeless. The briquets which have been made have employed tar for a binder, the tar being brought from the east. Petroleum residues would be available for the same purpose, and one line of investigation would be to determine the best binder in the various localities where lignite is produced. Some tar is produced in the carbonization of the lignite, but not sufficient to make the briquets, and moreover it is probable that in most cases the tar derived would be of greater value on account of the by-products that could be produced than the ordinary tar of commerce.

In the carbonization of lignites, as demonstrated by Prof. Babcock, very important by-products are produced. These products vary widely with the lignite and with the degree to which carbonization is carried. The yield of gas is large for the partly dried lignite, reaching 10,000 to 12,000 cubic feet per ton, according to Prof. Babcock, which is about the same as that from a high-grade bituminous coal. Further, the evolution of gas is much more rapid. The residues may be briquetted. The gas has been tried in gas engines, and tests made in comparison with standard city gas, and it was found that the lignite gas was especially satisfactory. It is believed that there is a large field for the production of power through the establishment of large by-product plants.

Ammonia and tar are also produced in the carbonization of the coal. According to Prof. Babcock, approximately 50 pounds of tar can be recovered from 1 ton of partly dried lignite. This tar is very high in paraffin ingredients. Prof. Babcock estimates that there is produced from a ton of dried lignite coal at different temperatures 5 to 6 gallons of crude lignite oils, 2 gallons of crude benzol, 2 to 3 gallons of hard tar, 50 to 60 pounds of ammonia sulphate, and 20 pounds of tar acids. Benzol is one of the compounds used in the manufacture of dyestuffs and explosives, and is an excellent substitute for gasoline for use in internal-combustion engines. Prof. Babcock has also produced by distillation from lignites oil which has been found to be unusually well suited in the concentration of ore by the flotation process. It is evident to anyone who has given the subject consideration that our western lignite coals present a field for investigation which promises very much for the development of those parts of the country hitherto retarded by the lack of fuel in its various forms and also offers the greatest possibilities through the enormous amounts of lignite in substitution for petroleum, which is intrinsically too valuable to the country to permit its use as a fuel.

The investigation should be carried on in the most practical way possible to obtain information regarding the different lignite fields and how each can best be utilized. Such work will not necessarily have to be carried on by the establishment of local stations, but can be most economically and best done at the general stations in the West where the materials may be shipped for testing.

One important use for lignite which deserves further development is that in the gas producer. This would be eminently of advantage where it is desired to obtain power at points where water was scarce and where the by-products would be of less value on account of difficulties and expense of transportation.

From the carbonization of lignite coal, can be obtained unpurified gas that has a heating value of upward of 400 British thermal units per cubic foot. From 10,000 to 12,000 cubic feet of volatile gas is contained in each ton of ordinary western lignite coal.

The work that is proposed to be carried on, under authority of the amendment I have offered, is work that unquestionably should be done by the United States and is one of the most important steps that can, at this time, be taken, in the way of industrial preparedness for our immediate and future needs in this country.

Prof. Babcock, who is the leading authority in this country on lignite coals, their composition, and the commercial and economic possibilities of these coals, has told me that the limited investigations that he has already carried on, which has disclosed the presence in these coals of high-grade tars, tar acids, including carbolic acid, and the basic elements used in the manufacture of aniline dyes and high explosives, has opened up marvelous economic and commercial possibilities, that he feels certain wider and more complete investigations and experiments would show to be practical and would point the way for the establishment of manufacturing plants throughout the country to briquet this coal and to use the by-products from the briquetting process in different commercial activities.

In Germany during the present European war it is reported that large quantities of benzol is being produced from lignite coals for use in internal-combustion engines. The statistics of 1913 show that Germany in that year mined 87,000,000 tons of lignite, which was about the same amount of bituminous coal mined. Most of the lignite mined was briquetted and sold at practically the same price as briquets of bituminous coal.

The tremendous importance of securing a large supply of a good substitute for gasoline such as benzol has proven to be is better understood when the fact is considered that in the United States to-day the horsepower of gasoline internal-combustion engines is twice that of the horsepower of all engines driven by steam.

As I have already stated it is estimated that the total supply of lignite coal in the United States is 1,087,514,400,000 short tons. Now, from each ton of lignite in the process of briquetting, upward of two gallons of benzol can be secured in addition to other valuable by-products, as tar, tar acids, ammonia compounds, etc.

While the estimated supply of crude petroleum in the ground in the United States is sufficient to supply the present rate of consumption in the United States for about 26 years, the quantity of benzol that can be secured from carbonization or distillation of our lignite coals would, at the present rate of consumption, meet our needs for use in all kinds of internal-combustion engines for more than a thousand years.

The lignite coal fields are widely distributed, being found in Alabama, Louisiana, Mississippi, Texas, Wyoming, North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, Washington, and other States.

It is estimated that there are 697,921,200,000 short tons of lignite in North Dakota, 1,020,300,000 tons in South Dakota, and 23,000,000,000 tons in Texas.

There should be appropriated at this time at least $100,000 to carry out a thorough and complete investigation of the commercial practicability of the use of lignite coal as a fuel in briquetted form and of the value of its by-products for use in internal-combustion engines, and for supplying the basic elements needed in the manufacture of aniline dyes and high explosives. But I have offered this amendment proposing an appropriation of $50,000 with the hope that the chairman of the committee will accept this amendment as a compromise amount for the actual amount that is needed and which should be appropritated for this purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. NORTON. I ask unanimous consent that I may continue for 10 minutes more.

Mr. MONDELL. I hope the gentleman will be allowed to continue for 10 minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I am compelled to insist on the point of order. What is the use of talking about it? I will read it if he will put it in the RECORD.

Mr. NORTON. I wish to speak in opposition to the point of order if the gentleman insists on making it. The organic law establishing the Bureau of Mines authorizes this item.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no question about the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman the law?

Mr. NORTON. Yes; it is entitled "An act to establish in the Department of the Interior a Bureau of Mines," approved May 16, 1910. Section 2 reads as follows:

SEC. 2. That it shall be the province and duty of the Bureau of Mines, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, to conduct inquiries and scientific and technologic investigations concerning mining, and the preparation, treatment, and utilization of mineral substances with a view to improving health conditions, and increasing safety, efficiency, economic development, and conserving resources through the prevention of waste in the mining, quarrying, metallurgical, and other mineral industries; to inquire into the economic conditions affecting these industries; to investigate explosives and peat; and on behalf of the Government to investigate the mineral fuels and unfinished mineral products belonging to, or for the use of, the United States, with a view to their most efficient mining, preparation, treatment, and use; and to disseminate information concerning these subjects in such manner as will best carry out the purposes of this act.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, this amendment goes away beyond the organic act.

Mr. NORTON. It is clearly within the provision of the second section of the organic act.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not at all.

Mr. NORTON. It is certain that an appropriation for this purpose will be provided for by the Senate if not by the House, as it is a subject of such importance and great possibilities that investigation can not be delayed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It will not gain any headway by making threats here or there, either.

Mr. NORTON. The statement is not made by way of a threat. If the gentleman had given the subject any consideration, he would know there is great necessity and need for this investigation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The department has never asked it nor have they suggested it, and have never discussed it.

Mr. NORTON. I will say to the gentleman that the department is highly in favor of this.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The department is in favor of getting every dollar that anybody suggests to spend. That is a different thing from what I said.

Mr. NORTON. As to this item I do not think that is a fair statement so far as the Bureau of Mines is concerned.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Investigations of lignite have been made only recently. We have investigated lignite coal and are investigating it now. I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the employment of personal services and all other expenses in connection with the establishment, maintenance, and operation of three mining experiment stations, authorized by the act approved March 3, 1915, $75,000.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I merely want to say that this is the most far-reaching and best provision in this entire bill. It is of tremendous importance to the West, and I am delighted to see it in here.

I think I am the author of this provision. I started in nearly seven years ago by introducing a bill providing for the establishment of a metalliferous mining experiment station at Silverton, Colo. The enterprising citizens of that city are the originators of this idea, and they and I have been diligently working upon it ever since, and I earnestly hope that in all fairness the first one of these mining experiment stations established in the United States will be located at Silverton, Colo. That town and that mining district is most deservedly entitled to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For such additional personal services as may be necessary for the care and maintenance of the new buildings at Pittsburgh, $14,305.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: On page 110, in line 25, strike out the sum "$14,305" and insert in lieu thereof the sum "$4,305."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For purchase or lease of necessary land, where and under such conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may direct, for the headquarters of mine rescue cars and construction of necessary railway sidings and housing for the same, $1,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to accept any suitable land or lands, buildings, or improvements, that may be donated for said purpose.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: On page 111, in line 19, after the word "same," insert the following: "or as the site of an experimental mine and a plant for studying explosives"; and at the end of line 22, after the word "purpose," insert the following: "and to enter into leases for periods not exceeding 10 years, subject to annual appropriations by Congress."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin reserves a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, this was intended to be inserted. It was to permit the making of a lease for the experimental mine that the department now has near Pittsburgh and for making leases for periods of 10 years, subject to annual appropriations.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the purpose of the first amendment, that following the word "same," line 19?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The department now has an experimental mine near Pittsburgh. It has been loaned or leased to the department for a year at a time. In this mine they set up the ordinary timbers that are used in mining and experiment with explosives. In order to enable them to continue the use of that mine they want authority to lease it.

Mr. FOSTER. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that they are using explosives in a very large tube. Down where the old experimental department was located, near the arsenal at Pittsburgh, they are building a new building, and will move out of the old one. That was on ground owned by the War Department. They are moving up on the hill where the new building is. It is so close to some of the buildings that they can not use this apparatus there for the investigation of explosives. They put gas in a large drum and that explodes. So they are moving it out 15 miles from Pittsburgh, on land owned by the Pittsburgh Coal Co. They pay a nominal rental of $100 a year for this land where they have an experimental mine, where, as stated by the chairman, they show the effects of explosions in the mines.

Mr. STAFFORD. This will not involve any monetary obligation on the part of the Government?

Mr. FOSTER. Not in the least.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin withdraws his reservation of a point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter in the absence of the Director of the Bureau of Mines the assistant director of said bureau shall perform the duties of the director during the latter's absence, and in the absence of the Director and of the Assistant Director of the Bureau of Mines the Secretary of the Interior may designate some officer of said bureau to perform the duties of the director during his absence.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, reserving a point of order, what is the purpose of this paragraph?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The work of the Bureau of Mines is such that both the director and assistant director are frequently required to be out of Washington, and it is desired that the Secretary of the Interior may designate somebody as acting director so that he may sign the necessary official papers, and thus expedite the work of the department.

Mr. BENNET. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York withdraws the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, Bureau of Mines, $965,005.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to change the total to $955,005 instead of $965,000. It is the correct total.

Mr. BENNET. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, was the other a typographical error—the Pittsburgh matter?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; a printing error. This total was correct. The other was a typographical error.

Mr. BENNET. I understand.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk reads as follows:

Klamath project, Oregon-California: For maintenance, operation, continuation of construction, and incidental operations, $180,000; together with the unexpended balance of the same appropriated for this project for the fiscal year 1916.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. CLINE. I do so for the purpose of making a request in behalf of my colleague, Mr. BARNHART, who is detained in Indiana because of serious illness in his family. He desires to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the pension legislation of the first session of the Sixty-fourth Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that his colleague [Mr. BARNHART] may have the right to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the pension legislation of the first session of the Sixty-fourth Congress. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to change the word "same," in line 13, page 117, to the word "sum." It is a typographical error.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the correction will be made.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

All moneys refunded except repayments of construction and operation and maintenance charges, under the provisions of the act shall be a credit to the appropriation for the project from or on account of which the collection is made and shall be available for expenditure in like manner as if said sum had been specifically appropriated for said project in this act.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to inquire of the chairman what is the purpose to be accomplished by this new phraseology carried in the paragraph?

Mr. FITZGERALD. At the bottom of page 118?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Reclamation Service houses and subsists its employees and charges them for the accommodations. This is to permit the appropriation for each project to be used for that purpose and reimbursed by the payments made into it by the employees.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then the only sums refunded are of the character that the gentleman refers to? It says:

All moneys refunded, except repayments of construction and operation and maintenance charges, under the provisions of the act shall be a credit to the appropriation for the project.

I thought that particular language might include other moneys besides those designated by the gentleman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The only moneys that are obtained are payments under incidental operations and payments under the permanent operations, and then these moneys that are received from employees. There are some moneys also which are received from the sale of power on some of the projects.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why should the moneys received from power be refunded? I can understand why these amounts that are incidental to the construction should be credited to the appropriation, but why should charges for power be so credited?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They are not included. The only payments are those of the employees. We have a number of incidental operations in connection with the projects, such as the running of mess houses and hospitals, and in a few cases mercantile stores, where there is a continual income and outgo. They almost always show some profit. We have not included in our statement the gross investment to make the appropriation look larger than it is, because that money keeps going back. It is only these incidental operations. The others are not appropriated. They are applied to the cost of construction and go into the reclamation fund.

Mr. STAFFORD. Would any accounting be had of these incidental funds under the method suggested?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, yes; they have to be accounted for just the same; but it is to enable the moneys obtained in that way to be utilized as a part of the work of the project.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order, after the explanation given.

The Clerk read as follows:

Alaska Engineering Commission: For carrying out the provisions of the act approved March 12, 1914 (38 Stats., 305), entitled "An act to authorize the President of the United States to locate, construct, and operate railroads in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes," to continue available until expended, $6,247,620.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee what progress has been made in the construction of the railroad in Alaska? How much money has thus far been expended, and what has the engineering commission done up to this time?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There has been appropriated so far $5,000,000. The Alaska Northern Railroad has been purchased under the authorization.

Mr. MADDEN. Was that the Guggenheim road that we talked so much about?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; that is not the Guggenheim road, but is the other road, running from Seward to Kern Creek, a distance of about 70 miles. The cost, I think, was about $1,300,000. It is conceded by everybody that the price was very reasonable. That railroad is now being improved and put in condition so as to enable it to be operated and supplied with rolling stock. The purpose is to continue along Turnagain Arm to a place known as Anchorage Junction, which is about 5 miles from Anchorage, on Cooks Inlet, a distance, as I recall, of about 55 miles. We have started at Anchorage on Cooks Inlet—which, however, is not an all-the-year ice-free port—to build the main line to Fairbanks. The distance is over 400 miles. We had already graded and laid rails a distance of about 20 miles to the Matanuska River, and the work is to be continued to the Matanuska coal fields, a distance of 35 miles from Anchorage, and also to be continued up the main line toward Fairbanks. It is hoped that during the coming fiscal year sufficient work will have been done to enable coal to be shipped from the Matanuska coal fields to Anchorage, and by water from Anchorage on Cooks Inlet to wherever it may be desirable to ship it. The work along Turnagain Arm is very heavy in character, and is necessary to connect the line from Anchorage Junction with the terminus of the Alaska Northern Railroad at Seward. My recollection is that the work has all been done very much within the original estimate, and that the railroad to Fairbanks, with this branch to the Matanuska coal fields, including the purchase of the Alaska Northern and its rehabilitation, and the providing of the rolling stock for the whole system, will be completed for about $28,000,000. I may be mistaken, but that is my recollection.

Mr. MADDEN. The original expense was intended to be $50.000,000, was it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; $35,000,000 was the limit of cost. The commission has on it Mr. Edes, who is commended as one of the most expert railroad locators and builders of the West, and Lieut. Mears, who built the relocated Panama line.

Mr. MADDEN. According to the amount of money already expended, how many years will it take to complete the road?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think we have not an estimate of that. I think they figure that it will take two or three years.

Mr. MADDEN. When the bill was up for consideration at first it was stated that we would be able to build the road within a year. Another statement made was that all the men who had built railroads in Alaska were a lot of highway robbers and violators of the law. Notwithstanding that I notice that the Government has invested its money in the purchase of the roads which the "highway robbers" built.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think those "highway robbers" were supposed to be in the other road. The statement was made at one time that the Guggenheims had invested in cash $22,500,000 in that road from Cordova, that they had not issued any bonds, that they had put their own money into it, and that the probabilities were they never would get it out. I never had much sympathy with the policy that prevented men who had the means, and who were welling to expend their money in the development of that Territory, from going ahead and developing it. I think some arrangement should have been made by which private capital and private enterprise would have been encouraged to build roads.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman his expired.

Mr. MADDEN. I will ask for about a minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that his time be extended one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. I should like to know what it was that the Government purchased from the Alaska Northern Railroad Co., if they had to rebuild the road?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The right of way had been graded for 70 miles, but they had very light rails on it, and the bridges and culverts were not sufficiently heavy to carry the character of rolling stock and loads that it is intended shall be operated on the line, so that it will be necessary to build heavier culverts and bridges and to lay heavier rails. What has been purchased is the right of way, the graded road.

Mr. MADDEN. So we paid $19,000 a mile for the right of way to the company that owned the road?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; all graded and ready to lay the tracks.

Mr. MADDEN. It was stated in the House that we might build the road for $20,000 a mile. I never thought so; I thought it would cost $70,000 or $80,000 a mile. What has it cost to rehabilitate the road?

Mr. FITZGERALD. My recollection is that we have expended $300,000 or $400,000 on the road. The company has spent about a million dollars more than we are paying for it.

Mr. MADDEN. We are spending about $300,000 more on it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But that includes the equipment. I have not looked into this matter for some time, but I went into it very exhaustively at the time of the deficiency hearings.

Mr. NORTON obtained leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

The Clerk read as follows:

Authority is granted to purchase during the fiscal year 1917, from the appropriation made for the construction and operation of railroads in Alaska articles and supplies for sale to employees and contractors, the appropriation to be reimbursed by the proceeds of such sales.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking my colleague if his attention has been called to the figures in line 21.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I was just about to ask that the Clerk be authorized to change the figures 1917 from numerals to words.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Yellowstone National Park: For administration and protection, including not exceeding $300 for maintenance and repair of horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles for use of the superintendent in making inspections of the park, $5,500.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] about the Yellowstone National Park and the management of the hotels. There are several hotels there, and I want to ask him what relationship there is between the management of those hotels and the Government.

Mr. MONDELL. The hotels are run under leases granted by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. FESS. Is there any limitation as to what shall be charged in the way of accommodations for rooms, and so forth?

Mr. MONDELL. In granting leases the Secretary fixes the maximum of all charges, as I understand it.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a statement to the Members of the House. At the Grand Canyon Hotel a party with which I was traveling, 52 in number, reached there in the afternoon of last September in the midst of a snowstorm. There were 52 in the party, as I recall, among them the chief chemist of the Cooper Union Institute of New York, accompanied by his wife, also a member of the Chicago Board of Trade, Mr. Brainard, and party; also the head of one of the large publishing houses of New York with a party, and many others who travel much in this and other countries. When we reached there it was declared by the chief clerk that there was no room with a bath or with heat unoccupied. I, with my wife, was shoved off into a very cold corner of one of the most handsome hotels I ever saw. The room had no heat, no radiator. One lady, with daughter and niece, was given but one room for the three. I found that other parties I have mentioned were similarly treated. When we protested, because this was the first time I had received this kind of treatment, I was told that there were no rooms unoccupied. I asked to see the proprietor. I was told he could not be seen. I demanded to see him. After some trouble in getting an interview with the head man whose name, as I recall, was Mr. Cheatam, a suggestive name, I found that they had closed up one floor, but they finally agreed to open it up by the orders of the manager. I still complained on behalf of the rest of the party to the disgust of the hotel men. There was very great inconvenience to our entire party, which was finally cared for in a reasonable manner. I thought that it would be my duty to make a statement to the Members of the House.

If there is any doubt as to the accuracy of my statement, I would be glad to insert in the RECORD letters from various parties who traveled in the party written to me after they reached home. These letters were written as a protest against such treatment of the public in this famous park.

Mr. MONDELL. Did the gentleman inform the Secretary of the Interior of the happenings which he has now related?

Mr. FESS. I did not.

Mr. MONDELL. In view of the fact that these hotels are under the Secretary's control, that would have been the proper thing to do.

Mr. FESS. I will say that I shall do that, because I think the people of the country should not be treated in that way. I feel, not as a mischief-maker, but I think it is my duty to make notification of this kind of treatment of the public.

Mr. MONDELL. I think the Interior Department endeavors to have the hotels—I think it insists that the hotels furnish the best accommodations possible under the circumstances and conditions for travelers. I think it is the duty of the traveler who feels that he has not been fairly treated to inform the Secretary in regard to those matters.

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman from Ohio that he take it up with Mr. Mather, the assistant to the Secretary, and that he will receive considerate attention. Mr. Mather is the man who has charge of these matters, and he is very enthusiastic about the park.

Mr. FESS. I want to state that my treatment in all other hotels was very satisfactory, but in this hotel it was simply brutal, and I think it ought to be called to the attention of Members. I shall act in accordance with the suggestions and lay the matter before the department. I am not complaining of prices but of treatment of guests in hotels where prices are sufficiently high to justify gentlemanly conduct on the part of management and clerical force.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] in order to ask the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] a question.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will not assume that I have anything to do with these hotels.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I noticed in a popular periodical the other day a statement that the Grand Canyon was rendered uncomfortable for visitors because of the operation of the mining laws; that some man filed a placer claim or something of that sort under the United States laws where there were no minerals and thereby he has prevented the improvement of the Grand Canyon by the United States Government, and that there were places in the Grand Canyon and on the rim of the canyon and other places where the concessionaires, if they had the opportunity, would make great improvements for the comforts of the people that travel there, but that these mining claims which were valueless, and they gave figures tending to show they were valueless, absolutely prevented the development of that great natural wonder for the comfort of visitors. I will be glad if anyone can give me any information about that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the situation to which the gentleman refers is in connection with the Bright Angel Trail from one of the hotels to the foot of the canyon. Some years ago some one filed mining claims almost from the beginning of the trail down. I do not know that there has been very much operation there, although it has been a pretty good producer in that the person who has the claim extracts one good American dollar from everybody who goes down the trail into the canyon. I recollect that some years ago the Secretary of the Interior stated that a proceeding had been brought to test the legality of the claim, to ascertain whether it was possible to dislodge this operator upon the American public, but what the result of that proceeding was I do not know.

Mr. BENNET. Is there any way by which that blackmail, for apparently it is nothing more nor less than blackmail, the holding up of the public, can be done away with?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The man has a mining claim and he says there are valuable minerals in the ground, and naturally his opportunities to work his claim would be interfered with by a constant stream of persons passing over his property, which is about the only available part over which one can travel. The Bright Angel Trail is very steep and a difficult trail, and this claim covers part of it, and there is no way to get around it. I recollect that the department did start some proceedings. I do not know whether they succeeded in them. Of course, it is possible that that tax upon visitors to the canyon will be stopped. There is a legitimate claim there and it may be necessary to buy him out, but probably the revenue derived from visitors going down the trail is greater than any revenue that would be derived from minerals in the claim.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I would like to state that I think the concessionaires hold up the public a whole lot more than any mining interest there. I think they are the people who ought to be regulated rather than anyone who has a mining claim. I think a mining claim down in the valley is a pure fake. I do not think there is any mining there, but, on the other hand, I know that my former colleague, Congressman Martin, from Colorado, was arrested there last summer simply because he drove his automobile 3 or 4 feet out of the main line. He was taken down to Phoenix and kept three days before he could get out. I feel that that system is an outrage and that the Government ought to do something to prevent the imposition on the innocent visitor there.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Of course a man can not be permitted to recklessly run an automobile around the rim of that canyon without serious injury to himself. It might have been necessary——

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. But he simply ran it a few feet outside of where some concessionaire said he had no right to be.

Mr. KEATING. Congressman Martin lives in my home town. He was not driving his automobile recklessly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I did not say that he was.

Mr. KEATING. The suggestion was that he might have been. He is a very conservative chauffeur. The fact is there is some arrangement by which automobiles are not permitted on this road, and it is an arrangement that should be abolished.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is the road where carriages take visitors up the canyon?

Mr. KEATING. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is not a safe thing to have automobiles on that road with visitors in these carriages, with the possibility of horses becoming frightened and visitors being unceremoniously precipitated six or seven thousand feet down the valley.

Mr. KEATING. Is it not a fact that these men who own the carriages for traveling around the canyon have trouble——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, yes; but these automobiles are not always as careful as they ought to be, either in the city or in the vicinity of the Grand Canyon, and it is not unreasonable——

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Is it not true the automobilists are the tourists, who have the right to go over this country, and ought any horse concessionaire be allowed to regulate him in that way?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think reasonable regulations should be made for the protection of the public. Now, I have been along that road up toward some other points in the Grand Canyon, and there are some places where a spirited team—and they have nothing but spirited teams in the West—if an automobile came by, might be frightened so that the lives of the persons in the carriage would be endangered; but I think provision has not yet been made that makes it safe to have automobiles operate in that part of the country.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I feel——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Of course, I have no doubt that that is a very extraordinary and unjustifiable case.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But that is not under consideration now, and I hope the gentleman will dismiss it. It is not in this bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Well, it came up——

Mr. FITZGERALD. It came up like a shower; now let it disappear.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Mr. Chairman, I do not know how many Members of the House have noticed a recent book or pamphlet gotten out by the Interior Department advertising the national parks. The Members ought to get hold of these advertisements and examine them and have some of them sent into their districts. There is likely to be a large number of American people visit the national parks this summer. These pamphlets are very interesting. I think the department made some arrangement by which the railroad companies interested in carrying people to the parks have paid the expenses of the issuance of this pamphlet.

Mr. FITZGERALD. About $37,000.

Mr. MANN. I understood it was over $40,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, something in that vicinity.

Mr. MANN. They are not issued at Government expense. We have also pending in the House a bill providing for some kind of national park service in the Interior Department at not very great expense, which I think possibly may come before the House before a great while. It is undoubtedly true that owing to the situation on the other side of the Atlantic the opportunity for the American people to visit the great natural scenery of the United States in our parks is likely to be taken advantage of more now than ever before. There can be no wiser thing than to let the American people know that if they want to see nature they may see it in the United States and keep the money at home rather than think that they have to go to Switzerland to see the Alps.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Does not the gentleman think it would be a wise expenditure of money for the House to provide for the publication of more of these documents and not rely entirely upon the railroads having them printed?

Mr. MANN. Well, possibly so. I do not know. The railroads, however, in this case have furnished the money, and the railroads are interested, of course, to the extent of carrying the people. I understand these pamphlets are printed in sufficient number to supply very generously the people who may be interested in such things.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. They are not printed so Members of the House can have any appreciable number of them.

Mr. MANN. My recollection is that the department asked me, and I suppose they have asked Members, to send in names.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. For 100.

Mr. MANN. For one hundred, but I have not yet availed myself of that permission; but that number goes quite a good ways.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Oh, yes; but if we had a thousand apiece it would be money well expended.

Mr. MANN. Of course the gentleman does not need them.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I think every Member of the House should send them to his constituents.

Mr. MANN. No gentleman from Colorado needs to send them into his own district to advertise the great beauty of the Rocky Mountains. That is seen on every side in Colorado. [Applause.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I think they ought to be sent all over the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

For procuring feed for buffalo and salaries of buffalo keepers, $3,000.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HAUGEN: Page 122, line 23, after the figures "$3,000," insert the following:

"For investigating and ascertaining the terms upon which land can be secured near Prairie du Chien, Wis., and McGregor, Iowa, to establish a national park, to be known as the Mississippi Valley National Park, how much land will be donated by the owners to the Government, and the expense of acquiring by purchase any part of the land not so donated, $1,000: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to accept patented lands that may be donated for said park purposes."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order that that is not authorized by law.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I recognize it is subject to a point of order, but I hope the gentleman will not make it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman want five minutes?

Mr. HAUGEN. No; I do not want to take up the time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then, Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes the point of order to the amendment, and the point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Rocky Mountain National Park, Colo.: For protection and improvement, $10,000.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 125, line 4, strike out "$10,000" and insert "$26,937.50."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that. The amount that can be expended upon that park annually is $10,000. This is not authorized by law.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Will the chairman of the committee withhold his objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will reserve it.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Chairman, it is true that the Appropriations Committee was barred from making a larger appropriation than this for the park by reason of the clause that was attached to the bill at the time of the organization of the park, which was that without authorization of Congress there should not be appropriated more than $10,000 a year annually for its maintenance. Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, we have a wonderful national asset there. It will not produce unless we improve it. It is short-sighted in Congress not to develop that park, which belongs to the United States. Seventy-five thousand dollars would make it accessible to the people, and in a short time would repay to the United States every dollar of expense. Colorado has two national parks—the Mesa Verde and the Rocky Mountain National Parks. They are the only two parks within the confines of the United States that are restricted in this way. The proceeds derived from these parks are placed in the General Treasury, while the application of this to other parks is not required. The money collected from other parks is spent for improving them. Now, instead of——

Mr. SHERLEY. How much are the receipts that you have gotten from these parks?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. The gentleman from Kentucky understands that this park was organized only last year. I will say to him that, according to the records that were kept, even after the park was opened, even though it was late in the season, 31,000 people visited it. The Mesa Verde Park, which is small and in the southern part of the State, is only about one-sixth as large as this and it carries an appropriation for $10,000, and last year about 615 people saw what is to be seen in that park. With the notice that has been given by the press throughout the United States and with the impetus to see the United States, as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], during the next year, I have no hesitancy in saying that there will be at least 75,000 people come to view the beauties of that park. And we need to have it improved, and I have simply added here in this amendment the estimate made by the superintendent of parks, Mr. Mather, who is also the Assistant Secretary of the Interior, and I believe this Congress will be short-sighted, indeed, if it does not allow at least that amount of appropriation.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman inform the House how they collect any revenues for the use of this park? Do you charge the sightseers who visit the parks?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. There are concessions for automobiles, and other concessions. I am sorry I can not explain all the sources of revenue. No admission fees are charged. There are fees charged for automobiles, the same as in the Yellowstone National Park.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. I yield.

Mr. RAKER. What is the charge for automobile service in the park?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Now, I can not answer that question definitely. I should have informed myself. It is $5, I understand, in the Yosemite Park, also in the Yellowstone Park.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. I hope the chairman will withdraw his point of order and that this amendment will prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York insist on his point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I insist on the point of order.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I would like to inquire of the chairman of the committee if the committee would not be disposed to allow these Colorado parks to be granted the same concession that the other national parks all over the United States are granted, and allow them to take, out of the little receipts there may be, the money to expend toward the development of those parks. It is certainly a discrimination toward the Rocky Mountain National Park and the Mesa Verde Park in Colorado to take the receipts, and they ought to be given the permission that all the other parks are given except one, to expend them on roads and trails.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We will look into it very carefully next session.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Why make that discrimination against that park?

Mr. FITZGERALD. This park was established only a year ago. It is really a municipal park for the benefit of the city of Denver. The gentleman ought not to crowd us too fast. Does he think it is fair to press us too fast on these parks?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. As a matter of fact, we agreed to take the bill, of course, at the limitation of $10,000, but we do feel that there is no good reason why, even with that limitation, those two parks in Colorado should not have the receipts.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If it should develop that revenues are obtained out of that park amounting to anything, it may be that we will be able to perfect an arrangement. In the Mesa Verde Park they do not amount to anything.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Why should you not give it to them?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The tendency is to take away the receipts instead of giving them to the parks, because it would be a permanent appropriation, which is the least desirable form of spending public money, so that instead of increasing the amount for the parks the tendency is to take it away. It is not taken away from the other parks because of the hope that in the effort to obtain reasonable charges for the concessions made, that being a little incentive for recommendations of appropriations, the department may be induced to make these concessionaires pay reasonable prices for the concession. In the Mesa Verde Park there were only 387 visitors during the year.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No; there were 650.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There were 654 visitors, I think. I did make a mistake. In the Rocky Mountain National Park the only concessions would be some small charge to automobilists, and if anybody erects a hotel up there, as a matter of fact, there will not be any revenues from the hotel privileges, because some enterprising citizens of Denver are already arranging to erect a very satisfactory hotel and a system of camps just outside the boundaries of the park, so that the people will have the benefits of the park without any price. I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I insist on the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, in support of the amendment I desire to say House bill 12122, introduced by me, a bill to establish a national park to be known as the Mississippi Valley National Park, near Prairie du Chien, Wis., and McGregor, Iowa, was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and by it referred to the Department of the Interior with request for report thereon.

The Secretary in his letter to Hon. SCOTT FERRIS, chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands, under date of April 13, 1916, suggests that consideration of the bill be deferred until an appropriation of $1,000 is made to inaugurate and complete an investigation of the lands proposed by the bill to be set side for park purposes. In view of the location, its beauty, the general interest taken in establishment of the proposed park, its location and beauty, generally considered second to none and generally referred to as "the Switzerland of Iowa," I was in hopes that no point of order would be made. Now that the point of order has been made, and if the gentleman is going to insist upon his point of order, I shall not at this late hour take up the time of the House to discuss the point of order or the amendment, as it is clearly subject to a point of order, but simply ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by having printed in the RECORD the Secretary of the Interior's letter referred to and clippings from the Decorah Republican and Des Moines Register and Leader, received in to-day's mail:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, April 13, 1916.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS,
Chairman Committee on the Public Lands,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. FERRIS: Your letter of April 7, 1916, has been received, inclosing with request for report thereon H. R. bill No. 12122, to establish a national park to be known as the Mississippi Valley National Park, near Prairie du Chien, Wis., and McGregor, Iowa.

In response thereto I have to state that this bill is substantially the same as Senate bill 4585, to establish a national park to be known as the Mississippi Valley National Park, near Prairie de Chien, Wis., and McGregor, Iowa, on which a report was made to the Senate Committee on Public Lands by department letter of March 29, 1916, copy of which is herewith inclosed.

The suggestion therein made that consideration of the bill be deferred until an appropriation of $1,000 is made to inaugurate and complete an investigation of the lands proposed by the bill to be set aside for park purposes, is equally applicable to the measure under consideration.

Cordially, yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE, Secretary.

PARKS FOR THE PEOPLE.

Says the Decorah Republican: "Congress has passed a bill creating a national park out of the crater country in Hawaii, 75,000 acres in all. The same amount of money would have made parks along the upper Mississippi and of vastly more benefit to the country."

The above is true. How many people of the Middle West will ever be able to go to Hawaii and sit among the craters to eat their picnic dinners and enjoy an outing? Of course, it is all right to keep these craters for the benefit of posterity, a sort of curiosity for this and coming generations. But what the Middle West wants and insists on is one or more national parks within striking distance of a one or two days' trip at least; a recreation ground for the benefit of the population of the upper Mississippi Valley. Preserve the craters out in the wind-swept wastes of the Pacific, of course, but at the same time give the people, who are paying for these things, at least one or even more parks in the Mississippi Valley with its population of millions, most of whom can never go to Hawaii.

BEAUTY NEAR AT HAND.

The following editorial appeared in the Des Moines Register and Leader, regarding the Switzerland of Iowa:

"With vacation time coming on apace, it is worth recalling that Iowa has offered what all agree is a fitting site for a national park, and the suggestion may not be out of place that a section worthy of purchase by the Government is worth visiting by the people of this State.

"Comparatively few Iowans are familiar with the wonderful scenery of northeastern Iowa. We do not realize that topography of Allamakee and Clayton Counties is almost the duplicate of the White Mountain region of Vermont, differing more in the nature of the rock formations than in general appearance, while the Iowa park region is further beautified and dignified by the Mississippi River flowing past the foot of the great bluffs.

"National interest in northeastern Iowa is bound up more with historical associations than the native beauty of this region. The area suggested for a national park is furthermore but a small tract of land, but a few square miles out of a region stretching 100 miles in length.

"Summer is the ideal time to get acquainted with northeastern Iowa, and the Register would suggest that many automobiles be headed in that direction, or that the Mississippi River trip will open a world of pleasant surprises to those who do not know what wonders we have near at hand."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Crater Lake National Park, Oreg.: For protection and improvement, and repairing and extension of roads, $8,000.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I suggest to the gentleman that he wait for the Wind Cave paragraph. [Laughter.]

Mr. THOMPSON. All right.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Wind Cave National Park, S. Dak.: For improvement and protection, $2,500.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 125, after line 18, insert a new paragraph, as follows: "Platt National Park, Okla.: For improvement and protection, $8,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will not be adopted. I appreciate the difficulties under which I am laboring. This park is not a national park, except in name. It has never been established, and it is like a waif. Congress tried to give it to the State of Oklahoma, but the State rose up in indignation and declined to receive it. [Laughter.] Congress then tried to give it to the town of Sulphur Springs, where it is located, but the people of that community threatened to vacate the community if the park were donated to it. [Laughter.] It is the chief industry of Sulphur Springs, Okla. If anyone were to believe the statements made by the residents of that prosperous and enterprising community, the population would increase to such an extent that the broad plains and expanses about the park would be so crowded that no one would be able to live there. Because of the wonderful health-giving properties of these springs, 30,000 visitors go to Sulphur Springs annually, but not a cent of revenue comes to the United States Government.

If this appropriation were allowed it would be necessary to maintain the springs. There may be peculiar reasons, which are not necessary to mention here, why the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMPSON] thinks it desirable to continue this park. The Committee on Appropriations sympathizes with the gentleman from Oklahoma, but the belief was that, having expended $10,000 within the current year to replace the damage and ravages of nature and storms, if an appropriation were not made the patriotic and enterprising spirit of the people of Sulphur Springs would see to it that this glorious and beautiful and essential place would not be neglected. I hope the gentleman from Oklahoma will withdraw his amendment. [Laughter.] I hope at least he will do that until there is a larger attendance of Members present, so that there may be a fair test had on this question. We should encourage the people there to do something to support the Government. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

MISCELLANEOUS OBJECTS, DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

Conduct of customs cases: Assistant Attorney General, $8,000; assistant attorney, $3,000; special attorneys and counselors at law in the conduct of customs cases, to be employed and their compensation fixed by the Attorney General, as authorized by section 30 of the act of August 5, 1909, $36,000; necessary clerical assistance and other employees at the seat of government and elsewhere, to be employed and their compensation fixed by the Attorney General; supplies, printing, traveling, and other miscellaneous and incidental expenses, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney General, $26,000; in all, $73,000.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking my colleague [Mr. FITZGERALD] a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. BENNET. I notice that these customs appropriations are under section 30 of the act of Congress of August 5, 1909. Was not that the tariff act of that year?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; the Payne law.

Mr. BENNET. Was not that superseded by the Underwood Act, or was this section continued?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It was not superseded.

Mr. BENNET. It has not been interfered with in any way by the Underwood Act?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No. They are busy over there.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] withdraws his pro forma amendment. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For bailiffs and criers, not exceeding three bailiffs and one crier in each court, except in the southern district of New York and the northern district of Illinois: Provided, That all persons employed under section 715 of the Revised Statutes shall be deemed to be in actual attendance when they attend upon the order of the court: Provided further, That no such persons shall be employed during vacation; expenses of circuit and district judges of the United States and the judges of the district courts of the United States in Alaska and Hawaii, as provided by section 259 of the act approved March 3, 1911, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary"; meals and lodging for jurors in United States cases, and of bailiffs in attendance upon the same, when ordered by the court, and meals and lodging for jurors in Alaska, as provided by section 193, Title II, of the act of June 6, 1900; and compensation for jury commissioners, $5 per day, not exceeding three days for any one term of court, $250,000.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking my colleague if the judges of the circuit court of appeals are still correctly described as circuit judges? Of course, the circuit court as such has been abolished, but the circuit court of appeals still exists. I wondered whether the judges of that court are still correctly described as circuit judges rather than judges of the circuit court of appeals?

Mr. MANN. I am quite sure that they are.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; the circuit court was abolished, but the circuit judges are now appointed to the circuit court of appeals.

Mr. MANN. The statute describes them as circuit judges.

Mr. FITZGERALD. While they abolished the circuit court, they did not abolish the circuit judges. They were continued and assigned to the circuit court of appeals.

Mr. BENNET. All right. It occurred to me that possibly, as frequently happens, the old language was continued.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, the Department of Justice are very particular about these matters, and they are checked up by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BENNET. There are the four remaining judges who were appointed to the Commerce Court. What has become of them?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There were five additional circuit judges created, who were assigned for a certain period to the Commerce Court——

Mr. BENNET. In the beginning.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And it was provided that at the end of five years they were to be assigned to the circuit court and other circuit judges designated—I think by the Supreme Court—to serve in the Commerce Court.

Mr. MANN. They were described as circuit judges.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SAUNDERS). Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support of United States prisoners, including necessary clothing and medical aid, discharge gratuities provided by law, and transportation to place of conviction or place of bona fide residence in the United States or such other place within the United States as may be authorized by the Attorney General; support of prisoners becoming insane during imprisonment, and who continue insane after expiration of sentence who have no friends to whom they can be sent; shipping remains of deceased prisoners to their friends or relatives in the United States and interment of deceased prisoners whose remains are unclaimed; care and treatment of guards employed by the United States who may be injured by prisoners while said guards are endeavoring to prevent escapes or suppress mutiny; expenses incurred in identifying and pursuing escaped prisoners and for rewards for their recapture; and not exceeding $2,500 for repairs, betterments, and improvements of United States jails, including sidewalks, $625,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] desires to offer an amendment on one of these Leavenworth items, I do not remember which one. I hope that if we run through them the gentleman from New York will not object to returning to the item to which the gentleman from Kansas desires to offer an amendment.

Mr. HOWARD. If the gentleman will yield, I know the amendment which the gentleman from Kansas wants to offer. I have talked to him about it. It is an item further over, and I expect to offer a similar amendment to the item for the Atlanta Penitentiary.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman from Kansas want to get leave to offer an amendment to this paragraph some time to-morrow?

Mr. MANN. I do not know which paragraph it is. It is one of the Leavenworth paragraphs.

Mr. HOWARD. It is on line 19, page 143.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Whatever it is——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will not object?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I will not object.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HAY). The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries: Warden, $4,000; deputy warden, $2,000; chaplains—1 $1,500, 1 $1,200; chief clerk, $1,800; physician, $1,600; pharmacist and physician's assistant, $1,000; bookkeeper and record clerk, $1,200; stenographer, $900; 2 clerks, at $900 each; engineer and electrician, $1,500; 2 assistants at $1,200 each; steward and storekeeper, $1,200; superintendent of farm and transportation, $1,200; 2 teamsters, at $600 each; head cook, $1,000; 3 captains of watch, at $1,000 each; guards, at $70 per month each, $43,000; in all, $75,100.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment, in line 23, page 142, to strike out "$70" and insert "$80."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. FITZGERALD. I reserve a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, for several years I have recognized the fact that there is one class of men in the Government service who are underpaid. The guards at the Atlanta Federal prison and at the Leavenworth prison get only $70 a month. The guards at McNeil Island get the same amount of money, but they get their house rent and certain incidental expenses free, which is the equivalent of about $100 a month. My information as to Atlanta—and the same is true at Leavenworth—is that in the last two years there has been an increased demand for men, and in my country any ordinary man can go out now and make from $3 to $3.50 and $4 a day as a carpenter. They get from 45 cents to 65 cents an hour in the city of Atlanta. An ordinary carpenter can get that amount for his work.

Because of the low pay of these guards they are continually leaving the prison to get better employment on the outside. It is absolutely essential to discipline and good conduct and the efficiency of the working force that these prisoners become acquainted with their guard, and that the guard shall know every little idiosyncrasy of each prisoner. He is over them, giving the same care every day. They understand him and become acquainted with him, and the prisoners become attached to him, and he gets a high efficiency in work and deportment. It is absolutely essential that these guards be made contented with their surroundings and their salary. House rent, provisions, and everything else have gone up in the city of Atlanta, where these men live. They have to pay their street car fare, for the prison is located in the suburbs of the town. There is not one of them that can save a penny out of the mere pittance of $70 a month. They have to stand a civil-service examination. The requirements for an education and a moral character are very strict, and this is a class of men that is underpaid for the services rendered.

I have asked for $10 a month increase for these men. That is all I have asked for at this time. The superintendent of prisons has assured me that in the next appropriation bill—and the same assurance was given to me last year—he would put the guards on a graduated scale and make a maximum salary of $100 a month. He recognized that they are underpaid, but he failed to make any estimate to meet this emergency of high prices and low wages. I have asked for this increase, and I appeal to the gentleman from New York not to make a point of order against this little item, this little increase of salary for these men who work every day, Sundays included, and who at any time they are called upon have to respond to the demands of the warden. I know that there is not a man on the floor of the House who would not vote to give this $10 increase until the Attorney General can make his estimate, and I hope the gentleman will not insist on his point of order.

There is not a finer body of men in the employ of the Government than these guards. They are brave, sober, patient, even-tempered men, of high moral character, engaged in a work of restoring the human derelict to society. They deserve much more than I have asked for them.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I have no discretion, I am the slave of the committee, and the committee has refused to make the recommendation, and I must perform my duty. I insist on the point or order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, National Training School for Boys, $44,776.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 17 to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to return to page 17 to offer an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 17, after line 5, insert the following:
"New Haven, Conn., post office: For continuation, $100,000."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 26 to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to return to page 26 to offer an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 26, line 12, strike out the words "continuation, $500," and insert in lieu thereof "site and continuation, $2,500."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HAY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 15836, the sundry civil appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 393. An act to authorize an exchange of lands with the State of North Dakota for promotion of experiments in dry-land agriculture, and for other purposes;

An act to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a Court of Private Land Claims and to provide for the settlement of private land claims in certain States and Territories," approved March 3, 1891, and the acts amendatory thereto, approved February 21, 1893, June 27, 1898, and February 26, 1909;

S. 4026. An act authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to abrogate a contract lease of land and water power on the Muskingum River, Ohio; and

S. 5863. An act authorizing the health officer of the District of Columbia to issue a permit for the removal of the remains of the late Charles H. Bingham from Congressional Cemetery, District of Columbia, to Lock Haven, Pa.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at half past 10 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at half past 10 o'clock a. m. to-morrow. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

And then, on motion of Mr. FITZGERALD (at 6 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, June 24, 1916, at 10.30 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, June 24, 1916.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou dost draw us to Thyself with an infinite love. Thou dost speak to us with the gospel of infinite patience. Thou dost deal with us as a kind father with his children. Thou dost lead us forward into paths of achievement in life by the example and merit of an infinite sacrifice.

We pray that we may enter upon the service of this day, our service to our fellow men, under the inspiration of the gospel of peace. Do Thou lay Thy hand upon us and upon all of this land, upon all who are in places of influence and power and authority. Make them to know Thy will, and give us all the grace and wisdom to desire Thy will to be the policy of our Nation.

We pray that Thou wouldst look with Thy tenderest mercy upon those who represent us not only in this country but beyond the border, who are in places of danger, and who may be called upon for sacrifice. Do Thou, we pray Thee, in Thy infinite mercy and wisdom lead us out of the turmoil and strife of this day into the paths of peace. For Christ's sake. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Thursday, June 22, 1916, was read and approved.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The presentation of petitions and memorials is in order. [A pause.] Reports of committees. [A pause.] The introduction of bills.

THE NATIONAL DEFENSE.

Mr. REED. I send to the desk a bill and ask to have it read, after which I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (S. 6452) to amend an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, was read the first time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 101 of an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, be, and is hereby, amended by inserting at the end of said section the following:

"Provided, That the pay of the National Guard and the Naval Militia, when called into the service of the United States, and the pay of any volunteer army or navy, while in the service of the United States, shall be as follows: First sergeant, $45 per month; sergeant, $40 per month; corporal, $35 per month; private, $30 per month, the pay of all officers in rank above first sergeant to be the same as is now received by officers of corresponding rank in the Regular Army or Navy.

"The provisions of this amendment shall be in full force and effect from and after its passage and approval."

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I ask the indulgence of the Senate for a moment. This bill is intended to substantially double the pay of the privates of the National Guard and to moderately increase the pay of noncommissioned officers when the guard is called into active service. The Army pay is practically where it was during the late Civil War. There has been a slight increase, but no such increase as has kept pace with the general advance in wages paid in civil occupations or with the magnified cost of living.

Of course we all understand that the soldiers of the Civil War received a very small stipend. Our country was then poor, compared with its present condition. It was torn by civil strife and was in the very crisis of its fate. Even at that time the pay was a miserable pittance. But in the 50 years which have since elapsed the value of a dollar has decreased more than 50 per cent. Thirty dollars a month to-day has not the purchasing power of $15 a month 50 years ago.

The young men who are now being called into service, which will take them to our border and possibly far beyond, are from avocations in life which, on the average, undoubtedly pay them much more than the amount named in this bill. The sum stipulated, of course, will in no way compensate them for the financial loss they will suffer in loss of salaries and positions, to say nothing of the other financial losses naturally and necesarily incident to a severance of home and business relations.

But, Mr. President, the things that induced me most to offer this bill are the movements already organized or being organized by people of big hearts and kindly dispositions, these movements having for their object the creation of charitable organizations to look after the dependent families of those who may be at the front.

An additional impelling reason is found in the fact that a bill was yesterday passed by the House of Representatives by a very large vote appropriating $1,000,000 to care for the dependent families of the soldiers of the National Guard. I commend the spirit back of that bill. I likewise commend the sentiment which inspired those who are organizing the charitable associations I have referred to. In each instance is reflected the generosity and kindness of heart of all who have been aiding in the movements referred to.

But I am opposed to placing our troops, who in this emergency come from the civil walks of life, in a position where their families must become the objects of either private or public bounty. I believe this Government is great enough and rich enough to afford to pay the boys who have enlisted a sufficient amount of money so that they can at least to some substantial degree contribute to the support of those who are dependent upon them.

I do not want to see these gallant young men sent to the front under conditions which will compel them to trust the care of their loved ones to the charity of Congress or to the voluntary benefactions of kindly disposed citizens. I think the right thing to do is to pay them enough so that they can care for those they leave behind. If I could have my way the amount stipulated in the bill I have introduced would be substantially increased.

We all hope the service of the members of the guard will be short; that they will speedily return to their homes; that there may be no more bloodshed; but, Mr. President and Senators, no man to-day with open eyes and open mind can doubt the fact that a most serious condition of affairs exists. No man can safely prophesy when these gallant young men may come back to their firesides. It may be months; circumstances which are within the possibilities may stretch the months into years. I do not want them to fight as paupers. I do not want them to fight with the sickening fear in their hearts that wife or child or father or mother at home is compelled to subsist upon public charity or private aid. I want them to feel, if they must fight, that a great Government is at least willing to give them enough money from month to month so that the objects of their love and affection may not be dependent upon alms.

Mr. President, I said a moment ago that I would ask the reference of this bill, but I now ask unanimous consent that the bill be placed upon its immediate passage.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I admire the munificence of the Senator from Missouri. We are certainly embarking upon our career of militarism with a munificence and a magnificence that is worthy of this opulent Republic.

Mr. President, I am not sure that this proposal is consistent with that white-heat enthusiasm, with that splendid Americanism which has just been discussed and which is now being exploited the country over with so much acclaim and with so much eclat. I am not sure that this proposal comports with that matchless heroic virtue which we are now parading from the eastern unto the western sea.

It seems to me that this is rather an impeachment of the patriotism of these gallant heroes. It is a reflection upon their Americanism. Shall we, upon the very threshold of militarism, undertake to commercialize, undertake to capitalize the heroic virtues of our gallant defenders? Shall we reduce the most patriotic sentiments of the human heart to a common denominator of dollars and cents? Can you measure patriotism by the dollar mark? It seems to me that these young heroes would resent this imputation, this reflection upon their self-devotion and their love of country.

Those who plead for militarism—those who defend war defend it upon the ground that it develops heroic virtues and the sentiment of self-sacrifice. Now, sir, shall we squander those fruits of war by undertaking to capitalize the heroism, the devotion, and the patriotism of our defenders?

As suggested by the Senator from Missouri, the House on yesterday passed a joint resolution to grant a pension of $50 a month to the families of those who are sent to the front. Since the world began such an astounding proposition was never presented, either to an intelligent or to a patriotic people—$50 a month to the families of those who are sent to the front while they yet survive! If one of these soldiers should unhappily be slain in battle, shall we then withdraw the $50 a month from his dependent family? Is not this a precedent for a universal pension of $50 a month?

Such favoritism was never shown to the veterans of the Civil War, who were engaged in actual war, in a stupendous war. This favoritism has never been shown to any of the proud defenders of this great Republic.

Mr. President, one of the evils which I have apprehended from militarism, from raising up in this country a military caste, is the danger that Congress would not have the courage to resist the demands and the exactions of such a caste.

I know how Congress quails before 40,000 organized rural mail carriers in the United States. That the rural mail carriers now receive $100 a month instead of $200 is due rather to their forbearance and is not due to the courage of the Congress. They are organized; and I saw this Senate upon the selfsame day vote down a proposition to provide for an agricultural census in the United States to lay the foundation of industrial organization, agricultural mobilization, industrial and agricultural preparedness, upon the ground that it would cost $2,300,000. Before the sun set upon that economical day Congress voted $2,700,000 to rural mail carriers, to pay them, as I remember, $2,700,000 more than was "nominated in the bond."

The 40,000 rural mail carriers were organized, while the 6,000,000 farmers were unorganized. I criticize the Senate rather than the carriers. If 40,000 rural mail carriers can exert such a persuasive influence over Congress, what will the Congress do in the face of 400,000 National Guardsmen when they are efficiently organized? I know that they are not without political influence. This I have witnessed in my own time, in my own experience. Now it is proposed to double their pay in the service and to grant their families $50 a month even before they have drawn their swords.

Their response to their country's call must, of course, challenge the admiration of their countrymen, inspired as they are by the love of country, by the lofty and heroic sentiments of patriotism.

Shall we treat these soldiers as milksops and mollycoddles? Shall we send with these soldiers their valets, chiropodists, and manicurists to attend them? Shall we then by implication convey the idea that they are summer soldiers, that they are sunshine patriots, that they are knights of the drawing-room? I would prefer to treat them as real soldiers. Would they not prefer to be treated as real soldiers?

Mr. President, the best thing for this country to-day is to look "grim-visaged war" in the face. It is not a pastime, neither is war a plaything. We must deal with war as war. You can not smooth his wrinkled front with honeyed words nor with golden gifts. This is a practical question and must be dealt with in a practical way, with deliberation and with due regard not for the soldiers only, but with regard to the Public Treasury and the public generally.

Mr. President, I shall feel obliged to object to the second reading of the bill.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, except for the very remarkable performance of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] I would not take the time of the Senate to utter a further word.

First, let me say that no member of the National Guard, and no one speaking for them or in their behalf, and no other person of whatsoever condition or estate ever suggested to me the introduction of this bill. The implication, therefore, contained in the Senator's remarks that the bill was introduced at the suggestion of the National Guard, and that "they are already here clamoring for money" and "trying to capitalize their patriotism" is one which springs from his own overheated and superexcited brain.

In the phraseology of the Senator, I am not "afflicted with military rabies." To employ my own language, neither am I oppressed with peace imbecility. Between those two extremes stands the great body of American citizens who possess common sense, who abominate war, and who love peace, but who nevertheless propose to maintain this Nation's honor at whatsoever cost.

The Senator states that this is an attempt "to capitalize patriotism"? That is a phrase which naturally comes to the lips of a phrasemonger; but it has no relation whatever to the conduct of these young men, who only a few days ago said good-by to father and mother or to wife and child, some of them for the last time. To impute to these gallant Americans the motive of having entered the Government service "for pay," or to charge that they are now here "clamoring for pay" is to besmatter with filth those who are manifesting the noblest attribute of American citizenship. To sit safely and serenely behind a mahogany desk, secure in a salary of $7,500 a year, and to sneer at the young men in khaki uniforms who are already in camp preparing to defend our country, is an office that is unworthy the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. REED. Yes; I yield.

Mr. GORE. I will wait until the Senator concludes.

Mr. REED. To refer to these volunteer soldiers as "young men who need to have chiropodists and manicurists sent along with them" is an insult to patriotism and manhood. I saw the Washington guards as they mobilized, I saw them with swinging step sweep along the streets of the Capital through a downpour of rain, I know that from Maine to California they have marched to camps uncomplainingly, carrying heavy packs upon backs unaccustomed to burdens. They were the few from amongst the millions of the country who were leaving their jobs and their homes to go into camp to obey orders, and if the orders come, to go into the field and onto the red line of battle. Yet the Senator refers to them as "summer soldiers" and "sunshine patriots" who "ought to have chiropodists and manicurists with them." The Senator from Oklahoma should not have been guilty of such a statement. In his cooler moments, when the oratorical fervor has passed and judgment has resumed its throne the memory of his words will bring a blush to his cheek.

Mr. President, what is there in the proposal of my bill of an alarming nature? Of course objection having been made, the bill will have to go over until a later day, but what is there of an alarming nature about it? It is simply proposed to raise the pay of these volunteers while they are on the field of duty to the paltry pittance of $30 a month; to pay them substantially twice the amount paid to the soldiers of the Civil War. Is there anything wrong in that in view of the fact that wages have more than doubled since the Civil War, and wealth has increased many times over? It gives them not enough money to buy the things that could have been bought with the $13 a month that was paid the soldiers during the late war, and yet no man ever dared charge that men who fought in the great Civil War were fighting for money; the whole world knew they were fighting for their country.

These men to-day are not going forth to fight for money. They would not fight for money if you paid them ten times the sum named in the bill. They are fighting for their country, and the question that we must ask ourselves is this: "While they are fighting, while they are upon the alkali plains, while they suffer, for they will suffer, shall we sit in luxury here and decline to give them enough so that they can send a few dollars home to their people?" True, I may be accused of anticipating and of describing conditions which do not yet exist. True, war has not yet been declared. I hope we shall not find it necessary to take that tragic step. But the situation I have described will quickly follow a declaration of war if such a declaration is made.

An appeal is made by the Senator to the farmer. He states that the farmer is not being cared for. Mr. President, the farmer is cultivating his fruitful fields; the farmer is harvesting from year to year his bountiful crops; the farmer in many instances is proprietor of the soil. In the last analysis he is the most independent citizen of this Republic. He never has needed to come and ask for alms or support from the Government. We have seen fit to expend hundreds of millions of dollars for the purpose of promoting and encouraging agriculture. That is right, that is proper; but, Mr. President, because every dollar that has been asked for the promotion of agriculture has not been poured out, because some few people wanted more money than was given, affords no reason why this country should say to these boys who are being wrenched from their homes, from their profitable occupations, "You shall make all the sacrifices that are to be made." That is no reason why we should say to them, "The country will let your people starve while you are fighting for its preservation and honor." It is no reason for saying to them, "The country will turn you over to the tender mercies of the kindly disposed who organize charitable institutions," or "It will itself investigate and, if your families are starving or in want, it will then pay them a dole as mendicants."

I am sorry my friend from Oklahoma made the speech he did. We all want peace and we do not want militarism; but let me tell the Senator from Oklahoma that, as certain as the sun shines in the heavens, this country is going to place itself in a position so that it can defend itself. The defense force will either be composed of professional soldiers, men who make fighting a business, men whose homes are in camps and whose ambitions are along the line of military preferment and advancement, or we will have another kind of an army—an army gathered from the body of the people, one that, after serving a short time, will melt back into the body of the people; we will have such an organization as the National Guard, or else a volunteer army, or enforced military service, or a vast professional standing army.

Mr. President, I know the young men who went into camp the other day. I know their type and kind. They are young farmers, young mechanics, young laboring men, young doctors, young lawyers, and students. They have left their homes; they have gone out to do their duty. Perhaps many others must be called for. The question we are to settle as soon as this bill is reported back is whether these men shall be paid a pauper's stipend or whether they shall receive a compensation that will enable them in some degree to take care of their folks at home.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I felt certain if I could only touch the nobler sentiments in the heart of the Senator from Missouri that he would exemplify those splendid virtues which I know so well always preside over the matured judgments of his mind and the finer feelings of his nature. I rejoice to find that my old-time opinion of him has been justified by his remarks. I am delighted to find that we are in perfect accord touching these splendid young soldiers.

The Senator suggests that any intimation that the members of the National Guard are commercializing their patriotism is but to besmatter them with filth. I entirely agree with the Senator; indeed, sir, that is exactly the point I was making. I had a finer opinion of the National Guard than that which is implied in the pending bill or in the resolution which passed the House of Representatives on yesterday. I suggested, Mr. President, that the bill and the resolution were an impeachment of their patriotism. Sir, I was defending them and their patriotism against such commercial imputations. Whether we call it an impeachment of their patriotism or besmattering them with filth is merely a matter of taste as between "phrasemongers."

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. REED. Will the Senator permit me to interject?

Mr. GORE. Certainly.

Mr. REED. God save me from all such defenses.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, the Senator has a right to choose his defenders. My purpose was to make exactly the point which the Senator so eloquently made. In referring to these bills I did not impute them to the National Guard.

Sir, I thought their patriotism towered above such commercial and sordid considerations. I did not intimate that the National Guard was responsible for this act. I should lament for my country if its defense must be committed to the hands of men who upon the day of their calling out come to the Congress in an effort to appraise their patriotism and to assess their Americanism.

I did not besmatter the National Guard with filth. I was undertaking to interpose a shield to protect them against their friends, who would besmatter them with filth, if the Senator be pleased to employ that classic phrase.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. GORE. I do.

Mr. REED. If the Senator meant to pass an encomium on the National Guard and to relieve them from all responsibility for the bill I presented, what did he mean when he charged that we were creating a political machine of a half million men, who would be here clamoring constantly for extra pay and for pensions? What did he mean if he did not mean that the National Guard were engaged in that very effort?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I will say that while the National Guard is under this splendid burst of patriotism I acquit them of any such consideration as the Senator in this bill imputes to them; but I think, sir, in a Republic we ought to protect ourselves against the possibility of evil.

I am not certain that in the days to come the National Guard will not yield to other impulses of human nature.

What is the danger, the Senator asks. We pay, 51 years after the Civil War has closed, $158,000,000 in pensions annually. We increased the pensions of a certain class four years ago some eight or ten million dollars. A measure passed the House only the other day, and is now pending in the Senate or in one of its committees, to add still another class and to increase the regular pension roll some eight or ten million dollars. There is a bill pending now to place on the potential pension list 400,000 possible widows of the Spanish-American soldiers and veterans.

What is the danger? Our definition of "danger" may differ. I see a danger to the taxpayers. I see a danger to the Public Treasury when I see a resolution pass another body proposing now, before a single National Guardsman has reached the front, to give his family such a bounty as was never heard of and that was never thought of in the annals of human warfare or in the annals of congressional extravagance. Perhaps it would be unparliamentary—perhaps, indeed, it would be unjust—to say that it was born of maudlin sentimentalism.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. GORE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not intend to debate the bill which has passed the House, but when the Senator says that it is unprecedented in all history that measures should be taken for the support of the families of soldiers who are at the front I call his attention to the fact that at the present time the British Government is proceeding exactly along that line. My understanding is, although I do not speak with certainty, that the French Government is doing the same thing; and I have not the slightest doubt but that the German Government in like manner is looking after the families of its soldiers at the front.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I think, when the Senator says that nothing in all history furnishes a precedent for appropriations for the purpose of taking care of the families of soldiers who are giving their time and their lives in the country's service, that he is not as consistent with the historical facts as he usually is.

Mr. GORE. Why, Mr. President, of course I yield to the historical records in the case, and if the French Government or if the British Government is to-day paying $50 per month to the family of any soldier at the front in actual war, then I shall correct my statement; but I hope the Senator will provide the Senate with the official proof that any Government on the face of the earth at any time ever granted a pension of $50 a month to the family of a soldier at the front, and that, too, before the war had begun; and, if he furnishes such proof, I shall apologize to him and to the Senate.

Mr. President, it is the precedent that is objectionable. I infinitely prefer the bill offered by the Senator from Missouri to the resolution which passed the House on yesterday. I feel constrained, in view of the tendency, to hit the movement on the head at every juncture of its progress through Congress; but if there is to be a choice between the two, I should infinitely prefer the proposal of the Senator from Missouri, because it would preserve in greater measure the sense of self-respect on the part of the soldier. When self-respect is gone on the part of the soldier he is no fit defender of the welfare or the destiny of a great nation.

The appropriation in the House resolution will carry out the purposes for which it was designed for the period of one week. It is either the thin edge of the wedge, it is either the nose of the camel, or it is a miserable sham and delusion. They would mock the hopes of the soldier if they intend that this sum is to be the "be-all" of this policy, or else they deceive the American people and the taxpayers if they intend for them to believe that this sum shall be the "end-all" of this policy. It would last for one week; but it would serve as a precedent. Anybody who has had experience with pensions or with any other advance upon the Public Treasury, knows the fatal dangers of precedents. I desire to protect the Treasury; I desire to protect the people of this country against the beginning of such a policy.

So far as pacifists and those who are mad with war are concerned, that is largely a matter of definition. For my own part I do not believe in "peace at any price" unless that means at the price of war, if need be. There is no American so base that would be a "bondsman." I do not feel called upon to parade my Americanism or to proclaim my patriotism from the housetops morning, noon, and night. Now, Mr. President, I renew my objection.

Mr. THOMAS obtained the floor.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if the Senator from Colorado will pardon me just an instant, since the Senator from Oklahoma has been speaking a Senator handed me a copy of the Daily Times, of Florence, S. C., of June 20. I desire to read, without comment, the following short paragraph:

Private Robert Kirk, of the Florence Rifles, was notified by the War Department last night of his appointment to a lieutenancy in the Philippine Constabulary at a salary of $100 per month. Mr. Kirk, however, declined the post by wire, preferring to remain with his company and go with them to-morrow to Camp Styx, preparatory to the mobilization of the National Guard of the State on the Mexican border.

The act needs no encomium.

Mr. GORE. It demonstrates exactly my contention.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to inquire if the Senator will yield a moment until I read a telegram, which is pertinent.

Mr. THOMAS. With pleasure.

Mr. SHERMAN. The telegram is dated at Camp Lincoln, Springfield, Ill., June 23, 1916, and is addressed to myself:

[Telegram.]

CAMP LINCOLN,
Springfield, Ill.

United States Senator LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I suppose you noticed that employers of Chicago are really paying the National Guard and that the Government's contribution is a small percentage. Of course all the employers are not doing this so a number of our soldiers are working for the Government for criminally small compensation. Even if this situation would be tolerated the fact remains that in certain indispensable trades we can not get men for the Army pay at the present time. We are absolutely unable to obtain sufficient horseshoers. Isn't it about time to bring up in Congress the question of adequately paying our soldiers?

Maj. ROBERT R. MCCORMICK.

I wish to add the explanation that this is signed by Maj. Robert R. McCormick, of Chicago, who is a major of the Cavalry regiment that is now in Camp Lincoln. They have rendezvoused at that point in the course of preparation for mustering into the Government service for the purposes designed on the Mexican border or beyond the border. The men constitute in this command a Cavalry regiment that has been organized for a number of years. They maintain themselves largely out of their own means. Even the State has not provided sufficient to maintain the horses and the equipment together with the stabling required during the intervals when they are not in the service.

This Cavalry regiment, Mr. President, is an old one, and most of these officers are men of some means and are able to make this contribution, but the privates in the ranks are not. They are drawn, as the Senator from Missouri says, from all ranks. Men who are in the ranks of unskilled labor, from the railroad service in various departments, in yards, shops, and offices, together with professional men, farmers, and others, constitute the rank of this Cavalry regiment that will be called, and is prepared for service in the event they are mustered into the ranks of the Government.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate but a moment. We have used much valuable time of the present session in discussions foreign to the subjects under consideration, but I think the time thus used this morning, and particularly by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] has been well employed.

My purpose in rising can be briefly stated. Although I have not heard everything said by the Senator from Oklahoma, what I have heard commends itself to my warm approval. I do not think he intended, as I do not, to reflect upon the patriotism of any man or of any organization, but I affirm, Mr. President, that this is no time for appropriations based either upon sentiment or of expediency; and particularly do I deplore the introduction at present of bills which are certain to justify, although they may not have been so intended, the impression that men can be secured to defend their country only by and through the lure of pecuniary reward.

Mr. President, I believe the country should be defended. We all do. But God have mercy upon the Republic if the time ever comes when its institutions must be defended by an army of mercenaries! No such danger at present menaces us. I trust it never will. But it is as true as the night follows the day that progressive increases of compensation beget a spirit of avarice wholly inconsistent with a spirit of patriotism, and confounds the two in the denunciations of those who for the purest purposes would protest against them.

Mr. President, the demands upon the American Treasury are appalling. Large as they are, they must be swollen to greater dimensions if perchance the present difficulty with Mexico shall ripen into active war and the spirit of ultrapreparedness shall overcome the conservative judgment of a majority of the Congress. The money for them must come from somewhere, and where if not from the producing and consuming energies of the people? Our increased expenditures necessarily mean increased taxation; and the unorganized taxpayer must be protected, if at all, by that spirit of economy and conservatism in the Congress of the United States, which presumably represents the Nation, and which is the only stop-gap between the Treasury and those who are making constant and increasing demands upon it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield for a question.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator from Colorado think, if it shall transpire that our troops were led into a trap and deliberately slaughtered, that this country ought to take some action with reference to it?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if I have intimated anything to the contrary I have been extremely unfortunate.

Mr. REED. I do not mean that the Senator did. If the country then is to take some action, and it is certainly taking preparatory action, does the Senator think that the taxpayer who stays at home and makes a hundred dollars a month ought to complain if out of his abundance he should give a few dollars to the man who is sacrificing his time, his salary, his job, in order to protect the taxpayer and the honor of the Nation the taxpayer lives in?

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, Mr. President, I of course do not occupy that position, nor do I assume that the pay of the soldier is based at all upon the principle of compensation. I might reply by asking the Senator if he thinks that inasmuch as $30 a month is nothing but a pittance now and his argument be good, he should not insist that the man at the front should receive $100 a month, and thus be placed upon a par with his man who stays at home and earns that amount? Of course, it is not a question of dollars and cents when we are face to face with the necessity of war, but it is then a question, Mr. President, as to the extent to which without danger expenditures can be limited; and of all times when the spirit of economy should be exercised, the hour when the greatest and gravest demands are to be made upon the public revenues is that time, due consideration being paid, of course, to the requirements of the hour and the necessities of a complete defense.

My criticism is not a personal one, yet I can perceive, Mr. President, that the action of the other House to which the Senator from Oklahoma referred and that the proposal contained in the bill now under consideration may be but the beginnings, and the precedents as well, for similar demands prompted and promoted by organizations which, as the Senator from Oklahoma has very forcibly declared, now exercise powerful influence upon the legislation of Congress, an influence which must increase, as it grows by what it feeds upon.

Mr. President, I have occupied a longer time than I intended. Let me add, however, that there are subjects of importance pending here besides our foreign relations and the consequences which are liable to grow out of them, not the least of which are the needed expenditures and the corresponding revenue. These need our earnest care. Ours is not yet, and I hope may never be, a bleeding country. But we have a bleeding Treasury; and I am one of those who believe that we should defend and fight for our bleeding country, and can do so in part by fighting for and defending our bleeding Treasury. When the hour of reckoning comes, Mr. President, when the vast sums which we must raise for modern exigencies shall have been expended, and the taxpayer takes account of the expenditure of the revenues which he has been required to furnish, he will require an accounting more important, more far-reaching, and more permanent in its consequences to us than the demands of specific organizations, each and all of which, whatever their other purposes may be, seem not only to expect but demand some support at the hands of the National Government.

Mr. President, the spirit seems to be abroad among the people that the purpose of the Government is to contribute to their personal welfare and material equipment, with no corresponding duty of the citizen to the Government. Patriotism, Mr. President, is something to be displayed and to manifest itself in the prosy days of peace, through its arts and accomplishments, expressed in those affairs of ordinary legislation which do not command applause or excite attention, but which in the end are the chief support, as they are the real objects of popular government.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, while there are so many Members of the Senate present this morning I call their attention to a bill that I introduced two days ago upon the subject that has been just now under discussion, namely, a bill to provide maintenance for the dependents of National Guardsmen and volunteers who may be called to the colors under the present exigency. I will ask that the bill be read, so that if I have occasion later on to offer it as an amendment to the House resolution it will be better understood.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I do not want to object if there is any likelihood of the Senator's getting this matter up for consideration, which I think is extremely doubtful. It seems to me that we ought to proceed with the regular business of the hour.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. If the Senator objects to its being read by the Secretary, I shall be pleased to read it myself as part of my own remarks.

Mr. TOWNSEND. If the Senator does not recognize the point I am trying to make I shall call for the regular order, but I should like to know what the Senator has in mind.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. The Senator has, with commendable patience, listened this morning to the discussion of this subject in a general way. He has seen a very marked difference of opinion develop between two Senators, extreme differences of opinion on this subject; and I simply wished rather briefly to lay before the Senate a more conservative suggestion, absolutely consistent with the practice of all foreign countries to-day, on this subject of the maintenance of the dependents of absent soldiers.

Mr. TOWNSEND. As I understand, the Senator does not expect to get any action on his measure, and this whole matter, as I understand, is coming up for discussion in the regular order at a later time. I can not quite understand the object that the Senator has in mind now.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I simply wished to read a very short bill, and would have been through with the subject by this time if the Senator had not interposed an objection which he did not interpose to the four other Senators who have addressed the Senate on the same subject.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not object now to a short statement on the part of the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read the bill (S. 6431) to provide aid for the dependents of enlisted men of the National Guard mustered into or serving in the service of the United States, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior, acting as far as possible through the Commissioner of Pensions, is hereby directed to cause immediate inquiry to be made through such agencies as he may select or create, as to the person or persons who may be dependent for support upon any and all of the enlisted men of the National Guard of the several States mustered into the service of the United States under the recent order of the President of the United States, or otherwise serving under the orders of the President of the United States. And the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed, in behalf of the United States and out of the funds hereby appropriated, to pay to or for the use of such dependent or dependents, through such agencies as the Secretary of the Interior may select or create, a sum of money for each such enlisted man having such dependent or dependents, not ordinarily to exceed $30 per month: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may make such rules or pass such orders as may reduce to a sum less than $30 per month per enlisted man the amount distributable in certain cases or classes of dependents: And provided further, That on order of the Secretary of the Interior, in special instances, the amount distributable monthly may be increased not to exceed $2 per day in any case.

SEC. 2. That the sum of $2,650,000 is hereby appropriated and made immediately available, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to make such payments to meet necessary expenses of administration and to put into operation at the earliest date the foregoing plan for the relief of the dependents aforesaid, and for such period of time and under such general rules as the Secretary of the Interior may direct and approve.

SEC. 3. That whenever the President shall be authorized by Congress to call for Volunteers, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause immediate inquiry to be made as to the dependents of such Volunteers, and as the enlisted men are accepted for service, and as preliminary information for the use of Congress in making provision for the dependents of Volunteers.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, the distribution proposed by this bill is not to the soldier; it is for maintenance, payable directly to his dependents. It is the nearly universal practice of foreign Governments of civilized countries to make this distribution under present conditions of war; and all of the European countries make this distribution, in times of peace as well as in times of war, with one exception. Roumania does not make the distribution in time of peace.

It is proposed in the joint resolution for drafting in the National Guard just come over from the House that the War Department shall make this distribution. That seems unwise at this time. The distribution should be made through the Bureau of Pensions, which is already provided.

The War Department, Mr. President, is extremely busy at this moment—extremely busy. The militia of all the States have rallied with a marvelous unanimity to the support of the country in this crisis. A great event has taken place, Mr. President—an event perhaps as significant and as important in our history as any that may come out of this trouble with Mexico. The balance of the Constitution has been preserved by the patriotism of the National Guard of this country. There has been an obvious combination at work generally and in the Halls of Congress to do away with all forms of State troops; to do away with all troops who have even the local association of which Alexander Hamilton approved. Yet, Mr. President, the patriotism of our people expressing itself through the National Guard has come to the assistance of the Nation at this crisis, and has practically ended that question. The balance provided for by the Constitution between the States and the Nation upon this great military question has been preserved. The National Guard has shown itself to be a National Army in a national crisis and the false cry of "48 little armies in 48 States" has been answered, has been met by the action of the people.

Under such circumstances, with the War Department four or five days behind time already in the distribution of arms, of rifles, of shoes, of horses for cavalry and batteries, of mules for the rapid-fire gun companies, of many of the essentials that go to make up the equipment of soldiers. The guard has responded and is waiting in the field for the equipment not yet supplied. To put upon the War Department, as the House resolution proposes, the inquiry as to the dependents among 100,000 families and the distribution to the dependents of these soldiers of this large sum of money is almost preposterous.

We have a department of the Government, the Pension Office, organized, equipped, ready to make this inquiry as to the dependents, and ready to make the distribution to the dependents, without embarrassing the military administration of the Nation at this crisis.

In the Regular Army, Mr. President, first enlistments are made on the theory of taking no married men into the service, and the enlisted personnel of the Regular Army has few dependents. This is perfectly obvious from the fact that the personnel, the rank and file of the Regular Army, have been willing to enlist in times of peace for a number of years upon a compensation of 50 cents a day. In all the old and similar types of military establishments, where young men and boys only were enlisted, provision for dependents was not necessary. Our Civil War was an illustration of that policy of making war with very young soldiers. On the northern side especially the war was fought by boys. But in all great modern armies, reaching all classes of the population, it has been found necessary to use older men as well and also to provide for the dependents of the men called to the colors. Switzerland has the most economically administered system of all European armies, perhaps, and there is provision for the families and dependents of the soldiers in the Swiss military law.

Similar provision has been made and is now operating throughout Europe. The following countries now provide for the dependents of the rank and file, and make this provision not only in time of war, but in time of peace as well: Austria-Hungary, Belgium, France, Germany, Great Britain, Switzerland, Italy, and Russia. As I said a little while ago, Roumania is the only exception to this rule, because she discontinues the allowance in times of peace. The plan of this bill is not only humane and based on present example, but is absolutely necessary, unless a very considerable percentage of the enlisted personnel of the National Guard is to be excused from duty.

The professional soldier of the United States Army costs, on the average, $1,100 per annum per man in times of peace. The citizen soldier costs less than one-fourth of that in times of peace, and his maintenance will not reach that sum in times of war; but no modern army of size and efficiency, including men as well as boys, is possible unless the dependents are provided for when the breadwinner is called to the colors.

The amount, $2,650,000, indicated in this bill to provide for the dependents of the enlisted men of the National Guard entering the service of the United States is based upon the supposition that 25 per cent of such enlisted men have dependents. In some commands it will be more and in others less. The minimum daily wage or family income at this season of the year is not less than $1.75 per day, which would be about $45 a month. The average enlisted man receives at least $15 a month pay. This proposed appropriation is based upon the theory that $1 a day additional would be sufficient. If 100,000 men are mustered in and 25,000, or one-fourth, have dependents, it would require $25,000 a day for dependent outlay.

It is proper to call attention to the fact that the European laws do not consider these allowances as in the nature of charity. They describe them as justice to the soldier who is called away from the maintenance of his family.

This bill carries an amount for 100 days on this basis and $150,000 estimated for extra expenses of administration.

This bill also directs the Secretary of the Interior to institute an inquiry as to the dependents of volunteers, should they be authorized by Congress and called for by the President. The purpose of the bill is to increase in numbers and improve in ability the available men for war; and it should have more effect upon the efficiency of the fighting force than any other form of pension expenditure. This distribution is a distribution in advance, to promote efficiency, and is not a distribution after a war in recognition of the necessities of subsequent dependents. This is a provision that will enable a large percentage of the men who are now with the colors to stay there, and will enable a large percentage of men who can not now join the colors to join them, and with the knowledge that their families are in their absence cared for by the country.

GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES IN NATIONAL GUARD.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I desire to introduce the following joint resolution, and ask that it be read.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 146) relative to compensation to be given employees of the Government who enlist in the military service of the United States was read the first time by its title, as follows:

Whereas, in response to the President's call for troops to quell disturbances on the Mexican border, thousands of men who were in the employ of the Government as clerks and in other positions have enlisted in the service of our country: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That in all cases of service in the Army and Navy of the United States of clerks or other employees of the Government, said employees shall continue to be paid by the Government the full wages as received by them before said enlistment in addition to the regular wages as soldiers of the Government; and be it further

Resolved, That their respective positions shall be held open to them upon return from the Army or Navy as far as practical.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I will say, in connection with the joint resolution, that I am prompted to present it from the fact that in my Commonwealth several great industrial concerns, for instance, the Edison concern, with nearly 5,000 employees, have declared to their employees that their wages shall go on in the event of their enlistment and that their places shall be kept open for them. That is true of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co.; it is true of the American Lithograph Co., the Amalgamated Paint Co., and I might mention scores of other industries in my State which have pursued the same course. It seems to me that is but just. The compensation of $20 a month is a most miserable pittance.

The controversy which has been had to-day I feel is most unfortunate and unseemly. It is not a matter of the $20 or $30 that these men shall receive that shall stimulate them, but it is a prime necessity to keep the wolf from the door; and I say that we would be almost inhumane if we did not quite willingly accede to this proposition. I was struck by a cartoon in the New York Tribune, entitled "Will it come to this?" and depicting a workman going to work, with factories all about him and a large signboard with an inscription reading, "Abandon all patriotism, ye who enter here."

I regret sincerely, as I have said, the controversy which occurred awhile ago. As much as I love the Senator from Oklahoma I feel that he was very unfortunate in some of the remarks he made. God knows I am a man of peace. I abhor and hate the very thought of war, and I will not vote one dollar, nor would I vote one man, for use in the acquisition of territory or for the purpose of further aggrandizement or for so-called glory; but to stay the bandits and the bloody hands of the villains who have burned the homes of our citizens on the border, desolated towns, and slaughtered men and women, I will go the limit in defense of my country.

I earnestly ask, Mr. President, that this joint resolution which I have introduced may have immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, this simply illustrates the tendency which I referred a few moments ago, and I object.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, God knows it is a good tendency. I can not imagine what atmosphere or what food a man should have lived on in Oklahoma which would cause him to oppose a tendency of this kind and stanch the kindly wellsprings of his heart.

Mr. GORE. It is not altogether a matter of food.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will call the attention of the Senator to the fact that he is transgressing the rules of the Senate.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I have no desire to transgress the rules, but I feel earnestly on this matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not a question of a desire to transgress the rules; it is a question of what is said, and it must not be repeated.

LANDS IN WASHINGTON.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, a short while ago the consideration of a private bill on the calendar, for the confirmation of patents to certain Indian lands, was objected to by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS]. Since that time I have had negotiation with the Senator from Kansas, and have agreed with him upon an amendment to the bill. The bill has already been read once. It is a private bill; and I ask, out of order, for its present consideration. It is Order of Business 226, House bill 8092.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 8092) confirming patents heretofore issued to certain Indians in the State of Washington.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes that certain patents heretofore issued in the names of Mary Seaples, Silico Saska, Theressa Klate, Osella, Felix, Mesil, and Louis Judge, to certain designated tracts of land in the State of Washington, be ratified and confirmed as fee-simple patents without restrictions against alienation as of their dates of issuance.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk. It has been agreed upon by the Senator from Kansas and myself.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add a new section, to be known as section 2, and to read as follows:

SEC. 2. That any of said Indians may present in the Court of Claims any claim they may have for loss or damage accruing to them through any breach of trust by the United States concerning said lands, and if the Court of Claims shall find any such breach of trust it shall render judgment for any loss or damage that may have accrued to any of said Indians thereby, and the measure of such loss or damage shall be the excess, if any, of the reasonable value of said lands when sold by said Indians, over and above the price actually received by said Indians therefor, together with reasonable interest on such excess sum, if any. An appeal may be taken from the final judgment of the Court of Claims therein to the Supreme Court of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the bill. I will simply say that it covers another allotment similar to those already covered by the bill, and that it has been reported on favorably by the Indian Bureau.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "meridian," in line 22, on page 2, it is proposed to insert the following:

and a similar patent in the name of Wapato Charley for the west half of the northeast quarter and the northeast quarter of the northwest quarter of section 19, township 23 north, range 20 east of the Willamette meridian.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I asked unanimous consent on yesterday to consider Calendar No. 490——

Mr. SMOOT. I call for the regular order.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Washington will not call for the regular order just at this time. I understood him, as I was leaving the Chamber, to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill of his, and I stepped out to notify the Senator from Florida that he might call up a little bill which my colleague [Mr. WALSH] objected to the other day, but which objection I understand he has withdrawn.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator from Montana is under a misapprehension. I did not call for the regular order.

Mr. SMOOT. I called for the regular order, and I want the regular order to proceed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House disagrees to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9625) to establish a national park in the Territory of Hawaii, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. FERRIS, Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, and Mr. LENROOT managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 733. An act providing for patents to homesteads on the ceded portion of the Wind River Reservation in Wyoming;

S. 1840. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a court of private land claims and to provide for the settlement of private land claims in certain States and Territories," approved March 3, 1891, and the acts amendatory thereto, approved February 21, 1893, June 27, 1898, and February 26, 1909;

S. 4026. An act authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to abrogate a contract lease of land and water power on the Muskingum River, Ohio;

S. 5863. An act authorizing the health officer of the District of Columbia to issue a permit for the removal of the remains of the late Charles H. Bingham from Congressional Cemetery, District of Columbia, to Lock Haven, Pa.;

S. 5910. An act authorizing the sale of the lighthouse reservation at Scituate, Mass.;

H. R. 393. An act to authorize an exchange of lands with the State of North Dakota for promotion of experiments in dry-land agriculture, and for other purposes;

H. R. 7613. An act to authorize the Terral Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Red River near Terral, Jefferson County, Okla.;

H. R. 8654. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead," approved February 19, 1909, by adding a new section to be known as section 7;

H. R. 11286. An act for the issuance of a patent for certain Government land to Benjamin F. Robinson and John Dows;

H. R. 13669. An act to authorize the county of Wabash, in the State of Indiana, to construct a bridge across the Wabash River, at the city of Wabash, Ind.;

H. R. 13670. An act amending an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes," relating to the authorization of fleet submarines;

H. R. 15006. An act to authorize the board of commissioners of Lake County, Ind., to construct a bridge across the Grand Calumet River, in the State of Indiana; and

H. R. 15007. An act to authorize the board of commissioners of Lake County, Ind., to construct a bridge across the Grand Calumet River, in the State of Indiana.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HUSTING presented memorials of sundry citizens of Wisconsin, remonstrating against any change in the parcel-post law, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Wisconsin, remonstrating against appropriations being made for sectarian purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Wisconsin, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to make "The Star Spangled Banner" the national anthem, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Wisconsin, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit interstate commerce in the products of child labor, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Wisconsin, praying for the enactment of legislation to grant pensions to widows and orphans of veterans of the Spanish-American War, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Wisconsin, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to limit the freedom of the press, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Wisconsin, praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PHELAN presented a petition of the Woman's Board of Missions for the Pacific, of San Francisco, Cal., praying for national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Women's Club of La Jolla, Cal., and a petition of the Ebell Club, of Los Angeles, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit interstate commerce in the products of child labor, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota presented memorials of sundry citizens of Canistota and Montrose, in the State of South Dakota, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to limit the freedom of the press, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Elk Point, S. Dak., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I have a letter from the president of the Pascagoula National Bank, of Moss Point, Miss., which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

There being no objection, the communication was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PASCAGOULA NATIONAL BANK,
Moss Point, Miss., June 16, 1916.

Hon. JAMES K. VARDAMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: There is at present pending before their respective committees what is known as the Pomerene bill (S. 6001) and McFadden bill (H. R. 12988).

These, as we understand, are companion bills, and the passage of one obviates the necessity of the other. We presume you are familiar with terms thereof, and consequently unnecessary to repeat here.

Along with all country bankers members of the Federal Reserve System, we are vitally interested in their passage, and therefore trust we are not presumptuous or intruding in respectfully urging you to lend your support and influence to the measures.

We can not see wherein the passage of one or the other will weaken the present Federal reserve statute, but, on the contrary, will remove one of the obstacles which State banks now urge to becoming members of the system.

We trust you will give the question your careful consideration, and would appreciate an expression.

With best wishes, we are,

Yours, very truly, H. C. HERRING, President.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I have received a letter from the cashier of the First National Bank of Biloxi, Miss., with reference to the bill S. 6001, known as the Pomerene bill, which proposes to amend section 19 of the Federal reserve act. I ask that the letter be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF BILOXI,
Biloxi, Miss., June 16, 1916.

Hon. JAMES K. VARDAMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We will appreciate it if you will support Senate bill No. 6001, known as the Pomerene bill, which is an amendment to section 19 (a) of the Federal reserve act, so as to permit country banks to keep one-fourth of their required reserves with reserve city correspondents within a radius of 300 miles, or within the Federal reserve district.

Very truly, yours,

E. C. TONSMEIRE, Cashier.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have a telegram from Joseph Hyde Pratt, secretary of the North Carolina Good Roads Association, relating to Federal aid for good roads, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WRIGHTSVILLE BEACH, N. C., June 23, 1916.

Senator L. H. OVERMAN,
Washington, D. C.:

Resolutions passed by road convention resolved that the North Carolina Good Roads Association, in convention assembled at Wrightsville Beach, N. C., with 1,000 delegates in attendance, herewith petitions and requests the conference committee of the United States Congress to take early and favorable action on the Federal-aid road bill, so that it can be passed at the present session of Congress.

JOSEPH HYDE PRATT, Secretary.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have a memorial adopted by the ministers and lay delegates of the Seventh-day Adventist denomination of the North Carolina Conference held at Statesville, N. C., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to restrict religious freedom, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the memorial was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A memorial to the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States.

The ministers and lay delegates of the Seventh-day Adventist denomination of the North Carolina Conference, assembled in annual convention at Statesville, on June 20, 1916, beg leave to address the following memorial to you concerning certain un-American bills now pending before Congress:

As citizens of the United States who have the general welfare of the Nation at heart we are exceedingly jealous that the fundamental principles of civil and religious liberty guaranteed to each individual by the Federal Constitution be not jeopardized and overridden by the enactment of statutes which are in direct opposition to these sacred guaranties and immunities.

Three press bills—H. R. 491, H. R. 6468, and H. R. 13778—are now pending before Congress which, if enacted into law, would create a one-man censorship of the press, and might result in the complete destruction of the freedom of the press without recourse to our courts.

Four religious measures are also pending, viz, S. 645, S. 5677, S. J. Res. 42, and H. R. 652, which, if enacted, would commit Congress to the subject of religious legislation, would establish the Christian religion and some of its religious institutions as the legal religion of the Government, and would penalize every dissenter and nonconformist because of his faith and practice.

We regret that Congress has ever been asked to legislate in favor of a religious institution concerning which there is so divergent a religious sentiment as the Sunday and Sabbath questions. We are in harmony with the following sentiments expressed in the Senate Report on Sunday mails, by Mr. Richard Johnson, of Kentucky, who was chairman of the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, January 19, 1829:

"The proper object of government is to protect all persons in the enjoyment of their religions as well as civil rights, and not to determine for any whether they shall esteem one day above another, or esteem all days alike holy. * * * It is not the legitimate province of the legislature to determine what religion is true or what false. Our Government is a civil and not a religious institution. Our Constitution recognizes in every person the right to choose his own religion and to enjoy it freely without molestation. * * *

"Among all the religious persecutions with which almost every page of modern history is stained no victim ever suffered but for the violation of what government denominated the law of God. To prevent a similar train of evils in this country, the Constitution has wisely withheld from our Government the power of defining the divine law. * * * If the principles are once established that religion or religious observances shall be interwoven with our legislative acts, we must pursue it to its ultimatum."

We believe that the Sabbath ought to be observed with piety and due respect to God, but we do not believe that any man should be compelled to observe Sunday or any other day as long as he is a free moral creature and has the liberty to be religious or nonreligious by choice. Enforced religion can only engender hypocrisy instead of true piety. It makes slaves out of free men. Congress has no more right to prohibit legitimate and honorable business on Sunday because the church demands it than it has to prohibit church services on show day because the show demands it.

We believe that Sunday laws are not only un-American but un-Christian. Neither Christ nor His apostles sought at any time to enforce their teachings by the force of civil statutes and penalties.

We, as Seventh-day Adventists, feel that we have a just reason to remonstrate against these compulsory Sunday bills. The enactment into law of Sunday legislation has subjected many of our members to hardships and cruel persecutions. A revival of the Sunday blue laws always opens the way for religious bigotry to stir the smoldering embers of persecution; and it is impossible to set a bound beyond the limits which it dare not go.

We, therefore, ask your honorable body to refrain from any course which may lead again to the persecution of individuals or sects who have the divine and constitutional right to differ on points of religious dogmas, and to enjoy the free exercise of their religious functions in such a manner and at such a time as they may choose, provided the exercise of that choice respects the same and equal rights of their neighbors.

And we, your memorialists, beg leave to assure you that we are kindly disposed to support the government of our country, and to maintain a due submission to the lawful exercise of its authority in purely civil matters.

Signed by order of the convention:

J. B. LOCKEN, President.
C. R. CALLICOTT, Secretary.

TETON NATIONAL FOREST, WYO.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 12208) adding certain lands to the Teton National Forest, Wyo., reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 537) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. TAGGART:

A bill (S. 6453) granting an increase of pension to Smith Corbett;

A bill (S. 6454) granting an increase of pension to James E. Harris; and

A bill (S. 6455) granting an increase of pension to John G. Henness; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHAFROTH:

A bill (S. 6456) granting an increase of pension to William J. Love; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BECKHAM:

A bill (S. 6457) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin Tackett (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey:

A bill (S. 6459) for the relief of George W. Sharp (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 6460) waiving the age limit for admission to the Medical Corps of the United States Navy in the case of W. Culbert Lyon; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. OLIVER (for Mr. PENROSE):

A bill (S. 6461) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Black (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CHILTON:

A bill (S. 6462) to pay to the Cincinnati Gas & Electric Co. a judgment in its favor against the collector of internal revenue of the southern district of Ohio; to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. OVERMAN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,500 for the addition of a kitchen and bathroom to the lodge in the Salisbury (N. C.) National Cemetery, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill (H. R. 15836), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for objects not named, Coast and Geodetic Survey, from $3,000 to $3,700, and so forth, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill (H. R. 15836), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WALSH submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $132,160 for the administration, improvement, and construction of roads, etc., in the Glacier National Park, Mont., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill (H. R. 15836), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

MARTIN HUHN.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 1528) for the relief of Martin Huhn, which was ordered to be printed and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

THE LIGHTHOUSE SERVICE.

Mr. LIPPITT submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 21) to authorize aids to navigation and other works in the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. OVERMAN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13383) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 4, 5, 6, 11, and 12.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 3, 7, 10, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, and 20, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$69,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 14 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out "$5,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$6,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

LEE S. OVERMAN,
WESLEY L. JONES,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
H. D. FLOOD,
CYRUS CLINE,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE SENATOR BRADLEY.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, in accordance with the notice heretofore given, I send to the desk the following resolutions (S. Res. 219) and ask that they may be read and adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be read.

The resolutions were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep sorrow of the death of the Hon. WILLIAM O. BRADLEY, late a Senator from the State of Kentucky.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the business of the Senate be now suspended to enable his associates to pay proper tribute to his high character and distinguished public services.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, WILLIAM O'CONNELL BRADLEY was born near Lancaster, Ky., in Garrard County, March 18, 1847. He departed this life on May 23, 1914, in the city of Washington. His father was Robert Bradley, one of Kentucky's most brilliant lawyers, and his mother was Ellen Totten Bradley.

Senator BRADLEY was educated in the public and private schools of the community, but he never had the advantages of a college education. When he was 14 years of age he twice ran away from home and joined the Union Army, but each time because of his youth he was taken from the Army by his father. In 1861 he served as a page in the Kentucky Legislature.

In 1865, when he was only 18 years of age, he was given a license to practice law by special act of the Kentucky Legislature. The bill provided that he might be licensed if found competent by two circuit judges. An examination was held, and he was found competent and admitted to the bar to practice law. He quickly took high rank as a lawyer in our State and became very active in the practice of law in both State and Federal courts, the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, and the Supreme Court of the United States.

At the age of 20 years Senator BRADLEY was married to Miss Margaret Robertson Duncan, of Lancaster, Ky.

In 1870 he was elected county attorney in Garrard County. This was considered a very great political triumph for a young man of Republican faith, for the county was overwhelmingly Democratic. He was the nominee of the Republican Party for Congress in the eighth congressional district of Kentucky in 1872 and 1876, and in both campaigns, which were heated and fiercely contested, he made creditable races. The district, however, was largely Democratic, and while he reduced somewhat the Democratic majority, he was unable to win. In these campaigns he demonstrated great power as an orator, great ability as a debater, and won for himself a State-wide reputation.

In 1879 he was nominated for attorney general by his party in Kentucky, but on account of ill health declined it. In 1887 he received the Republican nomination for governor of Kentucky, while Gen. Simon Bolivar Buckner, the great Confederate general, was the nominee of the Democratic Party. This race for governor between Senator BRADLEY and Gen. Buckner attracted national attention, and although Gen. Buckner won the race it was by a greatly reduced Democratic majority. In 1895 Senator BRADLEY again received the Republican nomination for governor, and after a remarkably brilliant campaign was elected by a majority of 8,912, carrying with him to victory all of his associates upon the State ticket. He served the State as governor for four years.

Four times Senator BRADLEY was nominated for United States Senator and voted for in the Kentucky Legislature by the Republican Party, but his party was in the minority. During these contests it was the highest honor that could be accorded to one of its members to be selected as the candidate of the Republican Party in Kentucky for United States Senator. In 1908 he was finally elected United States Senator for a term of six years.

Senator BRADLEY was seven times selected by his party as a delegate at large to the Republican national convention. He made the speech for Kentucky seconding the nomination of Gen. Grant for President in 1880. His friends have always claimed for this speech that it was one of his greatest efforts.

It was a very eloquent and stirring speech. He was one of the "immortal 306" who voted for Grant first to last, and he often referred to that fact with pride. In 1884 he was the leader on behalf of the South in its efforts to defeat the reduction in the representation of the Southern States in the national convention. At the Republican national convention in 1904 he made a speech seconding the nomination of Theodore Roosevelt for President.

Senator BRADLEY was three times elected a member of the Republican national committee of Kentucky. The State delegation was instructed for him for President in 1896, and he was many times voted for in the Republican national conventions for Vice President.

In 1889 President Harrison appointed him minister to Korea, but he declined the appointment. President Arthur appointed him to conduct the prosecution on the part of the Government in the case of the star-route contractors, but he also declined that appointment.

Senator BRADLEY was often honored by his State in the national conventions by being elected chairman of the Kentucky delegations and serving in other very important posts and positions.

Kentucky was more generous to Senator BRADLEY than it has ever been to any other Republican in its history. He was the only Republican who was ever elected in Kentucky as governor and United States Senator. He was truly the father of the Republican Party in our State, its best beloved leader, greatest orator, and most splendid debater.

He had more joint debates with Democrats in Kentucky than any other Republican who ever lived in our State. His party was proud of him and always gathered with confidence to hear him in debate with any of the leading Democrats of the State, for they felt certain they had a champion worthy of any foe, and in this they were never disappointed. He lifted the Republican Party in Kentucky from almost hopeless minority to victory in the State.

As a lawyer Senator BRADLEY ranked with the very first in the whole country. He was engaged in many of the great legal battles in our State. Before a jury in advocacy of a cause he was wonderfully magnetic and powerful. In other addresses upon various subjects he displayed great learning and brilliancy.

His address in dedication of the Kentucky monument on the Chickamauga battle field in 1899 will take rank with the world's great orations. What a wide contrast there was in that speech, breathing the sweet eloquence of a reunited country and paying tribute alike to the heroes of the two contending armies, and his fiery eloquence which stirred the Republican national convention in 1880 as he plead for Grant's renomination for a third term! How the years had mellowed and softened him! Pleading for Grant's renomination, he said:

> He gave voice and strength to the proclamation which struck the shackles from 4,000,000 of fellow creatures. The merciless slave driver tremblingly read it by the flash of his victorious cannon. He pinned it on the breast of murderous treason with a million loyal bayonets.

But in his great dedication speech at Chickamauga 19 years later he used the words:

> It is equally true that those who were fortunately defeated were inspired by sincere devotion to principles conscientiously believed to be just; that they fought with valor equaled alone by those who opposed them, but never surpassed, and their heroic suffering and bravery entitle them to the admiration of all mankind.

And it was Senator BRADLEY's hand that wrote the inscription on that monument:

> As we are united in life, and they united in death, let one monument perpetuate their deeds, and one people, forgetful of all asperities, forever hold in grateful remembrance all the glories of that terrible conflict which made all men free and retained every star on the Nation's flag.

Here is a concrete example of how time wrought its glorious work of reuniting a once estranged people. Time, with its noiseless march through the passing years, teaches the eloquent tongue that thrilled the thousands assembled in national convention with martial eloquence to charm a multitude in generously just tribute to the men who wore the gray, who fought and fell for a lost cause, as well as those who fought in triumph for a glorious Republic, according to each the same sincerity, bestowing upon all the same tribute of heroism. It was the same spirit and tolerance of men upon both sides of that awful struggle—remembered now only to recount the deeds of heroism of the bravest armies that ever clashed upon field of glory.

The sons of soldiers dead, the sons of soldiers living, caught the fine spirit of which Senator BRADLEY'S eloquence is but a type, and now we vie with each other in paying tribute to men of both the South and the North who followed the standards of opposing armies and pointing with devotion and love to the dearest colors ever knit together in a banner of the free, waving above a happy and reunited people bound together in patriotic love with bands stronger than steel.

Senator BRADLEY easily ranked as the South's greatest Republican. He numbered his friends among the men of all parties. In the discharge of his official duties he willingly served all the people. He was nonpartisan in his service to the people of Kentucky. No one ever claimed Kentucky as his home who did not find him a willing aid and of great assistance. He was good-natured, kind-hearted, and a wonderful entertainer. He was proud of Kentucky's hospitality and always sought to emulate it. In his death Kentucky lost one of her greatest citizens. He had rendered distinguished and signal service to the whole people. His party lost its greatest leader, and they may truly say, "Ulysses has gone and left behind him none strong enough to bend his bow."

Here in the Senate there were few men who ever served that had the warm affection which was accorded Senator BRADLEY. His colleagues will long remember him affectionately.

His name will live in Kentucky, and his deeds will form a part of its history. His friends were legion, and while death comes to us all, it could not have touched a citizen of Kentucky and caused more sorrow and tears than were occasioned when Senator BRADLEY was summoned to the court of God. Truly we may say, "Pale Death knocks with impartial foot at the cottages of the poor and at the towers of kings."

He is greatly missed and will be long loved and remembered in thousands of Kentucky homes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, sometimes when I reflect upon the slight attention given by Senators to memorials of their departed colleagues I am impressed by the thought that it might be well to discontinue the practice of setting apart a day for memorializing deceased Congressmen; but when, upon more mature reflection, I recall that the custom is founded upon one of the deepest sentiments of life, I offer no protest, for I then believe that while post-mortem eulogies can not affect the dead, they can and do help the living. On such occasions the mind recalls only good; and in the midst of the sometimes bitter and strenuous strife of public life it is well for Congressmen and for the country to formally pause and consider death, the twin mystery of life.

I do not know how it seems to you, Senators, but I am convinced that the benefits from public and private life are lessened and fall far short of their possibilities for good because of the failure to grasp and understand the truths that love, not hate; kindness, not bitterness; sympathy, not indifference, are the essential qualities of true greatness, and therefore of highest usefulness. The longevity of real congressional service is not measured by the number of Congresses of which a man was a Member, but by the influence for good which he exerted while in Congress. It is true, of course, that long public service under a democracy implies exceptionally good service, but it is not conclusive proof of that fact. The man who, in a single term, inspired his associates and constituents to better thought and living will be found in the trial balance to have done more for his country and his countrymen than has he of many terms whose legislative record includes only numerous abstract, technical enactments, and many brilliant and bitter speeches. This is an occasion when men stop for a moment at least and take account of stock.

I saw the late Senator WILLIAM O. BRADLEY for the first time at the national Republican convention in Chicago in 1888. I did not meet him there, but I heard him speak, and I was impressed with his apparent mental strength and virility. He was then in the very prime of his vigorous manhood. He was called before the convention and before gatherings in the hotels, and he always was equal to the occasion and inspired his hearers with enthusiasm. I did not see him again until he came to the Senate, and I did not meet him formally until I entered this body on March 4, 1911.

Soon after coming here I became personally and well acquainted with him, for he was a kindly, lovable man, and attracted men to him. He loved his friends, and they were loyal and true to him. This fact is proven by the many positions of public trust which he, a Republican, held in the Democratic State of Kentucky. I knew him as a gentle soul, who saw the good and ignored the bad; and yet, being somewhat familiar with his life history, I know that his had been a strenuous career. At times his soul was stirred to its very depths over matters of wright and wrong, and he pursued in unlimited degree the courage of his convictions. Up until the last years of his life he was an antagonist whom no wise man voluntarily courted.

He had been in the Senate two years when I entered it, and I shall not forget his uniform kindness to me. He was my friend, as I was his; and I am grateful for the invitation to pay my brief tribute of respect to his memory.

During nearly all the time of his service in the Senate he was a great sufferer from physical sickness; but his heart was always well, and his love and generosity are somewhat of the compensation which has come to me for service in the United States Senate.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I am not going to deliver a formal or prepared eulogy upon the life and services of Senator BRADLEY. I only want to say a very few words of kindly sympathy for the memory of one whom I respected and admired as a man and loved and esteemed as a friend.

I did not know Senator BRADLEY personally until I came to the Senate and found him here. In his earlier life and mine we had lived in adjoining States, and I had known much of his valuable services to his State and his country. When I met him here I was from the beginning drawn to him by his kindly, genial, and generous disposition. From the first of my acquaintance with him he was afflicted with a disease that he understood to be incurable. He was waiting for the end, realizing that it was near; but through it all he was cheerful and patient to a degree. This high qualification of his character excited my most profound sympathy and admiration. It is these great qualities of his that have endeared him to thousands of the American people, not only in his State of Kentucky, but all over the country, and particularly here in the Senate Chamber. They are qualities that will keep his memory green in their minds and hearts for all the years to come.

His was a character to be emulated. It was a great example to others. It gives me great pleasure to have this opportunity to say these few words in commemoration of his life and as a token of my high esteem for him as a man and a friend.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I shall not dwell upon the date or moment of birth or death nor on the life opportunities of Gov. BRADLEY, later a member of this body from the great State of Kentucky, nor upon how he availed himself of those opportunities. Those things will be found, in a general way, in the Congressional Directory, and have been, or will be, presented more specifically and interestingly by others.

I never knew Gov. BRADLEY until he and I met as United States Senators upon this floor. My experience and training and environment had been such that I had always entertained, and then entertained, a very stubborn prejudice against Southern white Republicans. That prejudice was dissipated like snow melts under the sunshine, so far as he was concerned, as soon as I was brought into intimate personal contact with Senator BRADLEY.

He was one of the most human men I ever knew—large-hearted, unstinted in hospitality, sunny in temperament, with good, hard sense, a proper sense of proportion, and consequently a lively sense of humor. Genialness was one of his most marked traits.

During our service here together he tied himself to me by very many acts of kindness and by very many kindly words. He "had friends" because he "showed himself friendly," and in that respect heeded the express words of wisdom of the wise King of the Jews.

It affords me pleasure to express my high idea of the man; his frankness; his courage of conviction; his open-hearted ways; his sturdy consistency of purpose.

He was not "of my tribe" politically, but he was a splendid and true member of his tribe, thoroughly American and thoroughly loyal to his own ideals. I sincerely grieved when he passed through "the valley of the shadow of death" into the great unknown. A friend had gone, and we do not make and hold many.

We can all place our wreaths, with honor to ourselves, upon his grave and mingle our regrets with the regrets of those who knew him best and loved him best.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, perhaps the most accurate measure of the personality and character of a public man is found in the opinion of him held by his political opponents or adversaries. In the rough-and-tumble game of politics, in the no-quarter features of political warfare, especially as carried on in the so-called border States occupying the line which once separated the North from the South, the man who can go through a political campaign and retain the personal friendship of his political foes is an unusual character. The man who can battle politically for a lifetime and go down to his grave beloved personally, alike by political friend and foe, is a marvel.

Such a man was our former beloved colleague, WILLIAM O'CONNELL BRADLEY, who died in this city at his post of duty on Saturday evening, May 23, 1914, and to whose memory we to-day devote this session of the United States Senate.

I shall speak briefly of the political incidents of our friend's career, as they bear out that trait of his character to which I have alluded—the capacity to make and hold personal friends regardless of political differences.

As we have been told, he was the only Republican who ever served both as governor of Kentucky and as a United States Senator from that State.

Before he became of voting age he was fighting in the political battles which always are waged furiously in Kentucky. Before he was 21 years of age he was admitted to practice law, and at the age of 23 was elected county attorney of Garrard County. At the age of 25 he was Republican elector for the eighth congressional district, and a little later ran for Congress as a Republican, but was defeated. He again made an unsuccessful race for Congress in 1876. He was four times chosen Republican national committeeman for Kentucky, and went as delegate at large from Kentucky to five Republican national conventions. Four times he was chosen as the Republican caucus nominee for United States Senator. His first race for governor was made against Gen. Simon Bolivar Buckner, in 1887, when he was defeated by 17,000 majority, the preceding Democratic majority in the gubernatorial election being 47,000. He declined an appointment by President Harrison as United States minister to Korea and an appointment by President Arthur as special attorney to prosecute the noted "star-route" cases.

He was not in politics for appointive places but for the thrill of the campaign and the contest at the polls.

He finally won success in his political warfare, and was elected governor of Kentucky in 1895 over Gen. P. Watt Hardin, whom he defeated by 9,000 majority. He served as governor for four years. In February, 1908, he was elected to the United States Senate, and just prior to his death had announced that, on account of ill health, he would not be a candidate for reelection.

He was a noted political campaigner, and his services on the stump extended beyond the limits of his own State in many national campaigns. The late Senator Thomas H. Carter, of Montana, once said that he considered Senator BRADLEY the best campaign orator he had ever heard. Loyalty to his friends was one of his predominating qualities; and he was one of the famous 306 delegates who voted for 37 ballots for Gen. U. S. Grant for a third term in the Republican national convention held in Chicago in 1880.

In our personal association with Senator BRADLEY during the five years and two months he was with us in this body we who served with him recall the predominating traits of his character—adherence to principle, loyalty to friends, generous and genial treatment of his colleagues, regardless of party.

For every employee of the Capitol, no matter how humble his position, he invariably had a cheering word of salutation and a friendly smile.

He was generous, not for the rewards of generosity, but because that was a fundamental trait of his being. Failing in one instance in getting a claim through Congress for a constituent, he paid the claim himself.

And so he lived his life—adamantine in devotion to what he considered the correct principles of government, gentle and yielding in his touch with humanity.

His political opponents spoke of him in kindly terms.

His Kentucky colleague in the Senate—he himself an orator of fame—once said of him:

> He was one of the most genial of men, and he was a prince among his fellows. He was a distinguished lawyer, a great orator, and a profound statesman. His followers in Kentucky idolized him, and they will love his memory as they loved him in his life.

Another of his Kentucky colleagues—Hon. SWAGAR SHERLEY—said:

> He was the most distinguished Republican of Kentucky. While a pronounced partisan, his partisanship was secondary to his loyalty to his State. A more intensely loyal Kentuckian I never knew. He always had the respect of his opponents and the genuine affection of those fortunate to personally know him. He rendered conspicuous service to his State and country, and his death brings sorrow to all Kentuckians.

The Courier-Journal of Louisville, which in a score of hard-fought political campaigns had employed the genius-tipped pen of its talented editor, Henry Watterson, to oppose him, had this tribute to make when his battles were ended:

> WILLIAM O'CONNELL BRADLEY was the most affectionate and the kindliest of men in his familiar intercourse. He was sprung from a branch of that great line which gave Ireland its mightiest orator, and he possessed many of the characteristics of that extraordinary man. Certainly in persuasive powers no Kentuckian of his time could approach him before an audience of Kentuckians. He had eloquence and humor and common sense. That he became governor and Senator—the two most coveted gifts the people have to bestow—in a State where his party was in a woeful minority attests his genius and resources as a party leader. His fidelity to his personal associates, his political following, and his public duty were conspicuous and constant. He lived through trying times and shone undimmed to the last. The Courier-Journal, which entertains for his talents admiration and for his personality hearty good will, tenders his family the assurance of its profound sympathy and sorrow.

On that spring day in his home city of Frankfort, as I looked across the open grave of our friend in the beautiful cemetery where his body was being laid at rest, I saw the thoughtful faces of many of Kentucky's public men—the governor, once our colleague here, and all of the State, county, and city officials. I saw the grief-stricken faces of his family and close friends and the solemn, respectful faces of hundreds of citizens who had gathered to pay him the last token of reverence and respect.

As I saw this great gathering of officials, relatives, friends, and neighbors, and witnessed the sincere manifestations of sorrow over the death of our colleague, I felt the conviction that he had not lived in vain; that he had played well his part in the wonderful drama of life; and that although the forum, the hustings, and the legislative halls would know him in the flesh no more forever, his memory would not fade nor his influence perish, and that his long fight for the principles of government in which he believed would prove an inspiration for his countrymen to follow for years to come.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, no man has lived in vain who by reason of fine impulses and noble deeds has been able to attach to himself a great body of friends, who have borne him such affection in life that they continue to cherish and honor his memory long after he has "gone for ever and ever by." Where a man so lives after death in the memory of those who knew him best that they never tire of recounting his noble traits and generous acts there is proof positive of that nobility of soul which above all other things attests true greatness.

WILLIAM O. BRADLEY was blessed and cheered by the friendship of the best men and women in the land. Not only did the people of his own beloved Commonwealth delight in honoring him, but in him there were such rare qualities of head and heart that wherever he went he gathered to himself friends in every walk of life who gave him generously of their affection, and who now delight to honor his memory. Kentucky and Indiana are sister States. We of Indiana have always been proud of the kinship which has brought the two Commonwealths into commercial, political, and personal relationship of the most intimate character, and it was doubtless by reason of this relationship that I became very familiar with the high reputation of WILLIAM O. BRADLEY long before I had the pleasure of personal acquaintance; for his fame as a lawyer of ability and orator of great eloquence and power extended throughout the Middle West long before the people of Kentucky bestowed upon him the great honors which brought him prominently before the people of the entire country.

When the announcement was made in 1895 that the splendid Democratic Commonwealth of Kentucky had for the first time in her history chosen a Republican governor, the attention of the Nation was challenged, and it became a matter of common inquiry amongst men of all parties as to what manner of man it was who had thus been able to induce the people of that rock-ribbed Democratic State to ignore traditions, cast party differences to the winds, and bestow the greatest honor in their gift upon a stalwart Republican leader, who in all the fierce political struggles in which he had engaged had fearlessly proclaimed his party faith, and on those battle fields had never shown sign of yielding, but had always promptly returned a blow for every one he had ever received.

It was learned then that it was because of his splendid courage and knightly qualities thus manifested that the brave and chivalrous people of his State came to respect and admire him as one of Kentucky's true sons; that while he differed from the majority on questions of governmental policy, he was a man of high ideals, infinite courage, and possessed all those splendid qualities of head and heart which cause the name "Kentuckian" to be honored in every land beneath the sun.

And so when he came to this body his fame had preceded him. Much was expected of him, and he measured up fully to the hopes of his friends. In his discussion of public questions he commanded the attention of both sides of the Chamber, and by his fidelity to duty under all circumstances won the confidence of the country.

But it was because of his great heart, his sympathetic nature, his gentleness of spirit that his comrades here so loved him that in his death each felt that he had suffered a distinct personal loss.

I came to know him well and to love him greatly.

We lived at the same hotel here in Washington, and, seeing him and conversing with him almost every day, I had opportunity to know of the greatness of his heart and the whiteness of his soul—his faithfulness to public duty and the great love he bore to his fellow men, manifested every day of his life.

I witnessed the fortitude and cheerfulness with which he bore the suffering which disease brought to him in the last years of life. Without a murmur of complaint he proceeded to the last in the discharge of his public duties like the hero that he was.

Mr. President, Kentucky has given to the Nation many great men. She can justly boast of the illustrious names of her distinguished sons who have represented her in this body, for those of Clay, Crittenden, Breckenridge, Beck, and Carlisle illumine the history of the Republic; but, sir, Kentucky never gave to her country a son who possessed finer courage, more exalted patriotism, greater heart, or whiter soul than WILLIAM O'CONNELL BRADLEY. Peace to his memory!

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, during the immediate period preceding the Revolutionary War and during the continuance of that struggle many of the frontiersmen and backwoodsmen dwelling in the eastern slopes and valleys of the Allegheny Mountains pressed westward over and across the mountains and made the first settlements in the future State of Kentucky. They trekked through Cumberland Gap and other less notable passes. They were to a large extent of Scotch-Irish ancestry, and were a brave, virile, and aggressive—though to some extent unlettered—people, but better qualified than any other class to cope with the Indians and to subdue the wilderness. They were followed and, to some extent, interspersed with people from the eastern plains and the tidewater lands, who were chiefly of English stock, and who were rather more cultured and occupied a higher social plane than the backwoodsmen. In course of time these two elements blended and assimilated into a homogeneous people, constituting one of the best types of American citizenship, the cradle and nursery of great statesmen, great judges, and great warriors who have left their permanent and enduring impress on the life of our Nation.

It is a most remarkable fact that while the colonists on the east of the Allegheny Mountains were engaged in their struggle for independence, these pioneers of Kentucky, with those of Tennessee, were engaged in the no less bloody task of adding an empire to the future Republic, and ridding it, to a great extent, of the incubus of the savage aborigines. In their zeal for exploration, settlement, and conquest, under the leadership of that great Virginian, George Rogers Clark, they pressed across the Ohio and seized and occupied the Illinois and Wabash country, thereby laying the foundation for securing, by the final treaty of peace with England, the vast domain bounded on the west by the Mississippi River and on the north by the Great Lakes, an empire then scarcely known to the people dwelling on the east side of the Allegheny Mountains.

Eight years after the close of the Revolutionary War and two years after the adoption of the Federal Constitution, Kentucky, without any preliminary Territorial government, was, in 1791, admitted into the Union, being the first addition to the original thirteen States. From the time of her admission into the Union, Kentucky assumed a leading part among the sisterhood of States by reason of the fact that so many of her sons were gifted with a high order of talents for the management of public affairs. Her statesmen were among the leaders of the country and oftentimes exercised a controlling influence in the affairs of government. Not the least among the galaxy of her statesmen was our late departed colleague, WILLIAM O. BRADLEY, who departed this life on the 23d of May, 1914, in the sixty-eighth year of his age and the last year of his term. He was a native son of Kentucky, descended from an intellectual, virile, and aggressive ancestry among the pioneers.

Without the advantages of a higher or college education, his native intellectual abilities and energy were nevertheless such that at an early age he attained a leading place at the bar among the many able and prominent men of the profession. He was well versed in the fundamental principles of law, and was an able and successful trial lawyer, especially effective in his arguments before juries. His ability and reputation as a lawyer brought him an extensive practice in both the State and Federal courts. And to this work, when not engaged in the public service, he chiefly gave his attention. Though a thoroughgoing Republican in a State normally Democratic, yet he had many friends and admirers among the Democrats, so that at every election at which he was a candidate he always polled a considerably greater vote than the normal vote of his party.

In 1895 he was elected governor of his State by a plurality of nearly 9,000, in which office he served with high credit and ability, and in February, 1908, he was elected to the United States Senate by the legislature. As a Member of the Senate he proved to be very industrious and attentive to public business and a most excellent, ready, and effective debater, always good-natured, and always ready to take and give blows. He was genial, kind-hearted, and loyal to his friends. Sunshine and good will beamed from his countenance and was a part of his nature. The humble and the lowly could always have his attention and his help, and hence he was always near and dear to the popular heart. He was opposed to ostentation and display. He never had his eyes set on the galleries when he was addressing the Senate, but, rather, aimed to make his case plain and to enlighten and instruct his colleagues. Senator BRADLEY was a man who had grown into public favor through his native ability, his energy, his perseverance, and his loyalty. He never sailed under false or sham colors. What he believed in he advocated openly and aboveboard. Guile and dishonesty were foreign to his nature. His public life and his public service, though varied and highly valuable, were, after all, but the outer shell of the noble soul and the brave heart that was his. He was a typical son of Kentucky, a sample of its bravest and best. In the words of the poet, he had a love for his country and his State as though they were his daughters, ready to smoke the pipes of peace or to hurl the tomahawks of war, hatred of shams and innovations, pride in our common country and her Stripes and Stars. His mortal remains are buried in the soil of Kentucky, but that immortality of the soul that was his abides with us as "by day a pillar of a cloud and by night in a pillar of fire."

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I was requested by the distinguished senior Senator from Kentucky, Mr. JAMES, to add a word to these ceremonies. I gladly accept the invitation and avail myself of the privilege.

This is what is termed the proceedings of obituary. The world at large usually regards such as a mere form. Generally it is esteemed throughout the country that these are enconiums by courtesy, not by desert.

I am sure that I, in common with thousands of others who had occasion to read of the proceedings of obituary in this body and in the other House, had concluded they were mere matters of form; that some one had to comply with them; that invariably some hollow expression was indulged in as a mere ceremonial performance.

It was not until it befell to my experience to observe the tender associations which are woven in the public service that I realized how false was that standard which the public had applied concerning the private estimate we public men have of those who serve with us as public agents. We know the man; the public know the official. We know the character; the public know the reputation.

Mr. President, I have the advantage of the eminent Senator from Mississippi, who distinguishes his State by the brilliant services he renders in this body, Senator WILLIAMS, in that I, though a Southerner, came into this body without any prejudice whatever against the white Republicans of the South, as the Senator concedes was his conviction. I had lived in the North and in the West so long that I had been divorced from such sentiment, if ever it possessed me.

I likewise had the advantage of the eminent leader of the majority, Senator KERN, of Indiana, who, having had a long personal acquaintance with the distinguished deceased previous to his service here, was naturally prejudiced in his favor. Such is the effect of personal association which ever weaves a kindly regard because of its confidences.

I did not know the distinguished Senator from Kentucky before I came to serve in this body. I have no memory that I had ever beheld him, however much I had heard of him. It was here in this body where I made the first acquaintance. It was the close touch with him as a Senator that enabled me to form an estimate that I am delighted to express upon this occasion. This opportunity, which though solemn in its aspect, could give gladness to those who are privileged to participate, in that it enables them to do justice to a departed noble man.

Mr. President, we live in an interesting hour. The Old World is dying around us. Civilization is shattered. Creation seems confused. Heroes of the earth are being buried, but we have not time to mark their passing. Kings are being dethroned, Emperors shaken from their seats, but we are removed from the cataclysm. The eminent soldier of Britain, Lord Kitchener, sank to his grave through the surging waves without more than an echo through the world. We were too busy; affairs of the life or death of nations possess us.

My mind reverts to the summer of 1898, when I was a Member of the House of Representatives. The Spanish-American War was on and the world disturbed with martial disorder. In Europe, Bismarck passed out, but America had little time to note the great loss to Germany. Within five days after, Gladstone, of England, breathed his last salutation to earthly glory, but America had concerns so serious she neglected in her public Houses to pay her tribute to the statesman of British liberty and constitutional justice.

Here in America at the same period the distinguished Republican Party and America itself lost an eminent citizen and statesman in James G. Blaine; and yet we did not pause to note the loss or pay tribute to the acknowledged virtues; so busy were we with things that concerned us so closely in our national destiny, we neglected the duty to those at a distance.

My mind adverts at this moment to a passage of Lecky; I think it is in his History of European Morals. Descanting upon that temper of mind of man which regards things at a distance as of no concern to him, the writer invites attention to one who sits upon a river bank and says, "Behold." More concern to him are the dead leaves that float upon the stream than the thousands that are dying of hunger on the Ganges.

Mr. President, we are some distance removed from these falling worlds, these dying kings, these dethroned emperors, these crumbling empires. With those, sir, we do not concern ourselves more than we would with that which in a panorama attracts the gaze sometime and like a picture removed passes from the vision.

Here, however, in this assemblage the single death of one unit of our organization shocks the soul and awakens our sentiment. We bemoan the loss. Why? Because in that particular loss we note the loss of a man. Creation may build empires, my brother Senators; civilization may establish kingdoms, and upon both may rear rulers whom we call kings or emperors. With scepter they may sway their dominion with the power of life and death. But, after all, Heaven's noblest creation, as we know, is a man, and when thrown close enough to see the emotions in one of our brothers we attest that of God's noblest creation, is an honest man; then we stand in reverence; we are glad to bow in worship; we pay him tribute because we feel that after all, life's great compact with civilization has been executed and exhibited to earth; a man standing square before his fellows, and just before his God.

How do we test such a one, Mr. President? We test him, sir, by his acts as we see him. We are remitted to the great Scripture law proclaiming that by the fruits of a tree ye shall know it. We behold this branch of civilization and see what it blooms and what it ripens, and by that we test, condemn, or praise it.

When I first came to the acquaintance of Senator BRADLEY I was new in this body. Like all men who come here I had the timidity, I had the hesitancy, and with whatever audacity or courage we might be possessed we quail in the presence of our first undertaking. This is the most critical legislative body in the English-speaking world. It fell to my lot to engage in a debate with one of our eminent colleagues on the other side, carrying with it, of course, those partisan differences which are so natural to conflicts arising on both sides of this Chamber. It was at the conclusion of this that Senator BRADLEY, to whom I had never spoken, came over to greet me with a kindly message, reminding me that he knew some of my relations in Kentucky. He told me that he had done me the compliment to observe my public course, and he approved some of the things upon which much difference had been expressed. He gave me counsel and friendly encouragement.

You can readily understand, Mr. President, how close that man at once came to me. That which Senator NELSON, of Minnesota, has just exquisitely expressed appealed to me—the man in his nature, that quality which the distinguished Senator from Minnesota adverted to, the courage and the generosity of the nature within him. Those were the virtues which the Senator from Kentucky, his eminent colleague, correctly adverted to. That courage that was admired in conflict, that justice that was ever perceived, to prove itself in every form of life, that attribute of kindness, of goodness, that expression of character that wanted to serve another, awakened in me a desire to know the man more fully. Thereafter from time to time it fell to me to then engage with him in personal conversation and official contact. Day after day, on occasion upon occasion, I learned thus to know him. What attracted me most, and here I delight to speak of it, was the want of cant in the man, was the absence of hypocrisy. He was a noble soul in his speech; in his political debates I recall his assault upon the policy of Democracy upon a tariff question, then his oration upon foreign relations. Standing at his desk he proclaimed his impeachment. He made no apologies. He sought in no wise to qualify his views to cultivate favor of the undecided. He differed from his colleagues, he assailed with virulence, denounced with vigor, and reached his conclusion with confidence. He hurled them against his political antagonist like a warrior, and then afterwards met his adversary in private affairs as a friend. It was such quality as that, sir, that attracted me to the nobility of his nature.

If it be true, as Senator WARREN, of Wyoming, adverted here, and Senator NELSON, of Minnesota, that these were the signal elements that went to make up the Kentucky character, I send my praise to so glorious a Commonwealth that should have signaled her existence by so splendid an example.

Sir, I therefore praise where I saw the desert; and while we all sorrow at a death, if it affords an opportunity to certify to those who loved him the esteem in which he was held by his opponents, his antagonists, what must be their conclusions concerning those who worship at the shrine of his capacity, where eloquence flashed from intellect and logic converted by its wisdom?

Mr. President, there was one other feature to the man that attracted me. I do not know whether his colleagues had occasion to observe it. It was his interesting form of religion. He bore no outward pretense. He was not a Pharisee, who robed himself in the garb of a professed virtue. He was but a man realizing that duty was to be kindly to his fellow men. After all that is the real test of a Christian, the fulfillment, if I recall, of James, in his Epistle—the kindness to the bowed widow, the service to the deserted child, keeping oneself unspotted with the cruelties of the world. This was to him, as it was to the great apostle, "religion pure and undefiled."

I am not aware that he professed the creed of church, but, Mr. President, there rises to my mind a legend you may permit me to suggest as expressive of his faith—the definition of his religion:

Sir John Lubbock was not known as a man of Christian pretensions. He was one who had no church creed, but he tried to live the life of a fellow man. He had given bread to the hungry. He had lifted the fallen. He had sought to console misery. He dreamed that he died and went to heaven. He reached the gates of heaven, and at the outer portal he was notified to behold. He did. He saw the followers of the churches sitting beneath their banners. At the right was the golden cross, and there were assembled the Catholics. They sat in the gleaming beauty of the Madonna. In a white-surpliced choir sat the Methodists, and by the crystal fount the Baptists. The watcher at the gate accosted Sir John, saying, "What is your religion, and where will you sit?" Just then the Master beheld Peter interrogating at the gate Sir John, and he came forward, and behold it was Sir John. Sir John responded, saying, "I know not church. I know duty. I have given bread to the hungry; I have lifted the fallen; I have spoken kindly to those who suffered; I have buried the dead; I have tried to live by that which a man should live by, some duty to his fellow men." Just then the Master, hearing all, rushed to the gate and said, "Ah, Sir John, it is you. We know much of you up here. We have heard much of you and your deeds. Come in, Sir John; come in and sit you down wherever you please." So of that manner of man was this man, Senator BRADLEY. Let us believe that by the test of his manly life, by the nobility of his soul, by his deeds of goodness, he, too, heard from his Master the summons at the gate, saying, "Come in; come in; and sit you down wherever you please." There may he repose with his Father and his God.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, until I came to the Senate this morning I did not know that I was expected to make any remarks on this occasion. I have, therefore, no prepared address, but I could not sit silent without saying just a word in memory of my deceased friend, without laying at least a simple little wild flower upon the tablet to his memory.

He was my friend. I was his friend. I think every Senator upon this floor was his friend. I doubt whether any man who sat here with him had more personal friends than had Senator BRADLEY.

Sometime ago, Mr. President, I purchased 10 volumes of a book entitled "Choice Selections of Southern Literature." Sitting in my library one afternoon looking over those volumes, I saw under the head of "Choice Epitaphs and Inscriptions"— and I may say in passing that these selections were by Dr. Alderman, president of the University of Virginia, and one of the leading educators of the South—a sentiment uttered by Senator BRADLEY. On the battle field of Chickamauga stands a magnificent monument erected not to the Confederate dead, not to the Union dead, but to the heroes both of the Union side and of the Confederate side. An inscription is placed upon that monument, a short extract taken from the inaugural message of Senator BRADLEY to the Kentucky Legislature, urging that an appropriation be made for the purpose of erecting the monument. I desire to put into the RECORD that inscription. It is there in marble that will live longer than what we may say here, probably, and it shows his breadth of character, his love for his fellow men, his patriotism, and his statesmanship. I quote that inscription, as follows:

KENTUCKY MONUMENT.

In the Chickamauga National Park, dedicated May 7, 1899. The words are from a message of former Gov. WILLIAM O. BRADLEY:

"As we are united in life, and they united in death, let one monument perpetuate their deeds, and one people, forgetful of all asperities, forever hold in grateful remembrance all the glories of that terrible conflict which made all men free and retained every star on the Nation's flag."

Kentucky was divided in the Civil War. Many of her sons fought in the Northern Army, and many in the Southern; and there were no braver soldiers on either side. Senator BRADLEY cast his fortunes with the side of the North.

Senator BRADLEY was great of soul. He was full of music, poetry, and song. I have noticed him when at times he would wander from the Republican cloakroom into the Democratic cloakroom, where he was always a welcome visitor. He invariably enlivened us with his humor, his delightful anecdotes, and his very interesting reminiscences. He was a man of humor, of wit, and of true eloquence. I have heard him at times upon the floor when he showed that he was an orator equal to any in this Chamber. I judge that not only by his eloquence, but by his logic and the systematic way in which he always had his subject arranged. He always commanded the closest attention of the Senate.

I say, Mr. President, that I loved him because he was close to me. We were associated together frequently. I served upon committees with him. I remember the delightful entertainments, in old Kentucky style, which he occasionally gave to his friends, and I was always one of his guests. They were indeed feasts of reason and joy to the hearts of all. He loved his friends. He loved little children. He loved the people of his State, and served them faithfully and well. He passes into the great beyond beloved by all his colleagues, and his people greatly mourn his sad departure. I trust that when he passed over the river he met his "Pilot face to face."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senate of the United States to-day pays tribute to the memory of one of Kentucky's noblest and most gifted sons, the late Senator WILLIAM O'CONNELL BRADLEY, of whom it may well be said, in the words of Byron:

Thy days are done; thy fame begun;
Thy country's strains record
The triumphs of her chosen son.

No history of Kentucky will be true to the facts unless the life and character of Senator WILLIAM O. BRADLEY play an important part. In every sphere of public and private activity the luster of nobility of character and force possessed by this remarkable American entered.

He was born near Lancaster, Ky., March 18, 1847, the only son of Robert M. and Ellen Totten Bradley. His father was one of Kentucky's greatest lawyers. The Civil War wrecked the father financially, and the son at the age of 14 ceased to attend school and ran away from home, joined the Union Army, first as recruiting officer in Pulaski County, and later as a private soldier at Louisville; but on account of his youthfulness he was taken from the Army by his father on each occasion. He entered the law office of his distinguished father and became so well qualified to practice that at the age of 18, by special act of the General Assembly of Kentucky, he was licensed to practice before the courts of Kentucky, and rapidly rose in the profession until he was foremost among the leading lawyers of that great State.

He entered politics in 1869, and the following year was elected prosecuting attorney. In 1884 President Arthur selected him to prosecute the "star-route" cases, but it is said that the Attorney General denied a full prosecution and he withdrew from the case. He was the first Republican ever elected Governor of Kentucky. He was a familiar figure in every Republican national convention for a quarter of a century. In February, 1908, he was elected to the United States Senate for the term ending March 3, 1915.

He received the degree of LL. D. from the Kentucky University. He was renowned from one end of the country to the other as an orator of marked ability. Many honors were conferred upon him by the people of Kentucky; indeed, so numerous were they that it would become tiresome for me to mention them all.

Few Kentuckians ever lived a life so filled to the brim with public honors as was his, or perhaps gained a higher place in the esteem of their fellow citizens. These honors were not attained by accident of birth, but by his eloquence, his logic, his energy, his personal magnetism and unquestionable honesty. His knowledge of our country's needs, his broad, dispassionate view of all public questions, his conservatism and his rare legal ability did much for the Nation and won for him a place among the great men of our times.

I count as one of the great pleasures of my life the acquaintance and friendship of Senator BRADLEY. How I enjoyed his association, how he enjoyed his visits to my home, how my children looked forward to his coming to spend the evening with them. The hours so spent were ones never to be forgotten. He never tired of singing the praises of the splendid qualities and noble characteristics of the people of the South, and would always remind my children that their grandfather, Abraham Owen Smoot, was born in the blue-grass country of Kentucky, in sweet Owen County, a country God always smiles upon.

It was next to impossible for anyone to resist the charm of his old-time manners, plainly visible in their exquisite taste and homely kindliness, showing no distinction of social caste or of age. He was free and generous to a fault. He never was so happy as when he was making others happy. There was something inspiring about the friendship he bore for those who were near to him. He possessed the gift of a perfect hospitality, and I doubt whether a man ever lived who exercised it with more graciousness. This can be testified to by nearly every Senator who occupied a seat in this body during the short service of Senator BRADLEY in the Senate. In addition to the happy gift as a matchless host he possessed the happy faculty of telling a story in such a way that gave his hearers a lasting impression of the point he wished to illustrate. Many of his stories were based upon great events in the history of our country. I suggested to him a short time before his death that he should select and have published his best stories, as I was confident they would prove a great benefit to the American people. I suggested this same thing to the late Senator Taylor, of Tennessee, only one week before his death. Senators BRADLEY and Taylor were among the most gifted story tellers of our country.

A man may possess all the gifts and qualifications that Senator BRADLEY possessed and still not be personally popular with the masses. Not so in his case. No man was easier to approach, and at all times he was willing to place himself upon a par with the humblest of his constituents with whom he came in contact. He was the idol of a large portion of the people of Kentucky. There was one political virtue which he always adhered to, and that was gratitude to his friends. He never used man to further his ambitions and then sacrifice him when occasion demanded it. He was true to those who served him. In most of the political contests in Kentucky he was the center of the battle and the enemy always directed their criticisms toward him. Defeat never dismayed nor did reverses discourage him. He was a faithful friend, a brilliant lawyer, a fearless and painstaking public servant. Thus he lived and thus he died. God was good to him in giving him a combination of virtues and talents seldom given to man, and rarely when given do they work in harmony as in the life of Senator BRADLEY.

He was no demagogue, but at all times a loyal advocate and an outspoken champion of the principles for which he stood. No selfish ambition ever kept him silent or made him swerve from his duty to his people. His honesty was known, admired, and esteemed throughout the length and breadth of the country. He was earnest, diligent, and faithful to every trust reposed in him. His clean life and character, without a stain, are his best monument.

Upon his deathbed and during the last two hours of his life he exerted all the power at his command in delivering a speech upon national questions as if he were standing in his place in the Senate Chamber. His last words spoken in this life were delivered as if answering an interruption by a fellow Senator, as follows: "I can not yield to the Senator; my time is limited." No further word was said; no further struggle for life ensued. Senator BRADLEY was dead.

His life's work is over, his remains rest beneath the sod of his beloved Kentucky. He is not dead, but sleepeth, his soul having passed on to Paradise to continue his work in connection with his Maker, for—

Death's but a path that must be trod
If man would ever pass to God.

I feel assured from his private life and public career that Senator BRADLEY, so true, so patriotic, so honorable, has passed into a brighter and happier existence in the great beyond.

In the silence of the receding world he heard the great waves breaking on a farther shore and felt upon his wasted brow the breath of the eternal morning.

Mr. BECKHAM. Mr. President, since I came to the Senate some months ago as a successor to the late Senator BRADLEY, I have heard many Senators who served with him speak of him in terms of kindness and of pleasant recollection of his genial and attractive personality. His popularity as a Member of the Senate seems to have been well established and his death brought genuine sorrow to his associates here, as it did to his many friends and admirers in Kentucky. This has not been surprising to me, for, in an acquaintance with him of about 20 years I came to know him well and to appreciate not only his ability as a leader of men, but also the charm of manner and personal magnetism by which he bound people to him in devoted friendship and achieved remarkable success in his political and professional life.

He was a natural leader; his influence over his followers was extraordinary, and those who opposed him always knew that they had a foeman worthy of their steel. Upon the stump or at the bar he possessed a forcible and persuasive style of oratory. As a debater he was ready, quick, and formidable. But at the same time he was courteous and fair to his opponents.

It was chiefly through his skillful leadership and power as an orator that his party won its first victory in Kentucky. In that year of 1895 he was the nominee of his party for governor. He saw with keen delight the division and dissension within the ranks of the Democratic Party; he played upon and aggravated those differences with a master's hand; and through the divided sea of Democracy he led his minority forces toward the promised land of victory with an adroitness and skill that even his opponents had to admire.

Owing to unusual conditions prevailing in the State at that time, his four years' service in that office was not, in my opinion, congenial or agreeable to him. Of an impulsive and generous nature he did not possess that quality of patience nor that poise of temperament so essential to one in a high executive position. He was better equipped for service in a legislative assembly than in the office of governor, just as he was far more successful as an advocate at the bar than he would have been as a judge on the bench. He found, I imagine, his most congenial service in the Senate, where he is so kindly and pleasantly remembered by those who served with him.

My acquaintance and relations with Senator BRADLEY for 20 years were unique and peculiar. During that turbulent period of political conditions in Kentucky, he and I were always on opposite sides. While he was governor, and I was a member of the legislature, and at one session speaker of the house, I was not in accord with his administration; and then when I was governor, after him, I never heard of his giving expression to any extravagant praises of my administration. In the session of the general assembly of 1908 he and I were the opposing candidates of our respective parties for the United States Senatorship, and he was elected.

Our political differences were wide and fundamental. We differed upon those issues which divided the two great political parties, and we differed also upon those issues which in recent years in our State have caused divisions within each party. Sometimes in the heat of one of those overheated campaigns which we occasionally have in Kentucky he and I may have said things about each other a little harsher than we would have said in calmer moments.

And yet, Mr. President, with all of these political differences and rivalries between us, he and I always preserved the most cordial and friendly personal relations. The intensity of campaign contests between us may have, at times, temporarily strained, but they never broke those relations between us. I always found him a courteous and knightly antagonist. He was a manly and courageous fighter. He knew well how to deal blows and he knew equally well how to receive them. In his home, where I was sometimes a guest, he was a genial and hospitable host.

In the many discouraging and disappointing features of political life, it is always refreshing to one who takes an active part in it, to meet on terms of generous consideration and of mutual respect those who differ with him and who recognize the wise and salutary principle that the weapons of political warfare shall be laid aside in all other relations among men. The line that divides political parties in their differing ideas of governmental policies should never appear in the social affairs of the people, nor in their broader responsibilities and obligations as citizens of this Republic. Firmness of conviction is not diminished by a due respect for the opinion of those who differ with us.

It is to the great credit and honor of the United States Senate that in no other body of men on earth is that principle of respect for the opinions of others more constantly regarded and practiced. The aisle which divides this chamber is not like the international boundary line between two unfriendly nations. It simply represents certain, or sometimes uncertain, differences of opinion between us as to what is the best for our common country, all of us equally interested in its welfare and in the prosperity and happiness of its one hundred millions of people.

Senator BRADLEY had the proper conception of this idea in his public career, and it was illustrated in the fact that his death was deeply mourned upon both sides of this chamber, regardless of political divisions.

In his death the State of Kentucky lost one of its more interesting and forceful leaders of the past generation, and the many thousands of his friends and admirers there join with us to-day in paying tribute to his memory.

Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the late Senator BRADLEY, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the Chair). The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kentucky.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 53 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, June 26, 1916, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, June 24, 1916.

The House met at 10.30 a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father of light, life, truth, justice, love, liberty, Thy blessing, we beseech Thee, attend us; that we may be guided by Thy wisdom, upheld by Thy power, inspired by real patriotism, that every legislative act may be in full accord with the eternal fitness of things; that even-handed justice may be meted out to every citizen; that our national and international policies may be to safeguard our rights and further the genius of our Republic; that kindness, with firmness, may characterize our acts at home and abroad. Let the everlasting arms be about the parents, kindred, and friends of those who have been sacrificed on the altar of our country in the recent conflict. Guide and protect our soldiers in their efforts to uphold and sustain justice and liberty. And Thine be the praise, in His name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

HERBERT C. HOOVER.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an article appreciative of the work of Mr. Herbert C. Hoover, a Californian, who is at the head of the Belgian relief.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner stated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ORDINANCE OF 1787.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein an address delivered by Hon. Addison C. Harris, of Indiana, upon the question of whether the ordinance of 1787 is in force in the five States that were carved out of the Northwest Territory.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner stated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 15836, the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill, with Mr. HAY in the chair.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for a moment to return to the item relative to the pay of guards at the Leavenworth Penitentiary.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, it was understood that the gentleman could offer his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I understand that any amendment looking to an increase in the pay of the guards at the Leavenworth Penitentiary is subject to a point of order, and that a point of order has already been made and sustained to a similar amendment just offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] in behalf of the guards at the Atlanta Penitentiary. I want to call attention, however, to a few facts with reference to the pay of the guards at these institutions. I was in hopes that the committee would take into consideration that these men are performing a very hazardous class of labor and one which is poorly recompensed by the Government. These men are receiving $70 a month for their work, and it is interesting to note what the States are paying for like services. The State of Montana pays the guards at its penitentiaries $100 a month and fuel. The State of Massachusetts pays $100 a month and house rent; Colorado, $90 a month and house rent; California, $90 a month and house rent; New York, $90 a month and house rent; Utah, $85 a month and house rent; and Ohio, Connecticut, Illinois, Nebraska, and Kansas are all paying more, together with considerable allowances of house rent, uniforms, and things of that kind.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD], who is likewise interested in the same item for his institution, and I appeared before the Committee on Appropriations. We were somewhat encouraged by the attitude of the subcommittee, which stated that at some future time it hoped to take up the matter of raising the salaries of a great many of these underpaid employees of the Government covered by the sundry civil appropriation bill. I hoped that the committee would act this year strictly on the merits of the proposition of increasing the pay of the guards. I only regret that it will not be reached this year by the committee. The hazardous nature of this work is but little understood by Members of the House. At Leavenworth not a year passes that some of these guards are not either killed or injured in the performance of their duties.

There is a greater risk and mortality among those guards than there is among the same number of men in the Regular Army in active service. Just a few months ago, while in the performance of his duty, one of the guards at Leavenworth was killed and two or three more have been wounded by attacks of convicts; and owing to the hazardous nature of the work, it is just and proper that they should receive greater compensation than $70 a month. I trust that the committee and the House at the first opportunity will give the matter consideration and that this bill may be amended so as to give relief this year instead of waiting for another session of Congress.

As compared with the flat pay of $70 per month paid by the Federal Government to guards at the United States penitentiary at Leavenworth, the House will readily see the necessity of increasing the pay of these men by glancing over this table of rates paid in some of the State penal institutions:

Montana: $100 and fuel.
Massachuretts: $100 and house rent
Colorado: $90 and house rent.
California: $90 and house rent.
New York: $90 and house rent.
Utah: $85 and house rent.
Ohio: $75 and house rent.
Connecticut: $75.
Illinois: $60 to $70 and full maintenance.
Illinois Reformatory: $50 to $65 and full maintenance.
Ohio Reformatory: $75 ten years ago.
Nebraska: $50 to $55 and full maintenance.
Kansas. $56.50 to $66.60, with free uniforms, 6 tons of coal, ice at 75 cents per ton, excess coal at $1 per ton, and State houses at $4 per month.

As one of these guards well says:

These are all the figures I have at present that I can say are correct or nearly so. They are, however, sufficient to show that we receive less than guards at State prisons, for we have nothing free, not even our uniforms. Some of the States have an 8-hour system and 6 days a week, while we have none of these. Some State institutions have one guard for every 10 men, while we have about 25 men to each guard, and when the three shifts are considered each guard averages about 75 men. This does not take into consideration those guards on the walls, which would raise the average to about 85 men for each guard. This makes the position more hazardous, requires more work, and the exercise of cooler judgment. There is not a crew of more loyal, competent, and intelligent guards anywhere; in fact, the Government requires of us a greater degree of intelligence and efficiency than any of the States.

We take the position that there should be some sort of automatic provision for increase based on tenure. This is the complement of merit of the civil-service method, and is in use in other branches of the civil service. We also take the position that having passed the examination and having successfully weathered the probationary period, we are entitled to an automatic increase; if not, then we are really not entitled to the place, for what man in private life does not reward the faithful employee who has been efficient, loyal, and trustworthy?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, it is true that the committee gave a hearing upon this matter to the gentleman from Kansas and two or three others who appeared before the committee, and the committee was impressed by the arguments made. In view of the present cost of living, and in view of the character of the service rendered, the hours of service, these salaries are lower than they should be. There should be an increase, in my opinion; but that is also true with regard to many Government employees, particularly those receiving the smaller salaries. Many of these salaries were fixed many years ago, when the cost of living was much less than it is now, and in many cases similar employees paid by States or by private individuals have been advanced in pay, while the pay of these Government employees has continued the same for a great many years. The committee came to the conclusion that under circumstances as they now exist, owing to the condition of the Public Treasury, the difficulty of raising revenues to pay the increased appropriations of the Government—at least a majority of the committee did—that they could not at this time provide any general increase of these salaries. There are practically no increases of salaries carried in the bill, or but very few.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Did the committee give any consideration to the much-merited and much-needed increase of salaries for the custodians of public buildings——

Mr. MONDELL. It did.

Mr. STAFFORD. Who are receiving virtually starvation wages, and have been for a number of years past?

Mr. MONDELL. As one member of the committee, I think the small salaries of some of the custodians constitute a scandal. We are not at all justified in continuing the small compensation paid these people.

Mr. STAFFORD. What relief does the gentleman hold out to these employees, who have been petitioning Congress these many years for increases in salary, and nothing yet has been done for them?

Mr. MONDELL. A Republican administration is the hope that I hold out to them—a Republican administration which we hope will reduce the cost of living; or if that shall not be possible under world and national conditions, then an administration of affairs that will bring sufficient revenue so that we can, without burdening the people, increase these salaries and compensations. That is all the hope that I can hold out to them at the present time, in view of the attitude of the majority of the committee and Congress.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield——

Mr. MONDELL. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. To me this question should not be considered as a partisan one.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, I am not considering it as a partisan question, understand; I am considering it as a question of justice. I regret that it is not possible to do these people justice now.

Mr. STAFFORD. In the legislative committee framing the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill our subcommittee was very solicitous to provide for the underpaid employee. Here is another subcommittee where it is acknowledged, and has been acknowledged for years past, that the employees throughout the country who are ridiculously underpaid, with no relief whatever given or promised them except the vague hope of the indefinite future.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, it is not a vague hope, I will say to my friend. It is a very confident hope, the hope of a change of administration under which the revenues of the Government will be such, derived from such sources, not burdensome to the people, that we can do justice to these underpaid servants of the people. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting some facts in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I am afraid the expectation of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] about a Republican administration will be disappointed, but if he were unfortunately to succeed in that ambition I know that his ambition for a better fiscal system will be disappointed, because I recall that when the Sixty-first Congress opened it was a Republican Congress under a Republican President. The very first thing that confronted us was a deficit in the Treasury. That deficit had occurred under the Dingley tariff bill which up to that time was the highest tariff bill we had ever had.

It was not very long after that until we passed the Payne-Aldrich bill, and by that time the deficit under that particular kind of a method of raising revenues had grown so grievous that they adopted a portion of the Democratic method of raising revenue and put a tax upon the incomes of corporations, thereby confessing that a tariff tax, of which they were so fond of bragging, was utterly inadequate to raise the revenue even under that particular administration. Of course the needs of the country were much less then than at the present time. But now they have a candidate for President who undertook to defeat an amendment to the Federal Constitution permitting a general income tax. If he had been successful, as fortunately he was not, they would have to rely now entirely upon a tariff tax and a tax upon excises and corporations, but fortunately the country is not in that situation. The country is in the situation now where the revenues from the income tax were more than $71,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914; $80,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915; and $110,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916. The greater part of that revenue did not exist under the Payne bill; none of it existed under the Dingley bill. Under the revenue law that will be brought in here shortly by the Democratic Committee on Ways and Means the income tax will be still further enlarged and extended over sources of incomes which have been escaping taxation, and by a further investigation of the Treasury the loopholes will be closed up, and a bill will be brought in which with the increasing prosperity of the country will produce a still larger income tax, and therefore a great many of the gentleman's fears will disappear.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes, in a minute; but I want to suggest to the gentleman that if his candidate for President is really sincere in this opposition to the income tax, he put his platform on that proposition for the repeal of all income taxes and let the people decide as to this fiscal question as to whether they prefer the fiscal system of the Sixty-first Congress or whether they prefer the fiscal system of the Wilson administration. Now I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. In the midst of this glorious condition—which exists, in fact, only in the mind of the gentleman from Missouri—of an overflowing Treasury and abundant prosperity—admitting, however, for the sake of argument, it does exist—under these circumstances, in view of the cost of living being higher than it ever has been in the history of the country, why did not the gentleman approve the increasing of the salaries of these low-paid Government officials provided for in this bill?

Mr. BORLAND. I need not remind my colleague that our committee has raised the salaries of the low-paid employees.

Mr. STAFFORD. Where?

Mr. BORLAND. In the Library, if I may just——

Mr. STAFFORD. That is not the gentleman's committee; that is the legislative committee. The gentleman's committee has not done anything toward raising the salaries of these low-paid men.

Mr. BORLAND. I am glad to take some little credit. Where we found them low paid, we increased them in some instances.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] can not escape the responsibility by claiming that he has made provision for increasing the low-paid officials provided in this bill, as such is not the fact. It is true another subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, of which I have the honor to be a member, did provide for increasing the lower-paid officials of the Government, because we found it was not right for persons engaged in the departments in Washington to be employed at starvation wages, or approaching starvation wages, while confronted with the high cost of living.

But here we have large numbers of employees throughout the country who have no voice at the National Capital except through their Representatives, and who pray every year for increases. Custodians of public buildings receive the paltry sum of $50 a month or $60 a month, and yet nothing has been done by this subcommittee. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] can not come in here and use a cloak to excuse him for his default by saying the committee has done something when it has done naught. The time has come when these employees should be considered and something should be done for increasing their salaries. There is no excuse because the revenues of the Government are not sufficient for not increasing the salaries to a reasonable compensation of these employees, who have been long in the service and deserve increase of salary. They have not pressed me to make any special appeal in the matter, but it has been called to my attention from time to time, and I think that this committee should make some recommendation and provide soon some fair increase of salary, so that these married men employed in the custodian work at our public buildings can at least have a living wage.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I wish a minute. There is a lot of mysterious talk going on here about the subcommittee doing this and the subcommittee doing that. The bills of the Committee on Appropriations are the work of the Committee on Appropriations and carry the policy of the committee. The gentlemen are dreaming when they talk about subcommittees formulating policies one way or the other. We have done everything that can be reasonably expected, and much more than ever was done when the gentleman's party was in power.

With those few observations, I hope we can proceed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Point Vincente, Cal., Light Station: For establishing a light and fog-signal station at Point Vincente, Cal., $80,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. Has this light station been authorized?

Mr. FITZGERALD. All of the lighthouse stations are authorized by law. This particular item was authorized in the act of March 3, 1915.

The Clerk read as follows:

LIGHTHOUSE SERVICE.

General expenses: For supplies, repairs, maintenance, and incidental expenses of lighthouses and other lights, beacons, buoyage, fog signals, lighting of rivers heretofore authorized to be lighted, light vessels, other aids to navigation, and lighthouse tenders, including the establishment, repair, and improvement of beacons and day marks and purchase of land for same; purchase and maintenance of one motor cycle for service in the Hawaiian Islands; establishment of post lights, buoys, submarine signals, and fog signals; establishment of oil or carbide houses, not to exceed $10,000: Provided, That any oil or carbide house erected hereunder shall not exceed $550 in cost; construction of necessary outbuildings at a cost not exceeding $200 at any one light station in any fiscal year; improvement of grounds and buildings connected with light stations and depots; wages of laborers attending post lights; temporary employees and field force while engaged on works of general repair and maintenance, and laborers and mechanics at lighthouse depots; rations and provisions or commutation thereof for keepers of lighthouses, officers and crews of light vessels and tenders, and officials and other authorized persons of the Lighthouse Service on duty on board of such tenders or vessels, and money accruing from commutation for rations and provisions for the above-named persons on board of tenders and light vessels may be paid on proper vouchers to the person having charge of the mess of such vessel; reimbursement under rules prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce of keepers of light stations and masters of light vessels and of lighthouse tenders for rations and provisions and clothing furnished shipwrecked persons who may be temporarily provided for by them, not exceeding in all $5,000 in any fiscal year; fuel and rent of quarters where necessary for keepers of lighthouses; purchase of land sites for fog signals; rent of necessary ground for all such lights and beacons as are for temporary use or to mark changeable channels and which, in consequence, can not be made permanent; rent of offices, depots, and wharves; traveling expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914; mileage; library books for light stations and vessels, and technical books and periodicals not exceeding $1,000; all other contingent expenses of district offices and depots; and not exceeding $10,000 for contingent expenses of the offices of the Bureau of Lighthouses in Washington, $2,790,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, just for the purpose of remarking in passing that when the Agricultural appropriation bill was before the House, some of the distinguished members of the Committee on Appropriations jumped all over a lot of items because there were such large amounts appropriated in lump sums, though I do not recall any items of lump-sum appropriations that amounted to so much as $2,790,000, which is the lump-sum item of this appropriation, and which covers nearly everything under the sun in the Lighthouse Service. I do not mean to complain, but just to remind them that people in glass houses ought to be careful about throwing stones.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We can not build Rome in a day. We are doing it gradually and by degrees. We will get this in such shape as to satisfy both the gentleman and myself and any obtrusive critic who may comment on the situation.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office force: Chief accountant, $2,500; chief of division of library and archieves, $1,800; clerk to superintendent, $1,800; clerks—3 at $1,800 each, 3 at $1,650 each, 4 at $1,400 each, 8 at $1,200 each, 5 at $1,000 each, 10 at $900 each, 6 at $720 each.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the language in line 24, after the word "force," the words "chief accountant," on page 152. The point of order is that it is a change of existing law. The designation of this officer carried in the law is "disbursing agent." I make the point of order against the words "chief accountant."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by inserting after the words "office force," the words "disbursing officer."

Mr. HOWARD. Is not the old language "disbursing agent"? I think it is.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is "disbursing agent."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after "office force," in line 24, the words "disbursing agent."

The Clerk read as follows:

Topographic and hydrographic draftsmen: 2 at $2,400 each, 3 at $2,200 each, 3 at $2,000 each, 3 at $1,800 each, 3 at $1,600 each, 3 at $1,400 each, 3 at $1,200 each, 2 at $1,000 each, copyist draftsman, $1,000.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, in line 3, page 153, after the words "hydrographic draftsmen," I move to amend by inserting "1 at $2,500."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 153, in line 3, after the word "draftsmen," by inserting "1 at $2,500."

Mr. FITZGERALD. I reserve a point of order on that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a statement as briefly as I can about a condition that has been brought to my attention by some of my own constituents as well as by Members of the House, and that has arisen since the Committee on Appropriations has acted on this particular item. The demand for nautical charts has increased by leaps and bounds since the unusual activity in shipping. Chambers of commerce of different seaport cities throughout the country have been insistent in their demands upon the Hydrographic Office for charts. It may be an astounding fact to present to this House, but as a matter of fact there are 170 nautical charts out of print. They can not be obtained by navigators, and ships to-day are going to sea without any revised nautical charts. In other words, it is like an engineer on a railroad leaving a terminal without any orders on which to run. They do not know anything about the shifting sands and shoals, and in a great many cases the Pacific coast has not been surveyed at all. Now, let me briefly present to the——

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. How often are these nautical charts revised?

Mr. HOWARD. As often as any change is necessary for the safe navigation of ships occasioned by changes in shoals, and so forth. Now, then, I want to state it briefly, and I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to put into the RECORD certain evidence to sustain the position taken by the department.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, that will be done.

Mr. HOWARD. In the first place, there are 30,000 more nautical charts ordered this year than during the previous fiscal year, representing 100,000 more impressions by printing presses. There are 170 charts now out of print that are unobtainable by masters of vessels, or about 25 per cent of the entire number issued by the Coast and Geodetic Survey. There are 6,000 orders unfilled, and complaints have been received from steamship companies, individual owners of vessels, chambers of commerce, and so forth, and more complaints are coming in each day.

The public pays for those charts and the money goes back into the United States Treasury. Every dollar that is expended by this department in making these charts is reimbursed to the Government by the payment in full of a reasonable price for the charts furnished. The draftsmen and printers are working overtime. Men in the printing section are underpaid and receive no pay for continued overtime work. The cost of paper has risen from 16 cents to 22½ cents per pound. Paper will cost about $20,000 during the fiscal year 1917, as against $12,000 in 1916.

The items asked for in the amendment are necessary to correct this condition. The first essential for the safety of our Navy and merchant marine, thereby protecting human life and commerce, is a nautical chart, and they can not be furnished in the numbers required under the present appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for just a minute or two more. Then I will not ask for any more time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOWARD. Now, here is a general summary of the condition as it actually exists. As I stated in the outset, as a member of the committee it is somewhat embarrassing to me to offer amendments to this bill, but a portion of the necessity has arisen since this bill was made up. I think the condition is a serious one, and I think it will not only appeal to the chairman of the committee, but also to every other gentleman of this House, that if such a condition exists—and the condition is stated to exist by the chief in charge of this bureau—then we ought to correct it. The Government is out of pocket nothing. It is reimbursed for these charts.

Now, to recapitulate: There is a 25 per cent increase in the demand for these charts over previous years. There is a 50 per cent increase in the impressions. There is a 37½ per cent increase in the cost of the paper, and no provision is made for additional labor and other funds for materials.

Now, just the other day, along the Pacific coast, near the city of Seattle, or north of the city of Seattle, a ship ran afoul of an uncharted rock. Forty-one lives were lost. The vessel itself was lost, and I am informed by the chief of this bureau that if that vessel had had a proper chart that occurrence would not have happened.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What difference would it have made if the rock was uncharted?

Mr. HOWARD. The proposition is this: The appropriation had been cut; no provision had been made for launches to carry on the wire drag work in that field. The department claims—and from the showing that is made I am satisfied it is true—that the appropriations are not sufficient to carry on in an efficient manner this work.

Now, for instance, you take the Gedney, the only ship that the Coast and Geodetic Survey has. That ship went to sea for six years after it had been condemned by our expert engineers as being unsafe, and just a few weeks ago that vessel was sold, and I think it brought the enormous sum of about $8,000 or $10,000 for junk.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has again expired.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. That was too much.

Mr. HOWARD. I think it was sold as junk. Under the permission granted, Mr. Chairman, I submit the following as a part of my remarks:

PETITION.

The undersigned shipowners, ship agents, ship brokers, pilots, and others interested in maritime affairs are seriously disturbed over the failure in the sundry civil appropriation bill to provide adequate funds to enable the Coast and Geodetic Survey to properly equip itself for continuing the important work of surveying and charting the coastal waters of the country, also Alaska, Hawaiian Islands, Philippine Islands, and Porto Rico, in order to meet the demands of our enlarging American merchant marine for a sufficient supply of nautical charts which are an absolute necessity for the protection of commerce and life. Realizing the seriousness of this situation, we hereby petition the Boston Chamber of Commerce to request the New England Senators and Representatives in Congress to urge the incorporation in the sundry civil appropriation bill of an amendment to provide the bureau with the necessary funds (1) to meet the demands of the maritime interests for charts; (2) to purchase a sufficient number of launches to be used for wire-drag work; (3) to provide the bureau with a suitable vessel to replace the one formerly engaged in charting the Alaskan coast.

MAY 25, 1916.

To the executive committee and board of directors:

The attention of the committee on maritime affairs has been called to a deplorable condition in the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey Bureau as a result of insufficient funds to properly carry on the work of this important department of the Government service.

A petition signed by a large number of shipowners, ship agents, and others interested in maritime affairs, has been filed with the committee asking that the chamber request our Senators and Representatives in Congress to urge the adoption of an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill which will provide the bureau with the necessary funds (1) to meet the demands of the maritime interests for important charts; (2) to purchase five launches to be used for wire-dredge work along the coast; and (3) to provide the bureau with a suitable vessel to replace the one formerly engaged in charting the Alaskan coast which was condemned last year and had to be abandoned.

The great increase in American shipping during the past two years has greatly increased the demand for nautical charts, and the demand will steadily increase with the growth of our merchant marine. It is an absolute necessity for the protection of life and commerce that vessels should be provided with these guides to navigation. During the present year 30,000 more of these charts have been ordered than in former years. As a result the supply of some of the charts has been entirely exhausted. In fact, many vessels sailing from Boston have been obliged to leave port without Government charts, and have had to rely on their old charts, which, in most cases, are incorrect. This is a serious matter.

The demands of the Navy Department for charts for naval vessels draw heavily upon the output of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and are given first consideration. It is, therefore, obvious that the shortage in charts falls largely upon the owners of vessels engaged in regular commerce.

If the bureau is to keep pace with the demand for charts, it is absolutely necessary that (a) there should be an increase in the office force at Washington, which, although now working overtime, is unable to keep up with the demand, and (b) an increase in the appropriation for the purchase of chart paper and for modern presses to take the place of the antiquated hand presses now used.

If the present staff is compelled to work overtime indefinitely, the better class of the employees will be driven to other branches of the Government service where overtime work is not continually required, or to positions outside the Government service. The bureau would then be in a worse position than it is now, because chart work is of a very technical nature and a new draftsman must have considerable experience before he is able to do it correctly.

Provision should also be made for the employment of a number of additional draftsmen and lithographers to prepare and print the charts promptly.

The charts have to be prepared on a special and very durable kind of paper. The price of the paper has gone up nearly 50 per cent since the commencement of the European war, and the appropriation in the past has been so small that the bureau has been obliged year by year to reduce the supply of "seasoned" paper, and it is now compelled to use practically all "green" paper. It is very essential that the paper should be "seasoned," for if it is used when "green," it is liable to contract or expand and thus make the charts inaccurate, which is a very serious matter.

The present presses upon which this work is done are antiquated and insufficient to meet the present demands. It is necessary, if the charts are to be printed with the necessary rapidity, that money be provided for a new, modern type two-color lithographic printing press to replace some of the hand presses now in use. This would also mean a substantial reduction in the cost of printing the charts, for the cost of printing four charts on a modern type two-color press is the same as the cost of printing one on the present antiquated hand presses.

The ridiculousness of the whole situation with reference to the charts is shown by the fact that the printed charts are sold for the cost of paper and printing.

Certain portions of our coast constitute veritable ocean graveyards because of submerged rocks. The entire coast of Massachusetts, and, in fact, all the New England coast, must be wire-dragged in order to insure the safety of human life and commerce. At the rate at which the department has been able to do this work, owing to the inadequate appropriations provided, it will take many years to complete it, whereas the work ought to be done promptly. The appropriation for the Coast and Geodetic Survey Bureau heretofore has not been sufficient to permit the purchase of launches for wire-drag work and as a result the bureau has been forced to hire launches each summer at a rental out of proportion to the value of the launch. In many cases the entire superstructure has had to be changed in order to adapt it to the needs of the bureau and when the season is over the superstructure must be removed so that the launches may be placed in their former condition, to be returned to the owners—an expensive method of conducting the department.

The importance of this wire-drag work, which, with great accuracy and at a very small cost, discovers all obstructions in the territory dragged, is shown by the fact that recently at a point close to the entrance to the main shipping channel at Boston Harbor a mass of rock was discovered over which there were only 28 feet of water, whereas the old chart gave a depth of 43 feet. One such hidden obstruction in an important channel is likely to cause a loss to shipping and a loss of life greater than the expense of the annual upkeep of the entire bureau. Not more than three weeks before this obstruction was discovered a United States battleship, costing nearly $10,000,000, came into Boston Harbor over this course, where the water was supposed to be over 40 feet deep, and had the good fortune to miss hitting this rock.

At present the bureau has no vessel with which to carry on the survey of the Alaska coast line that is capable of doing work outside of protected waters. Last year the vessel which was in use was condemned by the steamboat inspectors, and had to be abandoned. There is urgent need of an appropriation for a new vessel to replace the one condemned. In Alaska there are about 26,000 miles of coast line, only 3,000 miles of which have been surveyed, and as the only way to reach the ports of that country is by water, it follows that with 23,000 miles of shore line yet to be surveyed, it is very important that the survey work should be pushed.

In the past 15 years the average loss of vessels in Alaskan waters due to lack of charts has been 100 per cent a year more than the amount appropriated by the Government for survey work. The insurance premium on a vessel going to Alaska is very high because of the dangers encountered in using these waters, due to the failure of the Government to chart them. One vessel, costing $500,000, had to pay $100,000 insurance. The coastal waters of Alaska are becoming more and more important to the rest of the country. New England is dependent upon Alaska for about 75 per cent of the halibut which it consumes, and the fishing industry of that country is becoming of greater importance each year.

An amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill has been introduced by Senator JOHNSON of Maine, which would give the Coast and Geodetic Survey Bureau the necessary appropriations to enable it to properly equip itself to furnish the much-needed nautical charts, to purchase five launches to be used for wire-drag work, and to provide the bureau with a suitable vessel to replace the one formerly engaged in charting the Alaskan coast.

The committee on maritime affairs heartily indorses the petition received from the maritime interests and recommends that the chamber strongly urge our Senators and Representatives in Congress to use their best efforts to have the Johnson amendment or some similar amendment incorporated in the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Respectfully submitted.

Committee on Maritime Affairs.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the statement of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] shows how unsafe it is to rely upon information furnished by the bureau chiefs. I do not claim that I represent as large a maritime port as my colleague on the committee from Georgia, but I do represent a port of very considerable importance in the United States. I am somewhat in touch with the maritime interest in the port of New York, and I have not received a single complaint from any shipping concern as to inability to obtain all of the charts and post pilots and other literature and data to be obtained from this bureau.

The truth of the matter is that the heads of all the Government services——

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Oregon?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. SINNOTT. I have a statement from the head of that bureau——

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is speaking of the head of the bureau. I am talking about the men who use the charts——

Mr. SINNOTT. Stating that a vessel left New York and put in a request for 223 charts, and of the 223 charts they could supply only 64, because the others were out of print. Another ship leaving New York——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why do they not print them?

Mr. SINNOTT. Another ship wished 27 charts, and only 17 were supplied. That is from the head of the bureau.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will say the gentleman is speaking about information furnished by the head of the bureau. I am speaking about the fact that the maritime interests of the country have communicated with us in no way about this matter.

I know something about bureau chiefs and their requests and demands. I know that this bureau asked $21,000 two years ago for presses. My recollection is the capacity is such that in a week they could have turned out the entire year's output of charts from the bureau, and I was somewhat severely criticized because I was unwilling to supply a plant that in two weeks could do the entire year's work.

It is to be hoped that gentlemen, as they become acquainted with the bureau chiefs and Government officials who are anxious to extend and enlarge the jurisdiction and work of their bureaus, will not be stampeded by information coming from such sources alone. I assume—and it is not a violent assumption—that the Members of the House have some information upon some matters themselves, and in acting in their representative capacity they use that ordinary common sense as Members of Congress that it was necessary for them to use in order to become Members of Congress.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman from New York yield for just one moment?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. HOWARD. I do not know about the conditions existing in the gentleman's port, but I want to say to the gentleman that here is a petition sent to the Secretary of Commerce by the shipowners and the shippers, constituting about 95 per cent of that class of our citizens from the port of Boston.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I can get them from any port in the United States in the same way.

Mr. HOWARD. Stating the deplorable conditions of their shipping interests on account of their repeated demands upon the Coast and Geodetic Survey for these nautical charts and the inability of this department to furnish them.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I can get petitions from everybody in the shipping business if I go about it in the same way, and those petitions are never sent to me any more, because when they start up that sort of an agitation somebody who does not just know how these things are done makes the mistake of sending me the communication originating in the bureau—sent to him in order to have him write the letter. Now they have adopted the policy of not sending those things to me, because somebody may make the mistake of letting the cat out of the bag.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Why can they not furnish these charts to shipowners when they ask for them?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know. Why do they not print them?

Mr. MANN. That is what I am asking. Why do they not print them?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They say they are out of print. Why do they not print them?

Mr. MANN. They sell them, do they not?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. But that money is not reappropriated. They can not use it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Of course it is not reappropriated. This bureau has been anxious to have a permanent indefinite appropriation of all the receipts that it obtains from the sale of these charts, but it has not succeeded in obtaining that legislation, and is not likely to obtain it.

Mr. MANN. I hope not, but why do they not print them?

Mr. HOWARD. Because they have not the force or facilities to do it.

Mr. MANN. It does not take much force to print them.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman's proposed amendment is merely to promote one man.

Mr. HOWARD. No; it is to give them an additional employee.

Mr. FITZGERALD. To promote one man in the bureau by giving him $100 more than he is now receiving.

Mr. HOWARD. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I know, because I have investigated it, and I make the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman withhold his point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not want to get into a general discussion of this matter.

Mr. MONDELL. This is a rather important matter, and I should like to discuss it briefly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, I hope we can defer it to some other time. If we start a discussion of this matter here, it is going to take up a lot of time uselessly.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not think it takes up time uselessly to discuss a matter that is entitled to discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist on his point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Wait until I find out if it is going to take a whole lot of time. If it is, I shall insist on the point of order. Is there a general desire to be heard?

Mr. McARTHUR. I desire to be heard.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This is on an amendment to increase a salary $100. I shall have to insist on the point of order.

Mr. HOWARD. I should like to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia desires to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. HOWARD. I insist that this amendment is simply to provide an increase in the working force, one man additional in the bureau, that the number of employees is not fixed by the statute, and that this House under the law has a right to add a hundred employees, if it wants to do so, to meet the necessities of this particular bureau; that there is no fixed employment except as carried from year to year in the current appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I should like to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has sustained the point of order. The gentleman knows it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman knows nothing of the sort. In my opinion it is not subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The clerk will read.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. RAKER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13383) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917.

The message also announced that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

On June 21, 1916:

S. 4401. An act to conduct investigations and experiments for ameliorating the damage wrought to the fisheries by predacious fishes and aquatic animals.

On June 22, 1916:

S. J. Res. 47. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to sell skins taken from fur seals killed on the Pribilof Islands for food purposes;

S. 377. An act providing for the establishment of a term of the district court for the middle district of Tennessee at Winchester, Tenn.;

S. 142. An act for the relief of Mrs. George A. Miller;

S. 1326. An act for the relief of Vilhelm Torkildsen;

S. 1793. An act granting to the State of Kansas title to certain lands in said State for use as a game preserve;

S. 3861. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for the withdrawal from bond tax free of domestic alcohol when rendered unfit for beverage or liquid medicinal uses when mixed with suitable denaturing materials,'" approved March 2, 1907;

S. 4550. An act granting to the Portland, Vancouver, & Northern Railway Co. a license to cross the Vancouver Barracks Military Reservation at Vancouver, Wash.;

S. 4760. An act to authorize the change of name of the steamer Normania to William F. Stifel;

S. 5310. An act to authorize the county commissioners of Walla Walla and Franklin Counties, Wash., to construct a bridge across the Snake River between Pasco and Burbank;

S. 5805. An act permitting the Riverview Ferry Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Yellowstone River in the State of Montana;

S. 5841. An act to authorize the Perdido Bay Bridge & Ferry Co., a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Alabama, to construct a bridge over and across Perdido Bay from Lillian, Baldwin County, Ala., to Cummings Point, Escambia County, Fla.;

S. 5851. An act to extend the time for constructing a bridge across the Eastern Branch of the Elizabeth River in Virginia; and

S. 6041. An act granting the consent of Congress to Jackson County, Miss., to construct a bridge across Pascagoula River at or near Pascagoula, Miss.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Astronomical, geodetic, tidal, and miscellaneous computers: One $2,500, 2 at $2,200 each, 2 at $2,100 each, 2 at $2,000 each, 3 at $1,800 each, 3 at $1,600 each, 4 at $1,400 each, five at $1,200.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the gentleman from Georgia is going to offer these different amendments, and I am glad that he is, as he is a member of the committee. I want to refer to some of the statements that were made a few moments ago by the gentleman from New York, the chairman of the committee [Mr. FITZGERALD]. I do not know why these charts are not furnished. I know what the department says is the reason—and I have reason to believe—that they are not furnished. I call the attention of the gentleman from New York to this fact, that in a paper I received from Seattle this morning the statement is made that there are vessels now being held in the harbor because they can not get the charts that are required before sailing. That did not come from the department, and that was not inspired by any letter, so far as I know.

There is another matter that I presume the gentleman from Georgia will offer an amendment to correct; and while I am on my feet I want to call attention to it for a moment, because the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] referred to it.

The department says that the vessel Bear that was wrecked a few days ago on the Pacific coast in all probability was wrecked because of the fact that she did not have proper charts showing the currents and where that rock was located. I do not know whether that is true or not, but the department makes this statement, that if they could have an additional appropriation of $6,000 they could prepare charts that would tend to prevent some of these wrecks that have occurred on the Pacific coast. Take the case of the Valencia, that was wrecked out at the entrance of Juan de Fuca, when 115 lives were lost, one of the greatest tragedies that ever occurred on that ocean. The head of the department informs me that it was due to the fact that they did not have proper charts showing the currents in those waters, and that all that would be necessary to enable them to proceed with that work would be an addition of $6,000. If these statements are true, if it is a fact that these wrecks are occurring because Congress refuses to appropriate the small sum of $6,000, it is an outrage that words can not describe. I would like to have some information from the chairman of this committee, to know whether those statements are true or not. If what the department says is true, is it possible that we shall refuse to appropriate the small sum of six or seven thousand dollars, which may prevent these terrible wrecks?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, those statements are very much exaggerated. Last year we gave them six assistants, and we have increased the appropriation. We did not give them all they asked for, and nobody with the slightest modicum of sense would have done it on the statement made before the committee. It was a most absurd and ridiculous statement. The statements are exaggerated. Somebody imagines that if their peculiar views were suddenly adopted and put into effect the millennium would arrive; but it will not.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Now, if the gentleman will let me have some of my time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman asked me for information, and I am doing my best. I did not wish myself into the controversy. The gentleman stands there insisting that I shall give him information, and if he does not want it he should not ask for it. He ought not to stand there thundering at me when I am enlightening him——

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman yield? [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think my time has expired. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The gentleman says he is doing his best, but I am not satisfied with his best. I would like a little more specific information—and the gentleman can give it in his own time—as to whether or not this particular statement in regard to these charts is true, the specific statement being made to me by the head of the department that they do not have sufficient sums to continue the printing of the charts.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Whom does the gentleman mean when he says the "head of the department"?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Dr. E. Lester Jones.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Washington disturbs me, because I have heard him repudiate as unreliable statements relating to the Department of Commerce. I am surprised that he should allow the department to persuade him by any statements it can make that the situation is so serious as to cause the excitement that he displays to-day.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Oh, well, the things that I complain about in the Department of Commerce I am not talking about here. I am not taking their opinion on matters political, for I do not think that is their business. I do not think it is the business of the Department of Commerce to regulate the politics of the country. I may disagree with them on political matters.

Mr. SINNOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. In just a moment. I have never raised any question about the accuracy of information furnished by the Department of Commerce except politically. I am trying to find out something from the gentleman from New York, whether he thinks it is correct. The information I have is—and this is the specific information that comes to me—that Congress refuses to appropriate $6,000, and they do not have sufficient force in the Coast and Geodetic Survey to make these maps, and that if these ships had had these maps it would have prevented these wrecks. I say, if this is true, Congress is guilty of an inexcusable outrage if we refuse to make an appropriation for the amount that will furnish these maps that will give safety to the ships on the Pacific coast.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The appropriation for 1913 for field expenses for survey and resurvey on the Atlantic coast has been $65,000. This bill carries $90,000. For the surveys and necessary resurveys on the Pacific Ocean from 1913 until the end of 1915 the appropriation was $165,000. For the current year we give them $200,000, and this bill carries $225,000. This is in addition to some other small increases. We have dealt very liberally with them. We have not given them every dollar that they asked for, but we have given them increases of nearly 40 per cent in their field force and reasonable increases in their office force. I do not know what the particular $6,000 that the gentleman speaks of is for, but the committee endeavors to give them the money that will make the wire drag possible and utilize the vessels as long as they can. We did not give them the money to keep them going when they are to be out of commission. I think they have no cause for complaint of the provision that is made for them in this bill.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. What I am trying to do is to get some information.

Mr. SINNOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. SINNOTT. Some criticism was made a moment ago on account of information coming from Dr. Jones, the head of the bureau. On page 1153 of the hearings you will find that Secretary Redfield stated that they now have an order for a thousand charts that is unfilled, and that the demand for charts has increased in the last year from 207,000 to 364,000, or nearly 50 per cent.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Now, Mr. Chairman, I just want to say this much for Dr. Jones. I have known him ever since he has been in the department. He has been on the Pacific coast several times, and I know he has taken great interest in this work. I believe he is absolutely sincere in what he says. I am satisfied that he is not attempting to deceive anyone, and I am trying to find out the facts. Now, I will go back to the specific problem again. The statement I got from the department is—and they furnished the statement at my request; I asked Dr. Jones to give me all the information he could—and his specific statement is that they do not have sufficient maps showing these currents on the Pacific coast, and that the lack of having these maps has caused these wrecks.

I asked him about the Valencia, which was one of the most pathetic occurrences that ever happened upon the Pacific Ocean, and he said that was probably due to the fact that the captain of that vessel did not know these currents, and I asked him whether or not that could be remedied. He said it probably could have been, that this was one of the branches of work that they were pursuing. I asked him what was the trouble, and he said, "We do not have a sufficient amount of money to continue that work as it ought to be continued." I then inquired of him how much he needed, and he said a little over $6,000. I asked him again, to be specific, "If you are given that appropriation to do that work, can you furnish these charts showing these currents that will tend to prevent these wrecks," and he said it could be done, and it was his judgment that if they had had proper maps on the Valencia and on the Bear, those two wrecks would not have occurred. If that information is true, certainly there is no man in this House who wants to withhold that appropriation, and that is the particular item I am trying to bring to the attention of the committee at this time.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be recognized in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY]. In common with my colleague from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], I can say that the maritime interests of that port have not addressed to me one single communication in relation to this alleged dearth of charts. I do not want the statement of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] to go out uncontradicted as to the situation in relation to charts. When a man starts out with a new ship he gets a set of charts. Every week or so he gets from some one of the departments, not necessarily from the Coast and Geodetic Survey, information as to changes in conditions, and if he is a careful mariner, as most of them are, he makes a notation on his chart of the changes. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] says that if they had more money they could do more to investigate currents. Of course, that is so; and the House ought to realize that 200 years after we are all dead the Coast and Geodetic Survey, or its successor, will be investigating the currents on the different coasts of the United States.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I just want to suggest that a good many have already died because they have not been investigated.

Mr. BENNET. I am coming to that. It is very easy to say that if they had $6,000 they would have found out a particular change in a current. That may or may not be so. We have thousands of coast lines, and it is absolutely ridiculous to assume that if they had had this particular small sum they would have investigated that particular current off the western coast, and if they had done that they would have found it.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. NOLAN. Does the gentleman from New York think the average master mariner is competent to mark a chart where a mistake of one one-hundredth of an inch would throw his vessel off its course 50 miles?

Mr. BENNET. If the average master mariner can not make that indication on his chart, then he is not competent to proceed by chart where such a slight deviation would bring on a catastrophe, and he ought not, under the laws of the United States, to be in charge of a vessel of that class in waters such as the Pacific Ocean, with a license to navigate all oceans.

Mr. NOLAN. I would suggest to the gentleman that if he would investigate he would find that there is not one man in a hundred who is master of a ship who is competent to make the necessary changes on these charts that are so fine and minute, to keep himself right in navigating.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, possibly the gentleman and I are not experts, but I take the liberty of disagreeing with him as to that. And now as to these surveys: The port of New York is the largest and most populous port, from a seafaring standpoint, that there is in the United States, and ships have been going in and out of it for nearly 300 years, and yet it is only about 10 years since, off Pier No. 1, which is down off the Battery, where Fort Amsterdam was, they discovered what is known as a pinnacle rock, and they found that in the ordinary way—by a ship hitting it. These pinnacle rocks are all over our thousands of miles of coasts. It would take untold millions of dollars, hundreds of thousands of men, and ships that it would take years to construct to begin to make the thorough kind of survey that will disclose every rock. They have to take a wire rope, with two ships, and absolutely drag the bottom of the ocean in order to find the existence of all these pinnacle rocks. In relation to sand bars and things of that sort, which will wreck a ship as thoroughly as a pinnacle rock, not only do they have to do that in the beginning, but they have to keep it up all of the while. Respecting this particular $6,000, I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that this item has nothing in the world to do with that. This is an item in relation to astronomical, geodetic, tidal, and miscellaneous computers, and it just means giving a man a job. I am not opposed to giving a man a job ordinarily, and if there were reasons shown I would be inclined to vote for it.

Mr. HOWARD. Does the gentleman recall that only a few months ago in the harbor of New York there was an uncharted shoal discovered by some navigator in an accident there, and it was referred to the other day by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] in his speech—that that actually occurred in the harbor of New York?

Mr. BENNET. Of course, an uncharted shoal would not appear on a chart. That will be apparent even to my friend from Georgia.

Mr. HOWARD. A rock, or whatever it was.

Mr. BENNET. Or a rock either.

Mr. HOWARD. Some obstruction. It was a pinnacle rock, I am informed, that was uncharted.

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the pending paragraph close in two minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I want to have 10 minutes, if I can have it.

Mr. McARTHUR. And I want to have 5.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will make it 17 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York that all debate on the pending paragraph close in 17 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I just want to say to the gentleman that, of course, ships will run on pinnacle rocks and will be doing that a hundred years from now.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. In one second—and that within the bounds of any reasonable appropriation and with all the experts that we could hire we could not so chart our coasts as to prevent that.

Mr. HOWARD. When a ship does find one of the pinnacle rocks does not the gentleman think it ought to be charted to keep other ships from running upon it?

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, within two hours after any ship strikes any pinnacle rock that is known here in Washington, and within 24 hours after that the news of that new obstruction to navigation is sent to every part of the United States.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Except the Pacific coast.

Mr. BENNET. Yes; the Pacific coast and the Atlantic coast and everywhere else, and a careful mariner makes notation that there is a new obstruction to navigation ascertained.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. I do.

Mr. HAWLEY. Until examination has been made and scientific ascertainment of the exact location, what advantage is it to him to know that there is a danger to navigation somewhere in certain waters?

Mr. BENNET. As I say, the news is sent out within 24 hours, and also the department puts a buoy over that particular obstruction——

Mr. HAWLEY. Not unless they have the money to go and by scientific means establish where the obstruction is.

Mr. BENNET. Well, but this particular item would not give them one additional dollar to do that, and we are taking up all this time to give a good deal of misinformation to the country—not now alluding to my own speech—in a way that will not be at all helpful.

Mr. McARTHUR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. I will.

Mr. McARTHUR. The gentleman made a statement a few moments ago that this work of wire dragging took a great many years and untold millions of dollars and 100,000 men. Does the gentleman base that statement upon any accurate scientific knowledge he has or experience?

Mr. BENNET. I base it upon the fact that they have been doing the most modern things possible in the harbor of New York for 250 years and are still occasionally finding pinnacle rocks even there.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I can add my testimony to that given by the two gentlemen from New York to the effect that none of my seafaring constituents have made any complaint in regard to the failure to print and get out these charts. The information I have does come from the bureau, and it comes from the bureau because the bureau is informed and because it is the business of the bureau to inform the Congress.

I do not live on the seacoast and therefore I do not claim to have the knowledge of these deep-sea affairs that gentlemen living on the coast should have, but when the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] says that wire-drag work must be continued indefinitely for all time and cost untold millions I must submit that the gentleman is speaking at least without careful thought. If there is any one thing in connection with the work of the Geodetic and Coast Survey that when once done is completed for all time it is wire dragging, and it is the wire dragging that develops the pinnacle rocks. The wire drag is dropped to where the depth of water allows the deepest seagoing vessels and it finds every pinnacle to that depth. Pinnacle rocks do not grow, as far as I am informed, and therefore unless some time in the future we will have vessels deeper than 45 feet draft we shall not find any pinnacle rocks after a certain area has been once wire dragged.

Now, with regard to the item relative to which I say with all respect to the Chair he erroneously ruled on the point of order directed to the appropriation offered by the gentleman from Georgia, the survey asked for four new men and they made it as plain as a pikestaff that if they did not need four new men at least they did need two for the preparation of these charts.

We gave them one. We gave them a copyist draftsman, at $1,000. If that amendment is subject to a point of order, then the whole paragraph is subject to the point of order, and therefore any amendment to it, the point of order not having been raised, that was germane to it could be properly made. We gave them one copyist draftsman, the lowest-priced man, a clerk who is put in the office to learn the business. There is no question with regard to the condition of affairs. We have been increasing the appropriations for the Coast and Geodetic Survey, both for coast and geodetic work on the seas and the coasts and inland, for a number of years, during which time we have not increased the office force. They have been doing a largely increased amount of work in the field and on the seas, and we have not increased the draftsmen necessary to prepare the maps and keep up with the increased work. It developed in the hearing before the committee that many surveys have been made the maps of which were not given to maritime men, vessel owners, and vessel masters for a year and more than a year after the surveys had been made. That is true to a lesser extent with regard to the inland work of the survey. They have not had force enough in the office to keep the maps up with their field work. It is not so important that the maps and plats of that kind of work be current as it is that the maps and plats of the work at sea should be current.

I am not sure that the wrecks on the Alaskan coast, to which the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] has referred, would have been avoided if we had more maps and more plats. I am rather inclined to think those wrecks were more due to failure to study currents and give information in regard to them. It may, for all I know, have been partly due to taking a chance on a dangerous coast.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. In a moment. It is, however, certain that a considerable part of the work they have been doing in the matter of surveys has not been charted for a long time after it was performed.

Now, the gentleman from Illinois asks why these people were not given maps, why their requests for maps were not filled. One of the difficulties with this bureau is that we have not increased the printing force, and the printing force has been working overtime; but in spite of that fact, they have not been able to keep up with their map work. Now I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it not a fact that the surveys in Alaska, in the Philippines, in Porto Rico, and other of our possessions have drawn heavily upon the regular work of that office?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, they have not drawn heavily to the detriment of the work on the Atlantic coast, where the gentleman is interested. I think they have been carrying on the Atlantic coast work perhaps as rapidly as they would have carried it on otherwise.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. My interest here is general. I would like to see every coast protected.

Mr. MONDELL. They have been doing some work in the Philippines and have done something in Alaskan waters, but not as much as they should have done.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman pleases, does he know anything about the ability of the Coast and Geodetic Survey to hold its men on the vessels in view of the wages paid in other branches of the service?

Mr. MONDELL. They have great difficulty in holding their men because those men belong to one of the classes to which reference has been made here, who are not receiving as good pay as men in private service doing the same kind of work.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. HAWLEY. Has not the demand on the part of the Navy for these charts greatly increased in the past year?

Mr. MONDELL. It undoubtedly has, owing to the disturbed condition of affairs. The Navy has called on the service for an unusual number.

Mr. HAWLEY. And the Navy must be served with the charts before private concerns can be served?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. HAWLEY. One further question: Are not the presses used by the survey old-fashioned and slow-operating hand presses?

Mr. MONDELL. That is largely true. I think they have one power press.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is not the press on which these charts are printed?

Mr. MONDELL. There is a press made that is much better than the one we are using—is more economical. It should be put in and it will be put in as soon as the Treasury is in condition under Republican administration to put it in. Nevertheless, the maps published by the Coast and Geodetic Survey are deemed by everybody to be the best of the kind in the world.

Mr. HAWLEY. Are there any charts printed on other than hand presses?

Mr. MONDELL. I am not certain. I think so.

Mr. OLNEY. Mr. Chairman, I am entirely in sympathy with the efforts of the gentleman from Georgia to increase the efficiency of the Department of Commerce, and I trust that the appropriations will be so increased that we will have all the coast charts which we will really need, as well as five or six of the wire-drag launches. The gentleman from Georgia referred to a letter from the Boston Chamber of Commerce, and I will read to the House that portion of it which refers to the coast charts and the wire-drag work:

> The directors have unanimously voted to urge the Senators and Congressmen from the coast districts of New England to favor amendments to the sundry civil appropriation bill providing additional funds to enable the Coast and Geodetic Survey to produce charts in the number and with the rapidity necessary to meet the demands for them, and also enough additional funds to enable the bureau to purchase five launches for wire-drag work and to secure the building of a new vessel to carry on the survey of the Alaskan coast in place of the one which was condemned and abandoned last year.

I wish to call to the attention of the House the work which the wire-drag launches have done on the coast of Massachusetts. As we all know, this system of finding pinnacle and other rocks did not come into vogue until about 10 years ago. The old system of sounding was used. With that system the lead would go off a pinnacle rock on a tangent, and the wire drag was found more efficacious for finding these pinnacle rocks than that system. I know that off the coast of Scituate in the last 15 months a pinnacle rock was found about 15 feet below the surface of the sea. Hovering about that rock at that time were two or three battleships that were maneuvering and were drawing about 33 feet, and if one of those battleships had struck that pinnacle rock it would have been instantly wrecked. And then, too, off the coast of Alaska within a year they found 7 feet below the surface of the sea, by a wire-drag launch, a pinnacle rock 750 feet tall, with a diameter of about 200 feet, which is 200 feet taller than the Washington Monument, where, if a revenue cutter or other boat had come in contact with it, either would have been wrecked I can not begin to tell you what good work the wire-drag launches are doing on the New England coast.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is the gentleman familiar with the discoveries around about Buzzards Bay, which are increased in importance by reason of the Cape Cod Canal. As late as 1914 the wire drag found not less than 50 shoals at the entrance of Buzzards Bay, which is now come into maritime importance by reason of the opening of the said canal, and naval vessels in particular are now used inside of this course.

Mr. OLNEY. Yes. Now, it may be of interest to note that the wire-drag launches drag a buoy about 200 feet to the stern of the launch. And it acts just like a bobber acts when a young chap gets a fish on it. When the drag strikes an obstacle like a pinnacle rock or other rock this will bob up and down and indicate at once to the officers of the launch that a danger spot exists there.

Mr. BORLAND. I wish to say to the gentleman that the committee has listened in sympathy to the request for an increase for wire-drag service, and the committee gives them an increase in this bill. The item we are on now is not the item at all.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

The clerk read as follows:

Electrotypers, photographers, lithographers, plate printers and their helpers, engineer, and other skilled laborers: One $2,000, one $1,800, one $1,700, one $1,600, one $1,400, eight at $1,200 each, two at $1,000 each, two at $900 each, five at $700 each.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer amendments to that paragraph, and I ask unanimous consent to offer them all at one time. In line 22 increase the sum "$2,000" to "$2,500," and strike out "one" and make it "two at $1,800," and strike out "one" and make it "two at $1,600," and increase to "five," in line 24, and the amount from "$700 each" to "$800 each."

The CHAIRMAN. The clerk will report the first amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 22 strike out "$2,000" and insert "$2,500."
Strike out "one" where it occurs the second time and insert "two."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the first amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is asking unanimous consent to offer them all. I am going to reserve a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks they had better be made one at a time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman asked unanimous consent to offer them all at once. And I ask that they be reported so that we can know what they are.

Mr. MANN. He has a right to offer them as one amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington:
"On page 153, under the heading 'Electrotypers, photographers, lithographers, plate printers and their helpers, engineer, and other skilled laborers':
"Line 22, insert 'one $2,200,' in lieu of 'one $2,000.'
"Insert 'two $2,000 each' in lieu of 'one $1,600.'
"Insert 'two $1,800' in lieu of '$1,600.'
"Insert 'two at $1,600 each.'"

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against it.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order a moment?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think not.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I think the gentleman had better reserve it for a minute or two.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make it, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I hope the gentleman will reserve it for a minute or two.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will reserve it for five minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I am not going to take up more than a few minutes of time. I will not take up the five minutes, even if the gentleman from New York would permit it. But I want to call your attention to a fact, and that is the statement of Dr. Jones that these increases are necessary in order to secure the maps that we have had so much talk about.

Now, the gentleman from New York, Mr. BENNET, and the other gentleman from New York, Mr. FITZGERALD, state that they have not had any complaints from their shipping people in regard to the shortage of maps or about these difficulties that have been generally complained of. I called attention a moment ago to the fact that a newspaper I received from Seattle this morning contained an item about vessels being held up because they are unable to secure charts. Every commercial organization in my city and other organizations interested in shipping have either wired or written to me about this matter, so that if it is a question of complaints it shows that the people on the Pacific think there is some difficulty, whatever may be the situation in New York.

I think these increases ought to be made. The amount is small, considering the value that would come if these statements are correct, and I have every reason to believe that Dr. Jones's statements are true. I know he is trying to do the right thing, and I am sure he knows what he is talking about.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that in this particular case the estimates sent in by the department was largely a matter of promotion and increases of salary, without any corresponding increase in the force. There was a slight increase in force asked for, but in almost all the cases referred to by the gentleman they are purely increases of salary for a certain number of men; increases which may be desirable, but which are not as intimately connected with the matter of increase of work as the gentleman would have us believe.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is not that a matter that is desirable, to have a well-paid and adequate force, just as in the case of the men on the ships?

Mr. BORLAND. That is true; but these are principally $2,000 and $2,500 men who are to be increased. In most of the other cases requests are made to increase the low-salaried people.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I did not yield to the gentleman from Missouri to take up all my time. There are two or three increases of salary asked for; that is true; but in two instances, at least, double the number of men are asked for.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it not absolutely necessary to keep on charting, since channels and shoals change, and it is absolutely necessary to renew the work from year to year?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes. And there has been an increased demand on account of the increased activity of the Navy and on account of the increased activity of shipping brought on by the war. Dr. Jones states, and we know his statement is correct, that he is having a great deal of difficulty in retaining some of the very best men he has in the office.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. He has about 10,000 miles of coast to cover.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes; and it does seem to me that, as a question of a few dollars, this policy is inexcusable when you consider the tremendous importance of the subject and how much a few dollars may mean. But I suppose I can not keep the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] from making the point of order if he insists on making it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I confess I can not understand why there should be so much trouble about getting these charts. I suppose the vessels in the service have charts pertaining to the course over which they have been. Most of them are engaged in going over the same course.

I apprehend that these gentlemen who have stated that there was a great demand for charts heretofore printed, which demand could not be fulfilled, have not quite understood the situation. Some foolish person may have desired to purchase a chart which is out of date, and they have not been able to furnish it to him, like some foolish Members of Congress at times ask for an old farmers' bulletin which has been superseded by a new bulletin on the subject, and they are told that it is out of print.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I will when I finish this statement. I did not interrupt the gentleman, by the way.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. No; and if the gentleman had I would have been glad to yield.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether the gentleman would or not. He frequently declines. But I will yield in a minute. I suspect that the gentleman from Washington will complain soon that he can not get Farmers' Bulletin No. 47, which was out of date years ago, 247 having been issued in its place. I do not know whether those numbers are correct or not.

Mr. HAWLEY. They are not.

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman from Washington now.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I want to tell the gentleman of the information that I had. Dr. Jones informed me that the demands he had were for maps that were the most valuable and the most generally used.

Mr. MANN. Well, up to date I have not reached the gentleman from Washington except in my last remark. I was referring to the statements of various gentlemen on the floor, that ship captains and owners who had asked for large numbers of maps, two or three hundred in number, had not been able to get them all, because there were no copies on hand; and the reason why there are no copies on hand is they have quit printing them; they are out of date; they have been superseded.

Now, of course, the Coast and Geodetic Survey performs a very useful function. It has been in the service for over 80 years, if I recall correctly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It has just celebrated its one hundredth anniversary.

Mr. MANN. I know. I attended its one hundredth anniversary, but I think that really went back before it was in the service. But it will be in the service of the Government a hundred years or a thousand years hence, and still will be discovering many things. And yet my friend from Washington thought that if they had $6,000 more last year they would have discovered something that they knew nothing about before, and that information came from the superintendent of the service. How could the superintendent of the service last year have told that he would discover something then unknown to him if he had had $6,000 more, when he will be discovering new things as long as he is in the service, and the service will long after he and his grandchildren are planted under the ground?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. The Committee on Appropriations have recommended, and this bill carries, an increase for this service of a very large amount, for the general work I believe nearly $100,000. I wish that this Department of Commerce would feel some responsibility for economy in the public service. In these times, when we are compelled to expend large sums of money for unusual things, the Department of Commerce in every branch of it is insisting upon greatly increased appropriations for the ordinary things. If you should give this Coast and Geodetic Survey $400,000 or $500,000, or $400,000,000 or $500,000,000, they would not complete the survey next year. There would still be work to be done. You can not finish it all next year, nor in the next decade. This is a time when we ought to be economical in ordinary things; and if there is any branch of the public service that has no idea whatever of economy, it is the Department of Commerce. In the Coast and Geodetic Survey, in the Lighthouse Service, in all of the services in that department, which are for ordinary expenses, they are complaining that they want more money. I hold in my hand the annual report of the very able and distinguished Secretary of Commerce, formerly a Member of this House, for whom I have a high personal regard. I have read his long report of 229 pages "from kiver to kiver." A large share of it consists in abuse of Congress. He seems to consider that his proper duty is to scold Congress. That is not the duty of an executive officer of the Government. The fact that he was formerly a Member of the House is no reason why he is at liberty to scold Congress constantly. We make the appropriations in the light of the information that is furnished, and when we make them it is the duty of these executive officers to go ahead and spend the money as best they can, taking what they are given, instead of occupying their time in scolding Congress because it does not do something different. If they will perform the functions of their offices better and do less scolding, the Government will be greatly served. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York insist on the point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office expenses: For purchase of new instruments, including their exchange, materials and supplies required in the instrument shop, carpenter shop, and drawing division, books, scientific and technical books, journals, books of reference, maps, charts, and subscriptions; copper plates, chart paper, printer's ink, copper, zinc, and chemicals for electrotyping and photographing; engraving, printing, photographing, and electrotyping supplies; photolithographing charts and printing from stone and copper for immediate use; stationery for office and field parties; transportation of instruments and supplies when not charged to party expenses; office wagon and horses or automobile truck; heating, lighting, and power; telephones, including operation of switchboard; telegrams, ice, and washing; office furniture; repairs, traveling expenses of assistants and others employed in the office sent on special duty in the service of the office; miscellaneous expenses, contingencies of all kinds, and not exceeding $3,400 for extra labor, $50,000.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HAWLEY: Page 154, line 22, strike out "$50,000" and insert "$66,000."

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to enable the service to secure a supply of paper for the printing of these charts. No other concern in the country prints these charts, and consequently the paper is not kept in stock by manufacturers. It must be specially made at the order of the department. When first made the paper, being thick and heavy, contains considerable moisture. After a time it seasons, and in the seasoning contracts. If the charts are printed on the paper when it is fresh, the seasoning of the paper distorts the charts, so that mariners using them will be out of their courses, although following strictly what should be their courses as laid down in the chart. The paper that has been in stock for years and which was seasoned is practically exhausted. It should be kept for a considerable time in the storehouse to dry naturally. It can not be kiln-dried satisfactorily. The purpose of this addition of $16,000 to the total amount in the paragraph is to enable them to restock with this paper in sufficient quantity to meet the demands of the years immediately coming, with seasoned paper, and an increased quantity is needed because of the materially increased demand for charts from the Navy and commercial vessels.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield? Can the gentleman inform the committee for what number of years the bureau will be stocked with paper if this amendment is carried?

Mr. HAWLEY. It will not stock the bureau for more than two years, according to the estimates submitted as to the amount used each year, but it will enable them to have on hand some duly seasoned paper for printing these charts. The price of this paper has materially increased since the beginning of the European war.

These three things make necessary this increase in the appropriation: First, the increased demand of many thousands of charts per year; second, the increase of the price of paper; and, third, the need of holding a large supply in stock in order that it may become well seasoned prior to being used.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will not be agreed to. To show the enthusiasm of these gentlemen, they now propose amendments far in excess of the estimates submitted by this department. As the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] pointed out, the estimates for this service for the next fiscal year were about $700,000 in excess of the appropriation for the current year, eliminating from the current year's appropriation $289,000 for new vessels. The committee recommended appropriations of $115,000 in excess of the current year, an increase of about 11 per cent in the appropriation. If we made the same total increase of appropriations for all the departments of the Government, it would take $120,000,000 additional over the ordinary expenses of the Government. There is no necessity for this storing up of paper in advance, and I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington: On page 154, after line 22, insert:

"One vessel for the Coast and Geodetic Survey, including equipment, $320,000; five launches for the Coast and Geodetic Survey, including equipment, $75,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the point of order that these vessels are not authorized by law. We gave them a new vessel last year.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I move to strike out the last word. The information I have is that the only Coast and Geodetic Survey vessel, the old Gedney, some 41 years old, has been sold, and, according to the statement of the department, they have no vessel to take its place, and that work out on the Pacific coast will end.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman from Washington a question?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman know that they are constructing two new vesels under the appropriation we made for the current fiscal year?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I understand that they are; but the statement I have received is that they have no vessel to take the place of the Gedney.

Mr. MANN. If this amendment went in, before the money could be utilized the two vessels authorized last year would be constructed.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. They want an additional one. I will ask the gentleman from New York, Is it true that there is no vessel provided to take the place of the old Gedney, which they had in the Coast and Geodetic Survey, which was sold?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Two new vessels were provided last year, and the appropriation for that purpose was $289,000. This year they wanted $508,000 for two new vessels to take the place of the Patterson and the Gedney, which we thought we could not recommend at this time.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, another thing they complain about is that they have no launches to use in wire dragging, that they have to hire launches, and can only hire them during the fishing season, when there is a great demand for them, and it costs a great deal more to hire them than it would to buy them. If that is true, it seems to me that the launches ought to be provided, because wire-dragging work is going to be necessary for many years, and, it seems to me, it would be economy to keep small launches for that work rather than to hire launches every season.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] both lectured me and other gentlemen on the ground of economy.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I did not lecture the gentleman; he ought not to identify me with that assertion.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I heard a great deal said about the practice of economy. I am in favor of practicing economy, but not where human life is involved, and in this particular instance, where we want a survey of the Alaskan waters, it does involve human life. My good friend, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET], was talking about the way they mark those rocks. I can tell him how they mark the rocks in Alaskan waters: They mark them with vessels wrecked on them. You go up there to-day and you will see rocks marked in that way by wrecks. The last trip I made I noticed two vessels which marked rocks, and that was not the only mark there was on them.

Mr. BENNET. Is it not a fact that unquestionably the whole coast of the Atlantic and the Pacific would have to be dragged and redragged in order to be sure that there were no pinnacles of rock?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The gentleman from New York is entirely wrong about wire drags, and evidently does not understand the operation. If you drag a channel you locate every pinnacle of rock there is in the channel, and that is finished—that is ended.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is aware of the fact that none of the sandy portions of the coast require wire dragging.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Certainly not.

Mr. BENNET. But the whole coast of Massachusetts would require it.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. What we want, as far as the Alaskan coast is concerned, is to drag the main channels. It is not a long job and it is not an expensive job. They do not provide a proper equipment for that purpose; if they did, it could be finished in a short time. But suppose it would take a century to do it, are you going to stop work on that account?

Mr. BENNET. I think that wire dragging is a good thing; but the items that the gentleman from Washington has been talking about are raises in one or two salaries in the city of Washington.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The gentleman from New York is usually alert, but he has not listened to what has been going on this morning. I offered an amendment a moment ago for launches.

Mr. BENNET. Yes; I heard that.

The Clerk read as follows:

Appropriations herein made for the Coast and Geodetic Survey shall not be available for allowance to civilian or other officers for subsistence while on duty at Washington (except as hereinbefore provided for officers of the field force ordered to Washington for short periods for consultation with the superintendent), except as now provided by law.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I should not have supported the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington for 2 new vessels and 10 new launches even though the point of order had not been made, because the committee went over the matter pretty carefully and came to the conclusion that we were not justified in providing for these vessels this year. And yet there is much good argument for the new construction. We have two very old vessels in the survey that are not entirely safe.

The Secretary of Commerce was probably exaggerating a little when he said that one of them was not well held together with a heavy coat of paint. They may be better boats than that, and although they are old and not entirely seaworthy, and very soon it will be necessary to have new boats, these boats will be very valuable as naval auxiliaries. In these days when we are appropriating for preparedness we would be doing very well if we spent small sums for these naval auxiliaries rather than spend all our money building great battleships that may be obsolete when built, and can be of no possible service save in time of war, whereas these vessels will be of great service at all times.

In regard to the launches, the probability is that the Federal Government would in the course of three or four years save the entire $100,000 necessary to construct them, because now we hire launches, and frequently at a high rate. The launches we hire also frequently require remodeling, and it would be a matter of economy to build the launches now. I realize that in the matter of expenditures we have to go rather slowly by reason of the Democratic condition of the Treasury. But these launches ought to be built, and the only possible excuse for not building them is that a lot of folks want to spend all the Government money in building battleships; and second, there is not money in the Treasury to build both battleships and launches, so we have to get along without the launches.

The clerk read as follows:

Charts of the Coast Survey that are obsolete and have been superseded by charts containing more advanced information based on the most recent surveys, may be distributed free to educational institutions, each of such charts to have stamped or printed conspicuously thereon the words "For school use only."

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I do that for the purpose of saying the last word about this matter in Alaska. I called attention to the fact that we are constructing a railroad in Alaska that is supposed to cost $35,000,000. We are taking up there property amounting to millions every year, and the loss of property on the Alaska coast runs also up to half a million dollars a year, and notwithstanding the tremendous loss by shipwreck—and all our commerce goes over these channels—Congress has refused again to give proper facilities for the purpose of dragging these channels and locating the rocks that cause most of them. If I can have the attention of my good friend from New York [Mr. BENNET] for a moment, I want to tell him how they located these rocks, for I saw one of them located at one time. I happened to be at Kodiak when the Patterson came in there for the purpose of locating a rock that had been reported to exist in the harbor. It had been reported for a long time, and contrary to the understanding of my friend from New York [Mr. BENNET] there was no buoy there and no mark, and the only way it was known was when a vessel would strike it occasionally. The Patterson came in there that evening for the purpose of trying to locate that rock. As they were coming up to the wharf they located it by striking it, and that is the method they generally use in Alaska, but it seems to be satisfactory to the powers that be, because we can not get sufficient appropriations to properly continue the work of surveying these dangerous waters. We ought to have those launches. I am satisfied, since the gentleman from New York gave me the information, that probably these new vessels will probably take the place of the Gedney, but we ought to have these launches, because you are going to use them not one year, but you are going to use them for many years to come, and it would not only be a saving, but the more important part is that with the proper equipment you could do so much more work during the short season in which you can work in Alaska, and they cost only a few thousand dollars, and that appropriation ought to have been made, as my friend from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] said.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Washington in order that I may ask the gentleman from Washington a question. Did the Senate bill appropriating $150,000 for a reunion and peace jubilee at Vicksburg get in in time to be considered by the Committee on Appropriations, or can the gentleman tell me something about it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That has not yet been taken up, because of the situation which existed in the House, but it will be considered in the committee in the immediate future. While I can not predict what action will be taken, I am now inclined to believe that, in view of the course taken by Congress relative to the Gettysburg celebration, and the purpose of it, the committee in all probability will take favorable action in time to have that action taken by the House.

Mr. COLLIER. At this session?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words in order to make an observation upon the research work of this bureau. One of the things that impresses me with respect to the Geodetic Survey and also respecting the Geological Survey, which are primarily research rather than administrative in character, and, in fact, with all of these special expert bureaus, is the danger of duplication of work among the experts and the desire for cooperation between them without this duplication. The correlation of work among the force of leading experts should be possible without overlapping. I regard these two fields among the greatest in research of a constructive character that we have. Recently I read a very informing address on the subject of duplication by Dr. George Otis Smith, Director of the Geological Survey. It was published in Science. I think it ought to have a wider circulation, and I therefore ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing that address.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. FOSTER). The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The address referred to is as follows:

THE UNITED STATES GEOLOGICAL SURVEY AND ITS RELATION TO THE UNITED STATES COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY.

[Centennial exercises of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, Apr. 5, 1916.]

"The relations of near relatives may be a delicate subject for public discussion. The two organizations of which I have been asked to speak this afternoon possess the same family name as well as certain family characteristics and in consequence are often mistaken one for the other. If one survey buys a motor truck the other gets the benefit of the advertising, and the curious public remarks, "We don't see how the Geological Survey can afford it."

"Yet the relations of the two surveys have been such for more than a third of a century, and are such to-day, that I welcome this opportunity for the younger to extend congratulations to the older organization. Were I to review in detail the common history of these two surveys there are no chapters that I should better omit nor incidents that I might need to gloss over in order that my remarks be in keeping with the spirit of this occasion. In short, the hearty congratulations that I bring are an expression of true appreciation of what the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey has been to the United States Geological Survey.

"The two bureaus have much in common; the field of endeavor for each is nation wide; they are scientific in spirit and civil in organization; both are primarily field services, and the product of most of the work of each reaches the public in the form of maps. The similarity in official name also indicates a certain overlapping of function, which under some conditions might cause duplication of work. The fact that at no point in the twilight zone of superimposed jurisdiction has there been any wasted effort is good evidence that both these branches of the Federal scientific service have kept in mind the public nature of their work. It is because I realize that in the interrelations of these two bureaus the Geological Survey has been more often the beneficiary that I desire on this occasion to emphasize this gratifying fact that the two surveys have worked in the cause of American science on a coordinated rather than a competitive basis.

"In this connection I should mention the effort made 37 years ago to put on an economic and efficient basis the surveying work in the Western States. Under instructions by Congress the National Academy of Sciences considered all the work relating to scientific surveys and reported to Congress a plan prepared by a special committee, whose membership included the illustrious names of Marsh, Dana, Rogers, Newberry, Trowbridge, Newcomb, and Agassiz. This report, which was adopted by the academy with only one dissenting vote, grouped all surveys, geodetic, topographic, land parceling, and economic, under two distinct heads—surveys of mensuration and surveys of geology. At that time five independent organizations in three different departments were carrying on surveys of mensuration, and the academy recommended that all such work be combined under the Coast and Geodetic Survey with the new name Coast and Interior Survey. For the investigation of the natural resources of the public domain and the classification of the public lands a new organization was proposed—the United States Geological Survey. The functions of these two surveys and of a third coordinate bureau in the Interior Department, the Land Office, were carefully defined and their interrelations fully recognized and provided for in the plan presented to Congress. Viewed in the light of 37 years of experience, the National Academy plan would be indorsed by most of us as eminently practical, and I believe the report stands as a splendid example of public service rendered by America's leading scientists. The bill which embodied the entire plan, however, failed of passage in Congress, although the part relating to the organization of the new Geological Survey was carried as a rider on the sundry civil appropriation act of March 3, 1879.

"The newly organized United States Geological Survey began topographic surveys of the type that the National Academy had believed could best be executed by the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and the younger survey has continued this kind of mensuration surveying until it has covered more than 40 per cent of the country and become the principal map-making bureau of the Government. In course of time also more or less legislative authority has been given for the control work, vertical and horizontal, needed for these topographic surveys, so that there has been evolved exactly the opportunity for duplication of work that the National Academy sought to prevent. The invitation to speak this afternoon on the subject of the relation of the United States Geological Survey to the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey is a privilege that I value highly because it gives me the opportunity to point out that the result that Congress failed to insure by legislation has been attained by voluntary scientific cooperation.

"In topographic mapping the activities of the older bureau stop at the coast, as its name suggests; its mensuration surveys elsewhere are purely geodetic and represent a refinement of method and an accuracy of result that is not necessary in the ordinary mapping of the country as a whole, although these engineering results are absolutely essential. Members of the Geological Survey most familiar with these large contributions by the Coast and Geodetic Survey have estimated that the value of the geodetic work done by the older organization that would otherwise have necessarily been done by the Geological Survey has aggregated not less than a million dollars, and if the future engineering work of the Coast and Geodetic Survey as now planned is carried to completion another million dollars should be included in our total indebtedness to the older survey.

"The United States Geological Survey is proud of its pioneer work in aid of the development of the resources of Alaska, yet we are not forgetful of the fact that the real pioneer in Alaska was the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, which started its work in Alaska 30 years earlier than our own survey.

"It has been the custom of each of these surveys to supply the other with photographic copies of field sheets of current work, and I am glad to record the fact that cooperation of this type has not been one sided. Our topographic survey of the Bering River coal fields, for instance, yielded data that were incorporated in the important coast-survey chart of Controller Bay, which was published before the Geological Survey issued its topographic map of the larger area. In this way the public was served by receiving the information earlier than if the Geological Survey had insisted upon first publishing its own results. The testimony of the members of the Alaskan division of the Geological Survey is that the cooperation in Alaska has been as hearty and close as if the Coast and Geodetic Survey men and the Geological Survey men belonged to the same bureau.

In this connection, too, should be mentioned the earlier geologic observations made in Alaska by members of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and chief among these scientist pioneers in Alaska is our own Dr. Dall, the credit for whose half century of scientific work under Government auspices is shared by the Coast and Geodetic Survey and the Geological Survey. In connection with its engineering work also, the Coast and Geodetic Survey has made important scientific contributions that are distinctly geologic in character, and as geologists we are almost inclined to lay claim to Hayford's work on isostasy and Bowie's gravity determinations.

"Every geologist who works in that attractive borderland where both the products of geologic processes and the processes themselves can be studied side by side—our continental shore line—has made large use of the Coast and Geodetic Survey charts, and as competent witnesses we gladly testify to the accuracy of these charts and we compliment their makers. Such geologic investigations as the study of changing shore lines, the history of the submerged margins of the continent, and the origin of sediments are being given attention by the Geological Survey, and all these studies must be based upon the surveys and resurveys made by the Coast and Geodetic Survey.

"This brief review of the relations existing between these two bureaus may serve a larger purpose than the sincere expression of congratulations to the Coast and Geodetic Survey on this centennial occasion. For nearly four decades these two surveys have been working side by side from Florida to Alaska without the specific statutory separation of functions deemed advisable by the National Academy and therefore with full opportunity to overlap their fields of operation, to duplicate work, and thus to waste public money. The fact that there has resulted economical coordination rather than wasteful competition stands to the credit of those in administrative control of the two bureaus, especially the superintendents and directors of the earlier years of this period of successful cooperation. Naturally, too, the spirit of hearty cooperation is equally shown between the scientific assistants of the two services.

"In these days, when as American citizens we have so deep concern in the question of public regulation of private business—a nation-wide concern arising from a broadening appreciation of society's interest in the individual—it may be opportune for some of us as public officials to pause and consider the question of regulation of public business. Do we apply the same rules to our conduct of the business of these Federal bureaus that we advocate for the control of corporations? Some of us as scientists may feel that the comparison of a scientific bureau with an industrial corporation is forced if not absurd. Yet I trust that the two are alike in being not only productive but productive without undue waste. The National Academy report of 1878, to which I have referred, contains a significant phrase; in presenting to Congress the ideal for a scientific bureau as they saw it these scientists described the ideal plan as one that would yield the 'best results at the least possible cost.' Those few words express a practical administrative policy equally good for big business and pure science. And it is as illogical for a scientific bureau as for a munitions plant to shy at a cost-keeping system.

"Here at the Federal Capital we have some two-score scientific bureaus distributed through several executive departments. There exists no general plan of division of duties among these different agencies for public service, but as a fundamental policy we have pinned our faith to a sort of declaration of independence that all scientific bureaus were created free and equal. My acquaintance with bureau chiefs and their intimate advisers perhaps warrants me in describing them as possessing at least average ambitions, with the inevitable result that we have seen some field of scientific investigation occupied by two or more bureaus, other and less attractive fields shunned, and even other fields claimed by those bureaus not best qualified to make the largest use of the opportunity for creative work. Among ourselves we know of so many illustrations that no examples need be cited; each of us, no doubt, feels sure that he can at least specify the sins of other bureaus. This is the competitive system almost at its worst, because it is countenanced by men of scientific training and high ideals of public service. Fortunately, however, the two bureaus of which I have particularly spoken, as well as some others, furnish proof that there can be coordinated effort in Federal scientific work.

"I have here referred to the business world, because I believe we must apply some of the same rules to our scientific work. However slight may be the statutory limitations imposed by Congress upon these scientific bureaus, we can not escape the requirements of economic law, which is never a dead letter, although too often unread. If in the world of private business the competitive system sometimes breaks down and fails to protect the public, so in our narrower circle of public business there may be a similar failure of competition to produce the best results. The question is always fair and is sometimes pertinent, How far should these Government scientific bureaus go in seeking to enlarge their field of usefulness? Does this competitive spirit by its appeal to individual ambitions make for better public service? To what extent is it good public policy to have the public servants on the qui vive for new opportunities to serve, new worlds to discover, new appropriations to get? Service and discovery are the proper ideals of the individual investigator, but should even ideals justify trespass and disregard of others?

"First of all, we must agree that however great is advantage as a method of stimulating progress, competition must be always fair. If we are to apply the principles of the Sherman Act and the Clayton law to public business, unfair methods must be ruled out as illegal. I do not believe my comparison is a forced one. You can read decrees of the Federal courts that prohibit corporations from doing things that are somewhat similar to practices of which we ourselves have been guilty. In one case, among other items, the defendant corporation was enjoined from making false representations concerning competitors and from hiring away employees of competitors—simply a twentieth-century echo of the ninth and tenth commandments of the Mosaic law, especially the edict against coveting thy neighbor's manservant. In the public service proper coordination of work often makes transfer from one bureau to another desirable, and so as a means of increasing efficiency such transfers are and should be welcomed, but efficiency from the larger view is attained only when the interests of both bureaus are considered, in which event the individual also profits by his larger opportunity. With science alive and expanding in so many directions, subdivision and redistribution of functions makes certan interbureau transfers of specialists absolutely necessary.

"Another unfair practice, not countenanced by the courts in their regulation of private business, is tricky advertising as a method of meeting real competition. Honest advertising must be founded on truth, and even scientific bureaus may need sometimes to apply this acid test to the statements they give out to the public. Scientific investigations whose purpose is to increase human knowledge do not find their best expression in publicity whose principal object is to impress the Appropriation Committee. Such advertising may have its foundation in truth and yet may possess a superstructure so large and top-heavy as to violate all engineering formulas.

"Unrestrained competition in the public service, then, presents some dangers no less real than those incident to unregulated competition in private business. The question must come home to every bureau chief and to his intimate advisers, To what extent is a competitive struggle for new territory warranted, even when only fair methods are used in this endeavor for bureaucratic expansion? I am aware that we may invoke 'the public demand' and put forward other equally plausible reasons, but even if we sometimes fool Congress and on rare occasions fool each other, we never fool ourselves. Of course, the individual investigator, self-centered with enthusiasm in his discovery of a new line of research, may be wholly ignorant of the fact that among the 2,000 or so fellow scientists here in Washington some one in another department has already preempted that subject and possibly carried the work well on to completion; but however unconscious the scientific worker in one bureau may be of the obvious relation of that problem to the work of some other bureau only rarely, indeed, can his own bureau chief plead any such ignorance or innocence. May I express my individual conviction that the bureau chief who makes strategic moves in this contest for enlargement of field of work is just as conscious whether he is playing the game fairly as the 'captain of industry' that we have thought ought to be investigated by the Department of Justice?

"Even at its best, however, this competitive system is wasteful. The public has too often found that competition as the safety valve of business costs too much in steam. If in the branch of public business in which we are engaged the ideal is to render the best service at the lowest cost, must there not be regulation, and regulation which recognizes that there are what we may term natural monopolies in the Government scientific service? The monopolistic idea must here yield the same real savings to society that have come with the recent growth of public-utility monopolies. The product of our scientific bureaus is not a staple commodity, but a special service to the the public; and under governmental auspices this service is offered without price; yet that does not mean that we are any less vitally interested in costs. If monopoly will enable these scientific bureaus to render the best service at the lowest cost, the competitive system in scientific work should go to the scrap heap as out of date.

"The adoption of the monopoly system, however, involves here, as in the field of public utilities, the correlative idea of adequate regulation in the public interest. And here is where we may be in danger of losing our way, for the question, of course, obtrudes itself, Who is the guide; who is to define the field of work to be monopolized by this or that bureau? My own belief is that Congress can not be expected to enforce even its own wishes in the matter. Some years ago the chairman of a congressional committee that had made a most thorough investigation of one of the departments, himself a trial lawyer of large experience, admitted to me that the investigation had been largely in vain. In his own words, 'I know the department is full of duplication, but it would take a trained scientist to put his finger on it all.' Nor can the Cabinet officer be expected in a few years to discover all the overlaps in his own department, much less to learn the logical and proper coordination of the scientific work in several departments. Thus the responsibility in large measure falls back upon the bureaus themselves. They must provide that careful coordination which precludes wasteful competition and promotes helpful cooperation. To return for a moment to my text, I do not know that the successful coordination of the work of our two surveys has been due in any large degree to the influence of Congress, although my experience is that appropriation committees do watch these details; nor have I ever known any Secretary of the Interior or of the Treasury or of Commerce to define this wise policy. The happy result must be credited rather to a small group of administrative chiefs in each of these two scientific bureaus.

"The obligation for the proper conduct of the scientific work of the Government, therefore, can not be lifted from the shoulders of the bureau chiefs and their immediate associates in the work of administration. Moreover, this responsibility is a double one—we should feel not only the duty as public servants to avoid wasteful use of the public money, but also the obligation as scientists to conserve scientific effort by preventing duplication in research and in publication. Aside from the absurdity that lies in the spectacle of bureau chiefs trying to impress congressional committees, do we not by our acts suggest a lack of faith in science itself? We talk impressively of the day of highly specialized science and then go out and poach on what is properly the domain of others. Since the days of Aristotle students of politics have recognized as a weakness in democracies the habit of not appreciating the value of trained specialists. Within a few weeks the London Financial News remarked editorially upon the national neglect of science to which is now attributed the bulk of the British failures under the test of war. But as self-labeled scientists are we not ourselves similarly lacking in our appreciation of the value of science and of scientific organization in so far as we fail to recognize that by reason of its experience and its personnel some other bureau, even in another department, can better handle a certain subject than our own bureau? Especially when a new idea is before the public are we apt to be temporarily blinded by its popularity and thus lose sight of the eternal fitness of things. I can best illustrate this by mention of a current topic. The fixation of nitrogen is a matter of national importance. Plainly the military departments are most concerned by reason of their need of nitric acid for munitions, yet as against any claims of the War and Navy Departments must be set the fact that nitrogen is one of the essential elements in fertilizers, and its production is therefore of vital concern to the Department of Agriculture. However, the mineral deposits necessary to the fixation process are to a large extent under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior, not to mention some of the most valuable power sites. Nor must I overlook the fact that this subject was first investigated and reported upon by a bureau in the Department of Commerce. So the competitive contest is on; but the obviously most reasonable consideration is still in the background. What department or bureau, if any, has already on its rolls the force of hydraulic and construction engineers ready to begin the preliminary studies and surveys and the organization already adapted to push the construction of the plant should Congress authorize this innovation in governmental activity? As evidence of my good faith in mentioning this illustration let me add that an investigative bureau, like the Geological Survey, is not organized on a plan at all adapted to the construction and operation of an industrial plant; and all that I may claim for our bureau in this connection is that we sometimes recognize the obvious.

"Those of us who have been responsible for the work of securing the needed appropriations are at times likely to have our judgment warped by what we think are the exigencies of the case. A member of a scientific bureau was once so concerned for the success of his bureau that he even recommended its transfer to another department so as to get under the wing of a more generous appropriation committee. The logic of the situation does not always appeal to us, and we are willing for the moment to sell our birthright for a larger appropriation. The obvious fact in this matter of the interrelations of the scientific bureaus of the Government is that if the bureau chiefs do not always exhibit an appreciation of the proprieties in scientific investigation nor seem to possess much idea of perspective in the alignment of boundaries, can even the most experienced legislators be expected to make the best distribution of scientific work?

"The possession by any bureau of even a skeleton organization of efficient specialists in a certain field would seem to be the practically unanswerable argument for intrusting to that bureau any new and enlarged work in that field whenever Congress deems larger appropriations advisable. That is the type of practical logic that is recognized in private business, for under public regulation of natural monopoly the public-utility company that first enters the local field is recognized and even protected by the public-service commission, as long as the service rendered is at all adequate. In the business world the day of preferment of special applicants in the granting of municipal franchises has passed, and in our Government business there is no better reason for granting special privileges to overzealous bureau chiefs. I sometimes think that the bureau chief comes nearer being safe and sane in his public acts and utterances in the intervals between sessions of Congress.

"In this informal comparison of the actual and the ideal in the administration of the scientific bureaus of the Government, I have had ever in mind the existence of a real basis for optimism in the splendid record of the Coast and Geodetic Survey and the Geological Survey in absolutely coordinating their endeavors in the public service. And I desire simply to add that this practical cooperation has been so easily accomplished that it is only as we review these several decades of joint work and estimate the value of the reciprocal services rendered that we realize how ideal have been the relations between the two surveys.

"GEORGE OTIS SMITH.

"U. S. GEOLOGICAL SURVEY."

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Washington does not seem to comprehend the situation which has been before the House for the last couple of hours. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] has been attempting to raise the salaries of electrotypers, photographers, plate printers, and so forth, men who do not do any actual wire dragging out in the ocean.

Mr. MANN. I presume the gentleman from New York would not say that they do not do any wirepulling here?

Mr. BENNET. They do logrolling and wirepulling, but the item that has to do with wire dragging is found on page 150, lines 13 to 15:

For surveys and necessary resurveys of coasts on the Pacific Ocean under the jurisdiction of the United States, $225,000.

It would have been in order for any Member of this House to have risen and offered to amend that item to any amount, and it would not have been subject to the point of order; but no man from the interior, no man from the Atlantic or the Pacific, offered to raise that item a single dollar. I have been refraining from saying that for some time, but I want to put myself at least clear. I am not opposed to this wire dragging, but I am opposed to the wirepulling.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Is the gentleman opposed to the building of some vessels to take care of this survey on the north Pacific and of launches to haul these drags?

Mr. BENNET. I am with the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who called attention to the fact that there are two vessels now building for that specific purpose. I think that is right. I am glad that a prior Congress authorized it; but the other gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] seems to think that you can do wire dragging with an appropriation. You can not take your appropriation out to the Pacific Ocean and do any wire dragging, and when you are building two vessels you are doing all that you can.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. If you can not do wire dragging with an appropriation, why does the gentleman suggest that we ought to offer an amendment to increase the appropriation?

Mr. BENNET. You can do wire dragging with existing vessels under this item of $225,000, which the gentleman did not try to increase.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Oh, we got enough in that.

Mr. BENNET. The gentleman makes an admission that takes him out of court. He says that sum of $225,000 is enough for surveys and necessary resurveys of coasts on the Pacific Ocean. In other words, he has enough to keep these vessels from finding pinnacle rocks by hitting them. Two hundred and twenty-five million dollars would not be enough, but you can not spend it all in one year with the equipment and men that you have. I agree with the gentleman that for the equipment that is available $225,000 is enough.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. That is what I was going to say—with the equipment we have, we have enough, but we want additional equipment.

Mr. BENNET. They are building two more vessels.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. But we want some launches.

Mr. BENNET. They are building launches.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Oh, no.

Mr. BENNET. And the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], who is sympathetic with the gentleman from Washington, says that they are building enough vessels.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman misunderstood me if he understood me to say that they are building enough vessels. I said that I could not as a member of the committee support the gentleman's amendment, because I am bound as a member of the committee to stand by the judgment of the committee, unless there is some very great emergency demanding a different action.

I accept the modification, but I do not want the House to get the impression that we are not doing any wire dragging, because we are, and I am glad the gentleman from Washington says the appropriation there is enough with the equipment that we have.

[Mr. JOHNSON of Washington addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the gentleman's motion. I will not take up the time of the committe any more than to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the work of the Coast and Geodetic Survey.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] and several other gentlemen this morning have made statements in regard to the difficulty in getting sailors to operate these vessels under the Department of Commerce.

I hold in my hand the report of the Secretary of Commerce. Opposite to page 12 of that report is an unnecessary and useless expense in the form of a picture of the steamer Albatross with this notation under it:

This vessel, the most perfectly equipped for its use, lay idle nine and one-half months, with crew under full pay, for lack of appropriations for coal and supplies, while urgent work affecting large Pacific coast interests was waiting to be done.

And the Secretary, on page 12 of his report, makes this statement:

Quite as important, or more so, is the fact that because of lack of funds the steamer Albatross, with a naval crew under full pay, lay for nine and one-half months at Alameda, Cal. There was no money to pay for coal and other needed operating expenses, while important work, long and urgently required, and which large sections on our Pacific coast awaits with impatience, was left undone. For the same reasons the schooner Grampus was also idle for seven months, with important work waiting to be done.

Apparently the excuse for this is given on the same page at another place, in this statement:

An emergency arose requiring the presence of the Albatross at the Pribilof Islands during the early weeks of the fiscal year, and the appropriation was so limited that she had to lie idle for almost the entire balance of the year while her crew were under full pay.

One wonders why they should keep the crews of two vessels under full pay, one for nine and one-half months and the other for seven months in a year, if they did not have money with which to buy coal and could not operate the vessels.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Why did they not let the crews go for that period of time and save some money?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The vessel Albatross——

Mr. MANN. Has a naval crew.

Mr. FITZGERALD (continuing). Is manned and equipped with a naval crew.

Mr. MANN. I understand.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is not manned and equipped by the Department of Commerce at all.

Mr. MANN. I did not ask the gentleman for that information. I am as well informed on that subject as the gentleman is.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not criticizing the gentleman. I am calling attention to the fact.

Mr. MANN. I know the fact. If the gentleman had waited, I would have called attention to it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If they had waited they would have been paid the same money whether on the Albatross or some other vessel of the Navy.

Mr. MANN. Is that the case of the Grampus?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman talked too soon. It is true that the crew of the Albatross is a naval crew, and I shall refer to that at another time, but that is not true as to the Grampus. And why is it necessary to keep a naval crew idle for nine and one-half months when the Secretary says in his report they have need for the crew in the Navy? They are asking for more men in the Navy. Now, this is just scolding Congress again. The difficulty, if there was one, and I suppose there was, arose because, as they say, there was an emergency in the Pribilof Islands, and they just spent the money which had been appropriated, and the amount ascertained, doing something that was not necessary, and then laying up these vessels for nearly three-quarters of a year and doing nothing, and keeping the crews on pay. That is intelligent administration for you! And they complain because we have not appropriated a larger sum of money, knowing nothing about an emergency nor the carelessness with which the money would be expended, and this is regardless of any economical consideration, spending the money on idle crews instead of saving the money for the operation of one vessel. If they had discharged the crew of the Grampus they might have kept the Albatross, which they say is the best-equipped vessel of the kind in the service, for the entire year.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I think the facts that the gentleman from Illinois has referred to furnish the very strongest argument for the increase in this appropriation made in this bill. As a matter of fact, they furnish the strongest kind of argument for larger appropriations than we have made. The Albatross has a naval crew, and they are paid whether they work or not. And when the funds become short the Albatross is laid up. It certainly is not economical management, but it is not the fault of the bureau. They would keep the Albatross at work if they had the money, but they have not had the money. Now, so far as the Grampus is concerned I think the gentleman from Illinois did not find anything in the report to indicate that the crew of the Grampus was paid while the boat was laid up. That matter was discussed somewhat in the hearing before the committee—the question of the pay of the crew when the boat is laid up—and my understanding is that all the civilian crew is discharged except the men necessary to take care of the vessel. The others are all discharged, and a new crew is hired when the boat starts out again. When the Grampus was laid up with a civilian crew the crew was discharged. The appropriation made this year will enable them to keep all these vessels in commission a larger portion of the year and work a great economy in that way. I doubt if we gave them enough to keep all the boats in commission, but the situation will at least be improved.

Mr. MANN. It is true the report does not say that the crew of the Grampus was paid all the time the Grampus was not in service.

The Clerk read as follows:

Alaska service: Pribilof Islands—2 agents and caretakers, at $2,000 each; 2 physicians, at $1,500 each; 3 school-teachers, at $1,200 each; storekeeper, $1,800; agent, $2,500; assistant agents—1 $2,000, 1, $1,800, 1 $1,500; inspector, $1,800; wardens—1 $1,200, 6 at $900 each; in all, $28,600.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I have a good many times in this House heard gentlemen talk about enforced labor and also the necessity for purchasing supplies from various corporations in the United States which maintain stores and endeavor to compel their employees to purchase goods at their stores. I have heard very fierce denunciations about that. So far as I recall, I have never heard anybody defend the practice. The item is in relation to our service upon the Pribilof Islands, the fur-seal islands, where they have some natives, and where we have a plant.

The Secretary of Commerce, in his last report, page 121, says:

An important innovation in the relations of the Government to the natives has been in the method of compensating them for services rendered. Formerly it was the practice to pay cash for such services, and a comparatively large proportion of the appropriation was thus expended. The cash thus acquired by the natives was largely used by them in purchasing supplies at the Government stores, and the sums received from such sales were, under the law, covered into the United States Treasury.

And, then, he says further:

Now, all able-bodied natives are required to perform some labor, and they are paid therefor in supplies. This arrangement has not been brought about without some difficulty with the natives, but in general appears to be working well.

We have not only become a slave master in the Pribilof Island and require the natives to work, but we refuse to pay them. Why, this was the method followed when slavery was in effect in this country. It is the method wherever slavery is in effect. They require men to work and pay them in supplies. Formerly these men were paid in cash. They were induced to labor by the compensation received. Now, they are required to labor and they are not paid in cash. They come around now, as they used to come around to the stores of the slaveholders, and get something upon which to live. These are natives in the Pribilof Islands. If they were natives of the Philippine Islands, what blood and thunder would issue from the Democratic side of the House. But being in the Pribilof Islands, where natives are not entitled to self-government, who are enabled only to work without pay, why, of course, it is all right.

I want to hear some noble, distinguished, liberty-loving Democrat defend a country which requires natives to labor and refuse to pay them. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Northville (Mich.) Station: Superintendent, $1,500; foreman, $900; fish-culturist, $900; four laborers, at $600 each; in all, $5,700.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 160, line 5, after the word "foreman," strike out "$960" and insert "$1,200."

Mr. FITZGERALD. I reserve a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York reserves a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, this hatchery at Northville, Mich., is one of the leading hatcheries in the Great Lakes district. From Northville as a center there is a great deal of field work done, and a number of subhatcheries are operated; and on account of that fact the superintendent of the Northville hatchery is absent a portion of the time looking after field work and the substations.

I want to call the attention of the chairman to the fact that Alpena, Charlevoix, Sault Ste. Marie, and Detroit, Mich., are substations under Northville, and that the total output of eggs, fry, and adults from Alpena is 35,500,000, at Charlevoix 41,000,000, at Detroit 115,000,000, and at Sault Ste. Marie 33,500,000. These points are widely separated from one another, and are, some of them, as far as 300 miles from the Northville hatchery; and the foreman at Northville has charge of the station there while the superintendent is looking after the outside hatcheries.

Now, the salary of the Northville foreman is only $960, and it seems to me that it would be only fair if the salary of the foreman there were placed on the same basis as the salary of foremen at other hatcheries throughout the country of a similar character, and even at hatcheries that are considerably smaller. I want to point out to the chairman the fact that at Baird, Cal., where the output of eggs, fry, and adults is only 3,000,000, the salary of the foreman is $1,080; at Homer, Minn., where the output is only 4,000,000 eggs, fry, and adults, the salary is $1,200; at Leadville, Colo., where the output is only 8,000,000, the foreman gets a salary of $1,200; at Northville, Mich., where the output of eggs, fry, and adults amounts to 13,500,000, the salary is only $960; at St. Johnsbury, Vt., where the output is only 2,000,000 eggs, fry, and adults, the salary is $1,200; at San Marcos, Tex., which in every way is a smaller hatchery than the Northville hatchery or any of those that I have mentioned, with an annual output of only half a million eggs, fry, and adults, the salary is $1,200.

It seems to me that the chairman, who is generally so fair about these matters, will see the justice of placing this salary of the Northville foreman on the same basis as the salaries of foremen at other hatcheries where the work is even much less than at Northville.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the Commissioner of Fisheries recommended that the compensation of the superintendent be increased. He thought that the foreman was receiving adequate compensation. He is receiving more compensation than some of the foremen at other places, although it is true that at a few hatcheries the foremen receive a larger compensation than the man in Michigan. The man in Michigan, however, is compensated for that disadvantage by being employed in the State of Michigan and associating with distinguished gentlemen in Michigan. [Laughter.] You can not afford to overdo these things, and under the circumstances I think it would be an injustice to add to those advantages that he already has, so I will have to insist upon the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York insist upon his point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is in excess of the amount fixed by law?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KELLEY: On page 160, line 6, after the word "each," insert "moving and repairing cottage for foreman, $3,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. KELLEY. I hardly think it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, yes; it is. A limit of cost was fixed in establishing this station, and the money has been appropriated. There is no reason why we should increase the amount.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, in connection with this I want to read a statement from the Bureau of Fisheries upon the condition of fisheries and on the question of accommodations for the foreman of the Northville hatchery. He says:

The foreman's cottage at the Northville station is in a dilapidated condition, and because of this and its isolated location it has not been occupied for a number of years. It is located on a steep hill, up which all supplies, including water, must be carried. In winter the house is isolated by heavy snow drifts, and after sleet storms it can be approached only by dragging oneself upward by the aid of the fences. It is not surprising that the foreman will not occupy it, but prefers to pay rent in the village, too far from the station to be serviceable in an emergency out of official hours. It is planned to build a new cottage on a convenient site, at a cost of $3,000.

They recommend the sum of $3,000 for the cottage.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It provides for a new building, and it is not authorized.

Mr. MANN. It is not for a new building. They do not ask for a new building. Let the amendment be reported again. They ask for repairs to the old one.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They are asking for a new building, as I understand.

Mr. MANN. No; they are not asking for a new building. They are asking for money to repair the old building. That is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There was a limit of cost fixed.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but the mere fact that there was a limit of cost for the installation of the service in the first place does not affect the buildings that have already been installed. This is for the repair of a building.

Mr. KELLEY. This building is on the ground, but it is in an inaccessible position, and the amendment provides for its removal to a more accessible place.

Mr. MANN. We put a limit of cost upon a Federal building everywhere, but that does not mean that after you have provided for the building you never can repair it. Here a fish-cultural station was probably established under a limit of cost for the establishment. To say that that prohibits, under the rules of the House, an amendment for the maintenance of the establishment would be absurd, and, of course, the amendment as offered is not subject to a point of order. It is for repairs.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no foreman's cottage there. The estimate submitted was for the construction of a cottage.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken as to there being no cottage there. There is a cottage there. I am only talking about the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am mistaken. There is a cottage there, but they can not do anything with it. It is in such a dilapidated, antiquated condition that it has not been possible to utilize it. No amount of money can make it available for use, and they do not want to spend any money on it.

Mr. MANN. I am not sure. We passed in this bill yesterday or the day before an item of $200,000 to repair the District courthouse.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is a different thing.

Mr. MANN. I am quite sure you could replace the District courthouse better than it is now for half that sum, though I am not opposed to the appropriation that was made. There was $200,000 to repair a building that certainly is not worth $25,000 now. I am only discussing the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In the shape it is in, I concede that it is not subject to the point of order. I thought the gentleman was asking for what the department really wanted. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will not be agreed to. There is on this place a building in such a dilapidated condition that it has not been occupied for a great number of years. It can not be repaired so as to make it suitable. They do not want any money spent on it, because they can now repair it out of the general repair fund that is available, and it will not serve any purpose to make this appropriation. What is desired is an appropriation for a new building, and they can not put up a new building under this wording. It is useless to make this appropriation, and I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. FITZGERALD), there were—ayes 28, noes 38.

Accordingly, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. KELLEY: Page 160, line 6, after the word "each" insert "repair and improvement of water supply, $2,000."

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, the department advises that the terra-cotta pipe line which conveys water to this station has been damaged by floods, and must be replaced by iron pipe. There will be required 800 feet of 16-inch pipe, costing $2.50 per foot, laid. As the matter now stands the water supply may be cut off by another freshet.

It seems to me that the chairman of the committee ought to accept this amendment to provide for replacing this terra-cotta pipe with iron pipe in order to make sure that the hatchery will be supplied at all times with water. The cutting off of the water supply would jeopardize the millions of eggs and fish at the hatchery. This improvement is recommended and urged by the bureau.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I know that, like a great many other things, it is recommended by the bureau. It is one of those exaggerated, esthetic things. There is a wooden aqueduct which goes through certain public places.

A lot of moss has grown on it, and one or two planks in the top are broken, and it offends the aesthetic senses of some of the visitors to that park. As a matter of fact, in the present condition it recalls memories of the old oaken bucket, and fits in with the landscape, and harmonizes with the surrounding conditions. These people desire to take a rusty old cast-iron pipe and substitute it for this artistic and time-honored method of conveying the water. It is just a useless waste of public funds, and I hope the committee will not be guilty of such an offense.

Mr. KELLEY. I am surprised that the chairman should take this position.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is the fact, and this same statement as to the danger of the water supply being cut off by a freshet has been presented to the Committee on Appropriations for the past 10 years. There is no more danger of its being washed away by a freshet than there is that I will be driven out of this Chamber by a cloud-burst.

Mr. KELLEY. The head of this bureau says that the pipe which conveys the water has been seriously damaged by flood.

Mr. FITZGERALD. He has never seen the place.

Mr. KELLEY. Oh, yes; and he has reports from his inspectors who visit it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. He has a report from that foreman who wants us to build him a nice cottage there.

Mr. KELLEY. I am surprised that the gentleman is willing to jeopardize the work of this important hatchery by failing to provide a couple of thousand dollars to put in a pipe which will make sure a water supply at all times.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman understands that we make a general appropriation for repairs for all of these stations, and it is within the discretion of the bureau to expend that money for repairs upon the things that are essential. Every time they imagine some little change should be made in any of these stations, it is not an excuse for us to make a specific appropriation.

Mr. KELLEY. Does the gentleman think that putting in a new pipe line would come under the head of ordinary repairs?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, yes. What else would it be. They have a pipe line there. They think it is not sufficient, or that it ought to be changed or modified. They should use their general repair item. What they wish to do is not only to obtain from us a general appropriation for repairs, but a number of specific appropriations under all these items, and it is impossible for us to keep track of them. If that were really an important and urgent matter they could take care of it out of the general appropriation. The best test that we have as to whether such matters are important or not is when we find them asking for only $2,000 for such a matter, when they have an appropriation of $350,000 out of which it could be made, which is somewhat conclusive proof that it can not be as urgent as they pretend. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by KELLEY) there were—ayes 36, noes 36.

Mr. KELLEY. I ask for tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered, and the chairman appointed Mr. KELLEY and Mr. BORLAND.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 50, noes 42.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, let it go.

Mr. BORLAND. I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the point of no quorum. The amendment is agreed to, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Woods Hole, Mass., Station: Superintendent, $1,500; machinist, $960; fish-culturist, $900; pilot and collector, $720; 3 firemen, at $600 each; 4 laborers, at $600 each; in all, $8,280.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 161, line 18, after the words "machinist, $960," strike out the words "fish-culturist, $900; pilot and collector, $720," and insert "two fish-culturists, at $900 each, one of whom may be temporarily assigned to clerical or other work when deemed necessary by the Commissioner of Fisheries."

Mr. FITZGERALD. To that, Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, the station for which this appropriation is made is not only the most important station in the United States, but is considered to be the most important fish-cultural station in the entire world. It is the station at which several years ago I had the honor to be employed. [Applause.] I was appointed as pilot and collector at this station when the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. BOWERS], who has recently been elected a Member of this House, was the Commissioner of Fisheries. In order for me to get my appointment as pilot and collector at this station I was obliged to take the civil-service examination for fish-culturist, and when I was appointed and assigned to duty at this station I knew nothing about piloting or collecting and was not assigned to that particular class of work, but I was assigned to fish-cultural work and clerical and other work by the superintendent as need arose.

The gentleman who has succeeded me at that station is, I am informed, doing the same kind of work that I did. When the station was established, back in 1884, the gentleman who was appointed pilot and collector is now the fish culturist at that station. He is one of the oldest, if not the oldest, employee in the Bureau of Fisheries, and knows more about the fisheries in that region than probably any other man living. The gentleman who was the founder of the Fish Commission in this country depended upon him for a great deal of his knowledge and information with reference to the fisheries. I am referring to Mr. Vinal N. Edwards, a remarkable old gentleman, whose knowledge of fish and fish culture is almost bewildering. I may say that Mr. Edwards, who is a fish culturist, does not perform wholly fish-culturist duties. He is at times engaged more particularly in scientific work at this station. I may say that during the summer months at this station they have scientists engaged in scientific research who come there from all over the country and even from across the seas. During the winter and spring they are engaged in fish hatching. There is sufficient work there to warrant two fish culturists, for they hatch and plant, under favorable conditions, nearly 900,000,000 of fish fry annually. This station, with its grounds, docks, buildings, and equipment, is valued at over one-quarter of a million dollars. I submit that it is of sufficient importance to require and be given two fish culturists, one of whom can be assigned to active fish-culturist work when the hatching season is on, and who, in the discretion of the commissioner, can be assigned to clerical or other work when the fish-hatching season is closed.

When I was employed there I was assigned to duty in the hatching room. When the hatching season closed I was assigned to duty in the office of the superintendent as clerk. If necessary, I was sent out in one of the launches or vessels connected with the station on scientific work, or to sweep floors, help in the machine shop, or in the fireroom.

Now, I ask that you provide a position for this station which will not be a misnomer. You provide for a pilot and a collector and then appoint a man for that position and not give him that kind of work to do. The title is wholly a misnomer as relating to the work done by the person holding the position.

I asked to have this matter taken up by the subcommittee on appropriations and to be given an opportunity to be present, and I was assured by the distinguished chairman of that committee that when the commissioner came before them in reference to the estimates I would be notified and would have an opportunity to be present; but through some misunderstanding I was not notified until after the matter was reached and acted upon, and I had no opportunity to appear. I am referring to the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from New York, Mr. FITZGERALD. I came before the subcommittee after the hearing had been closed, and after making a statement was, in effect, lightly brushed aside by the chairman, the able gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] with the statement that there was no recommendation for this and it could not be considered now. I left with the subcommittee a letter from the Commissioner of Fisheries saying that this title ought to be changed and that the position should be changed, as it was in effect, as I said, a misnomer.

The distinguished gentleman from West Virginia, Mr. BOWERS, when he was commissioner, informs me that more than once he recommended that some such change as this should be made. I know that an attempt at one time was made to provide for a foreman, and this year recommendation was made to provide a clerk at this station.

If this change is made the total yearly expense at that station will be but $18,000; and I submit that a station of this importance, the largest in the world, in fact, the original station of the bureau, and performing the work which it does, requiring a man who bears the title of "pilot and collector," to take a fish-cultural examination under the civil service and to engage in fish-cultural work, it is justifiable, although it does not appear in the bill, for Congress to take notice of the situation and provide for two fish-culturists. I hope the gentleman from New York will not press the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the point of order if the gentleman from Missouri is going to insist on it.

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; the point of order will be insisted upon.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman positively say that he is going to insist on it?

Mr. BORLAND. We are going to submit it to the Chair.

Mr. MANN. The item can easily be made not subject to a point of order. I want to be heard on the merits of the proposition.

Mr. BORLAND. I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. MANN. I am sorry the gentleman from New York is not here, because I do not know whether the gentleman from Missouri would feel that he has authority to grant the request under the circumstances. But here is the situation. I think it is quite an honor to the House that a Member of the House, still a young man, who only a short time ago was in the Government service at a salary of $720 a year, under the title of "pilot and collector" in one of the fish hatcheries, a position he secured under a civil-service examination, has now become a Member of Congress. [Applause.] It shows the possibilities in America, and I dare say that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], who served in this capacity, knows more about that place than all of the Commissioners of Fisheries who have served or who will be appointed. He was there; he took his examination and was appointed and served. He knows. He asked to appear before the Committee on Appropriations, and while he did not say that he was told that he would be notified when this item was reached——

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, if the gentleman will permit, I think there is a misunderstanding. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is here, and he can speak for himself, but the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] did appear before the committee and was given an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. MANN. I so stated.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman says that he was there. I was present and I saw him there, and I know he was there.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I think I can state the facts. He understood he was told he would be notified when the item was reached, but he was not there when the item was reached.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman was given an opportunity to be heard, and after he was heard the committee acted. That is the fact. He made quite a lengthy statement about the matter.

Mr. MANN. I understood that he was before the committee after the matter had been disposed of.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The matter was open and was discussed.

Mr. MANN. I was not making any complaint about it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman will permit me, I will state this, that frequently Members request to be heard——

Mr. MANN. I did not know that the gentleman had been before the committee in that way or I would not have said what I did.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And the committee frequently tentatively agrees on an item with the understanding that the gentleman will be heard.

Mr. MANN. I understand. I told the gentleman he had no complaint, and he did not make any complaint. I am trying to appeal, and I am going to appeal now to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], even if I have to repeat part of my speech.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is not necessary.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] formerly occupied the place of pilot and collector at a salary of $720 a year. I will not say that he was serving the Government in a humble capacity, because for aught I know it is just as important a position as a Member of Congress. I suspect possibly he was required to do more work then than some Members of Congress do now, though I do not assert that. He knows what that place was. I have no doubt that with him it is largely sentimental; I know it is with me. I think that when any Member of Congress, who a few years ago under the title of pilot and collector did the work of fish culturist, makes the appeal that the gentleman from Massachusetts does, and with the good reason back of it, the House ought to be generous enough to agree to his amendment, because it makes an increase of only $180 a year and gives the man what he is entitled to. Every other fish culturist gets the pay of $900 a year. This place is, in fact, filled by a fish culturist; was when it was filled by the gentleman from Massachusetts. I think the gentleman from New York can afford to let the place be filled in that way. The item that is offered is probably subject to a point of order, because it requires the man, in addition to being a fish culturist, to do certain clerical work; but it would not be subject to a point of order if that requirement were left out.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, yes; it would.

Mr. MANN. Not at all. Where we have an item for one fish culturist it is not subject to a point of order if we offer to make it two.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman from Illinois realize that what is done in this case is to provide two instead of one at the same salary which the one is now receiving?

Mr. MANN. That part of it is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. The balance of it striking out is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. MANN. That part of it which provides that the man shall perform other duties may be subject to a point of order. That is easily left out, but the gentleman himself would not desire that left out if the item stays in.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The item is subject to a point of order, with or without.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I did not hear what happened in my absence, but certainly no discourtesy was intended to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Massachusetts made no complaint.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We can not run the Government on sympathy.

Mr. MANN. Nobody will accuse me of trying to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And I am going to prevent the gentleman from being persuaded from his usual Spartan course of duty. The fact that the gentleman has occupied a position where he had to work very hard and where he had an incentive to improve his position in life is no reason why we should increase the compensation of the present occupant of the place, simply because of a sentimental attachment of the gentleman for the place.

Mr. MANN. That would not be sufficient reason, I admit.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman's time be extended. We have before us innumerable requests. I am very much embarrassed myself as a Member of Congress and as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. There seems to be a universal opinion, unfortunately possessed more largely by persons who are intimately connected with me than by strangers, that if I wish it the compensation of any man for whom this committee appropriates can be increased. Sometimes I would like to have some compensations increased, but I can not yield to the requests. I am approached from one end of the land to the other, and it is not a pleasant task to refuse. I did once yield when I did not know any better, and for five years Members of the House kept telling me about what I did on that particular occasion, and I made up my mind long since that I would not succumb to temptation again.

Mr. MANN. Now, if the gentleman will yield, here is the situation. Every fish culturist gets a salary of $900 a year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This is not a fish culturist.

Mr. MANN. That is it. As a matter of fact, we are told by the gentleman from Massachusetts, and I think we will all take his word, this place is filled by a fish culturist. He took his civil-service examination himself for "fish culturist," and was appointed under that examination. He said he knew nothing whatever about the duties of a pilot and collector when he filled this office. Now——

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman would not have Members of the House violate the law and appoint a man qualified for one position to another position?

Mr. MANN. I think the Bureau of Fisheries did violate the law.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Are we to indorse and encourage it?

Mr. MANN. I do not think we are, but I think, under the circumstances, we ought to rectify our mistake.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But it is not a mistake.

Mr. MANN. This is a fish culturist. I will be frank to say I would not waste the time of the committee about it, it is such a small amount of money, except the sentimental part of it. I do not ask that the appropriation be made because of sentiment. The fact is the man is a fish culturist, and a fish culturist gets $900 a year. I take the gentleman's word for it. The sentimental side is to give attention to it. We give attention to it, so far as I am concerned, which otherwise I would not give, because I feel proud to serve in the House with a young man who is now a Member of Congress who only a few years ago applied for and obtained, not as a political job but as a civil-service job, a position which paid $720 a year for hatching fish. [Applause.]

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, it is perfectly apparent from the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts that the term "pilot and collector" is a misnomer. It is perfectly apparent that the position is filled by a man who is capable of doing clerical and fish-cultural work. As a strict proposition, as a strict question of parliamentary law probably a point of order would be good against any change in the designation, however obsolete and inappropriate it might be.

I appreciate the sentiment that the gentleman from Massachusetts has in regard to his old position and his desire to get rid of that misnomer in reference to the position and to raise it to the dignity and standing to which it ought to be raised, and I appreciate what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has said about the pride a man feels in having filled a humble and clerical position and that man's feelings on being chosen by his fellow citizens as a Representative in this House. Of course, I understand that is true of most of the Members of this House. There is hardly a Member on this floor who has not at some time in his early life filled a very humble and sometimes menial position, and he ought to feel proud of the fact that he filled it well, however humble it was. I do not think that is at all peculiar to the gentleman from Massachusetts. I doubt whether we could throw a stone in this House without hitting some man who by his own efforts has filled a very humble position and filled it with a great deal of credit and dignity and advanced above it. I think, however, that the gentleman from New York, if he has not already done so, would feel disposed to withdraw the point of order and permit the gentleman's amendment to be voted on by the House. [Applause.] As far as I am concerned I would not insist on the point of order. I would not want to commit the gentleman from New York, the chairman of the committee, to any policy, but as far as I am concerned I can readily understand the feelings of the gentleman from Massachusetts, feelings that do him credit; we would all feel the same thing if we were in the same position, and as far as I am concerned I will withdraw the point of order. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I am going to insist on the point of order. Fifty Members of this House, since this bill has been under consideration, have appealed to me upon sentimental or other grounds not to perform my duty by making points of order against amendments on this bill, and I can not differentiate between Members. I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I had supposed the Chair was ready to listen to a discussion of the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair listens to discussion when he has not made up his mind, but he has in this case, and he sustains the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. Do I understand the Chair will not hear gentlemen?

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentlemen desires to be heard, but the Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I am more interested in the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations than I am in this item. I think the item is a worthy one and should be allowed, but it is very much more important that this committee does not lose its jurisdiction. That is a very important matter, in my opinion.

The Committee on Appropriations unquestionably has authority to provide the necessary officials and necessary help to carry on this work at these fish stations. Nowhere can any law be found to the contrary. The Committee on Appropriations has authority to provide for these fish stations. It can increase the number of places at any station, and all this amendment does is to increase the number of fish culturists at Woods Hole by one. There is now one fish culturist at $900 a year. The amendment provides for two at that sum per annum.

Now, if the committee has no jurisdiction to do that, it has no jurisdiction over this subject at all. The other provision of the amendment is to strike out. Clearly an amendment to strike out is in order always.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair begs to say to the gentleman from Wyoming that he is incorrect in his statement that the amendment only provides for the matter the gentleman has stated. It is also provided he may be assigned to temporary duty at clerical or other work when deemed necessary by the commissioner.

Mr. MONDELL. If the Chair will allow me, the committee could provide for a clerk; it can provide for the fish culturist; it can provide for one who shall perform the joint duty.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is mistaken. We can not provide anything of the kind.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand that the committee can do anything of the kind, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 161, line 18, after the word "machinists, $960," strike out "fish culturist, $900; pilot and collector, $720," and insert "two fish culturists, at $900 each."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order it is not authorized by law.

Mr. MANN. None of it is authorized by law.

Mr. FITZGERALD. All of it is authorized by law.

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon, he can not find a line that authorizes this except we authorize the establishment of a fish-cultural station. We authorized a fish-cultural station at Springfield, Utah, last year, I think. We did not say anything in it about these jobs.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We did not establish it last year.

Mr. MANN. When did we establish it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Several years ago.

Mr. MANN. This is the first time we ever carried any officers for it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. For what?

Mr. MANN. The Springfield, Utah, station. Now, we do not specify, and it would be redundance for us when we create a fish station to specify how many laborers there should be at the station. The authorization is for the establishment of the station and to maintain it. It is always in order, where the law does not limit the number of employees, and you have a certain number provided for in the appropriation bill, to increase it. The standard and stock illustration is the Post Office Department. Every year we increase the number of post-office clerks through the United States at various salaries. According to the gentleman's contention, we could not do that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is a different situation.

Mr. MANN. It is not different at all.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is a provision in the Revised Statutes that makes it in order.

Mr. MANN. There is no such provision at all in the Revised Statutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. MANN. There is no such provision in the Revised Statutes at all. There is the Post Office reorganization bill, which provides that clerks shall have their salaries increased until they reach a certain limit, but no authorization for clerks beyond that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is still mistaken.

Mr. MANN. I am not mistaken. I was here when the bill was passed. The gentleman was busy with an appropriation bill. Now, the gentleman maintains there is no authority for this. If that is true, then there is no authority for the fish-culturists at $900 now in the bill, and according to his contention that was subject to a point of order. If that was subject to a point of order, it is in order to change it from one to two. That is a germane amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not admit that what is in the bill is subject to a point of order.

Mr. MANN. If what is in the bill is not subject to a point of order, then it is in order for us to provide a fish-culturist at this station.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not necessarily.

Mr. MANN. If not necessarily, logically so. There is no authorization of law at any of these places except in the appropriation bill itself, and an authorization to maintain an establishment which we have authorized to be created. We provided last year in this bill for two new vessels in the Coast and Geodetic Survey. We did not say anything about putting men on them. Now, does my friend from New York seriously think that there is no authority of law when those vessels are built for us to appropriate money for the crew with which to man those vessels?

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] reserve his point of order for me to make a brief statement?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to be considered as doing the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] any injustice in what I said before. I stated that through a misunderstanding I was not notified to appear before the committee when the Commissioner of Fisheries appeared before the committee and they had this under consideration. But I did have an opportunity to appear after it had been considered and after the commissioner appeared, and was notified by the chairman, and appeared afterwards and was given ample opportunity to make a statement. But the chairman stated he could not favorably consider the matter because it did not appear in the estimates. Whereupon, I left the letter from the Commissioner of Fisheries, as I before stated. I do not want to do the chairman any injustice, because I was tendered every courtesy by him and given every opportunity after I was notified to make my position clear. Neither do I want to appear, Mr. Chairman, as asking for the passage of this amendment as a matter of sentiment. I deeply appreciate the kindly reference of the minority leader [Mr. MANN].

I think it should be passed to perfect the personnel of the staff of that station and put it upon a proper basis. It does not increase the number of employees there, but changes a title, we ought not appoint a man pilot and collector at a station and require him to take a fish-culturist civil-service examination and appoint him on the station staff, require him to do fish-cultural work, and not permit him or require him to do any piloting.

I hope the gentleman will not press the point of order, because this change is agreeable to the commissioner of the bureau, and would very likely have been urged by them if I had called it to their attention sufficiently early. It seems to me to be a matter of sufficient merit to justify favorable action at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist upon his point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman if there is any law which fixes the compensation of these positions at this time?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They are under an appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 49, noes 32.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter no part of the appropriations for propagation of food fishes shall be expended for hatching or planting fish or eggs in any State in which, in the judgment of the Secretary of Commerce, there are not adequate laws for the protection of the fishes, nor in any State in which the United States Commissioner of Fisheries and his duly authorized agents are not accorded full and free right to conduct fish-cultural operations, and all fishing and other operations necessary therefor, in such manner and at such times as is considered necessary and proper by the said commissioner or his agents.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the section from line 11 down to and including line 21.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina makes a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is subject to a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FITZGERALD for the committee: After line 10, page 163, insert as follows:

"No part of the appropriations herein for propagation of food fishes shall be expended for hatching or planting fish or eggs in any State in which, in the judgment of the Secretary of Commerce, there are not adequate laws for the protection of the fishes, nor in any State in which the United States Commissioner of Fisheries and his duly authorized agents are not accorded full and free right to conduct fish-cultural operations, and all fishing and other operations necessary therefor, in such manner and at such times as is considered necessary and proper by the said commissioner or his agents."

[Mr. RAGSDALE addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will prevail. It has been of exceeding great value in conserving the fish of America. Until very recently in nearly all of the States there was and even now in some of the States there is practically no protection given to the fish. Streams are dynamited, seining is had, and all sorts of unlawful practices are frequently indulged in even where laws have been passed, and in some States unfortunately there are not adequate laws to protect the fish that are put in the streams.

Now the Government ought not to do a useless thing. It ought not to spend the people's money in supplying fish for the various States unless those States are going to cooperate in the protection of the fish that are put in the streams and in the ponds. The effect of this has not been to have the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries act arbitrarily. It has not resulted in his denying to any State, or any locality of any State, a proper request for fish, but it has enabled him and his agents to bring to bear proper pressure to see to it that the fish were protected and that the laws of the State were enforced.

I know that in the State of Kentucky the having of this provision in was of value within the past few years in causing some of the State laws to be better enforced and in breaking up some of the practices that had rendered nugatory the efforts of men to improve the condition of the fish in the various streams of that State. I do not believe you will find a single State official interested in the preservation of fish or of game that would not commend this provision. Its effect has been altogether salutary, and I know of no instance in which the power has been abused. I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlemen from New York [Mr. BENNET] offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BENNET to the committee amendment: After the word "therefor" insert "not contrary to State laws relating to the time and manner of taking fish."

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, the word "therefor," as it appeared in the paragraph that was stricken out, is on line 19 of page 163, and this amendment, I think, would meet with the approbation of my colleague, for this reason: Every State that has good fish laws, like the State of New York, has certain times when seining is prohibited, and it ought not to be within the power of the United States Commissioner of Fisheries and his assistants to come into our State, or any other State, and insist on seining and pursuing other methods of fishing at times prohibited by our State laws; and I do not understand that the United States Commissioner of Fisheries now does that. This simply is declaratory of existing practice.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, there is only one thing that occurs to me. In a general way I am in harmony with what he has said. A certain amount of seining is done at times during the closed season in the interest of the preservation of fish, not by individuals but by either the State or the Federal Government. For instance, there are a number of streams, like the Ohio River, which overflow their banks. The result is that a great many bass and other fish are caught in the overflowed area and on the going down of the water those fish would die unless they were rescued and put either back into the river or into other suitable places. In such instances the Federal Government and the States properly seine and capture these fish.

Mr. MANN. And they do it also to get the eggs.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; there are times when it is desirable to get eggs for artificial propagation when it would be unlawful to take them because of the closed season. I do not think there is any danger of the Federal Government undertaking to violate a State law, even though it could, except for a reason that should meet with the acquiescence of State officials and everyone else.

Mr. BENNET. I am in sympathy with the position taken by the gentleman from Kentucky, and I do not think he is urging that the acts of the United States officials would be in violation of State laws. The amendment that I suggest simply does not confer or attempt to confer on the United States Fish Commissioner the power to go within the boundaries of a State and violate the laws of a State.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] does not fully appreciate the situation. In various States the capturing of certain classes of fish is absolutely prohibited at certain seasons of the year. That is applicable to catching fish in a fish-cultural pond owned by the Government of the United States. This is in here for the purpose of permitting the Government to catch their own fish if they want to.

Mr. BENNET. It does not do that.

Mr. MANN. I think it does. That is what it was put in for. That is what it was intended for and that is the effect of it. At certain seasons of the year they want to catch fish to get the eggs. That ought to be forbidden to the ordinary person, as to some fish, and in some places it is; but it ought not to be forbidden to those who are getting the eggs for the purpose of hatching fish from them. Now, if the gentleman's amendment goes in, you might as well leave this out. Anybody can do it who does not violate the State law, because anybody has the right to do a lawful thing.

Mr. BENNET. As I read this amendment, which is simply a limitation on the appropriation, it gives the United States Fish Commissioner the right to say to a particular State that unless they will fix their laws so that in his judgment they will provide adequately for the protection of the fishes, and unless they accord to him full and free right to conduct fish-cultural operations as he wishes to, he can not spend any of this appropriation within the boundaries of that State. I do not think any United States official ought to have the right to say to any State officer "Unless you let me violate your State laws, then you can not use the United States appropriation within your boundaries."

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, that is not what they say. They simply say, "We do not ask to violate your State law, but if you do not make your State law so reasonable as to enable the Government to carry on our legitimate work, then we will not give you any fish."

Mr. BENNET. My amendment simply makes it clear that that is the effect of it.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think it goes further than that.

Mr. BENNET. I do not think so. I ask unanimous consent that my amendment may be reported again.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the gentleman's amendment will be reported again.

The clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the amendment offered by Mr. BENNET: After the word "therefor," in line 19 of the amendment, insert "not contrary to State laws relating to the time and manner of taking fish."

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman will see the point right there. This provides for the free right to conduct fish-cultural operations. Now, in the conduct of those operations, it is frequently necessary to take fish, and to take the spawn of fish at a time that may be prohibited under a State law. Unless the State is willing to make an exception in regard to the Federal Government, it has no right to complain if the Federal Government says, "We will not give you any of our fish."

Mr. BENNET. Let me see if I can not state the position as I understand it. Take my State of New York; it has a closed season for black bass. I have not the law before me, but we will say that black bass can not be caught for any purpose during the month of May. Now, the fish culturist over here wants to seine for black bass during the month of May, and that is prohibited by the New York State statute. He says to the State of New York, "Unless you permit me to seine for black bass in the month of May, which is the month when I want to seine for them, then I am not permitted by law to spend any part of the appropriation for the propagation of food fishes within the State of New York." I think that is all wrong; and he deprives us of the appropriations until we change our laws.

Mr. SHERLEY. What would happen would be this, as to certain kinds of fish, unless they are taken during the spawning season, in order to be stripped of their eggs, there can be but little artificial propagation of that species. It would not do to capture them at other times, and the very illustration the gentleman uses is an example of that, except that bass are never bred artificially.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York simply puts the interpretation upon this provision that has been placed upon it by the Bureau of Fisheries from the beginning. I do not think the bureau has ever assumed that it had the right under this language to go into a State and take fish contrary to the State law. But some employee of the bureau somewhere, feeling rather important, might attempt to do that, and we ought to make it very clear that we do not intend to give the Federal Government authority to violate a State law.

Now, this is true in regard to the fish laws of most of the States—certainly in my State—while provision is made for a closed season, provision is also made for taking fish for breeding purposes; and if it is necessary in any State, in order to allow the Federal Government to take fish when they are needed, to amend the State law, the State law should be amended, and it undoubtedly will be. The officials of States where they have State hatcheries sometimes need to take fish at a time when and in a manner they could not be taken by the individual. This amendment makes it clear to the employees of the Government who may be a little dense or inclined to overstep State authority, and will prevent trouble.

Mr. WILSON of Florida. Mr. Chairman, may we not have the amendment again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment will be again reported.

The Clerk again read the amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BENNET) there were 3 ayes and 40 noes.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on fish culture and other Federal activities in the Northwest.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

[Mr. RAGSDALE addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Alaska fisheries service: For purchase or construction of two motor launches for use in connection with the Alaska fisheries service, $10,000.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, as a new paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 166, following line 3, insert:
"Fish-cultural station, Orangeburg, S. C.: For further equipment of the station, and other necessary improvements, $6,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, some few years ago authorization was made for the establishment of a fish-cultural station at Orangeburg, S. C., with a limit of cost of $25,000, if my recollection serves me right. I have been informed in a letter from the Commissioner of Fisheries, dated May 31, 1916, that $6,000 is necessary to fully equip and complete this fish-cultural station. They now have in operation two ponds. They have one cottage, and they desire to extend the propagation work and at the same time improve the ground and probably put in another pond.

The commissioner in the letter calls my attention to the fact that this matter was not called to the attention of the Committee on Appropriations in the estimates in the regular way because it was not until some time in May that the inspector was sent to look over the station to determine what was necessary in the way of further improvement to fully equip it. The inspector has made that visit and he reports back that $6,000 will fully equip the station and put it running at its full capacity.

I have had several conversations with the gentleman from New York, the chairman of the committee, and I filed with him some time ago this letter of the Commissioner of Fisheries. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman may not press his point of order, although it is not entirely certain in my mind that the point is well taken. I would like to say, if I may be permitted, that personally I am greatly interested in the Bureau of Fisheries. I have made some study of the meat-food situation of this country, and I think any man who has done that has been impressed with the fact that we are face to face with a serious situation in that regard.

A pound of first-class steak is costing to-day from 35 to 40 cents. The price of beef cattle is higher to-day, I think, than at any time in the history of the country. We are bringing into the world, it seems to me, more mouths to feed than we are producing meat food products to feed them with. The American people eat more meat per capita than any people in the world, except the people of Australia. It is necessary that we not only conserve the meat supply of the country, but that we begin to look for new sources of supply, and I think one of the neglected sources of supply in the past has been the fish of the country. I, for one, am very anxious to see the Bureau of Fisheries encouraged as much as possible and the present hatcheries built up as quickly as possible to their full capacity. It is for this reason that I am urging this appropriation of $6,000 so that the station at Orangeburg, as quickly as possible, may begin to do its full service in furnishing fish to the streams of that State. So far the hatchery has been doing a splendid work, and I am informed by the Commissioner of Fisheries that when his plans are completed this station will be one of the very best inland fisheries in the country. It is ideally located.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. I yield for a question.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have understood that some of the most important varieties of food fish are falling off to a considerable extent. As the gentleman seems to have made some study of that, can he advise me in respect to it?

Mr. LEVER. I have no information on that proposition, but I feel that whatever encouragement we can give to the propagation of fish in this country, to increase the food supply, is well worthy of the efforts of this Congress, and worthy of the small appropriations that we are making from year to year for that purpose.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, as stated by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] this station was established a few years ago with a limit of cost and the total amount has been appropriated. There are in this bill general appropriations for maintenance and equipment. The appropriations for the current year amount to $350,000, and this bill carries an additional $10,000 to enable the Bureau of Fisheries to add any equipment that may be proper to these stations. The bureau has been treated liberally. Of course it can not be expected that Congress will wait until the month of June for estimates of appropriations for the fiscal year commencing the 1st of July. They should be submitted at the opening of the Congress. Under the circumstances I will be compelled to insist upon the point of order and suggest to the gentleman from South Carolina that, in view of the letter from the bureau, they ought to be able to use money out of the general appropriation to do what it says is necessary.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I am glad to have the gentleman make that statement, because I propose to insist upon their doing so.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. We just passed over an item for the maintenance of the vessels in the service of the Bureau of Fisheries, about which I desire to submit a few remarks. The Secretary of Commerce makes a rather remarkable statement in his annual report, found on page 11, in reference to the crews of certain of the steamers in the fishery service. He says:

> The steamers Albatross and Fish Hawk, of the fisheries service, are operated by naval crews commanded by warrant officers of the Navy under the direction of a civil officer of the Bureau of Fisheries. The crew of the Albatross numbers 81 officers and men and that of the Fish Hawk 44 officers and men. A more expensive arrangement than this could hardly be devised. The vessels are admirably handled, but if they had civilian crews, like the other ships of the department, there would be an immediate and considerable saving to the Government, and the Navy crews with their officers would be restored to the naval service, where they are needed. These two vessels, operated on a civilian basis like our others, would require, in the case of the Albatross, 35 officers and men, instead of 81, and in the case of the Fish Hawk, 26 officers and men, instead of 44 as at present.

There has been no defense from the Navy so far as I know in reference to this item, but I want to know whether 81 officers and men in the Navy are equivalent to only 35 officers and men in the merchant marine, as stated by the Secretary of Commerce. Is it true that our officers in the Navy are so inferior that it takes two officers in the Navy for one in the merchant marine, and two men in the Navy for one in the merchant marine? Thirty-five officers and men selected by the Secretary of Commerce, he says, can do the equivalent work of 81 officers and men in the Navy, the officers trained at public expense at Annapolis and the men enlisted and trained in the Navy. I will ask any member of the Naval Committee here if he will give me that information? I believe the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] is the only member on the job. Can he tell me if it is admitted by the Navy that two men in the Navy are required to equal one in the merchant marine selected by the Secretary of Commerce to operate a vessel?

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that after contemplating the statistics and the figures furnished by the Secretary of Commerce heretofore, I do not now attach very much importance to what he has to say.

Mr. MANN. Then the Navy Department ought to defend itself. The Secretary of Commerce says that he can operate these vessels with half the men if they will turn out the Navy and let him put his men in. If it is true, it is important; if it is not true, it ought to be denied. I have had the impression, though I may be mistaken, that we train men in the Navy so that they know something. Perhaps we better turn the Navy out and put half the men selected by Secretary Redfield in charge of the naval vessels. We are talking about increasing the personnel of the Navy. All that will be necessary to do would be to let the Secretary of Commerce select the men and turn those who are in out and put his in, because he says that he can operate the vessel with less than half the number that Secretary Daniels can.

This is no idle talk. Here is a deliberate statement made in the annual report of the Secretary of Commerce, and the Navy has been afraid to take up the challenge. The Secretary of the Navy has made no denial that his men are only half men; that his officers are only half officers. I want to know whether it is true or not. I want somebody on behalf of the Navy to admit or deny. I am going to maintain my high opinion of the Navy. I want to know whether their officers and men are only equivalent to boys, whether when they go out to sea it takes two to one for ordinary men to carry a vessel through the waters. The Secretary says he can save a great deal of money by throwing the Navy out of the vessels and hiring Tom, Dick, and Harry by himself. Can he do it? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

IMMIGRATION SERVICE.

For enforcement of the laws regulating immigration of aliens into the United States, including the contract-labor laws; cost of reports of decisions of the Federal courts, and digests thereof, for the use of the Commissioner General of Immigration; salaries and expenses of all officers, clerks, and employees appointed to enforce said laws, including per diem in lieu of subsistence when allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914; enforcement of the provisions of the act of February 20, 1907, entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States," and acts amendatory thereof; necessary supplies, including exchange of typewriting machines, alterations, and repairs, and for all other expenses authorized by said act; preventing the unlawful entry of Chinese into the United States, by the appointment of suitable officers to enforce the laws in relation thereto; expenses of returning to China all Chinese persons found to be unlawfully in the United States, including the cost of imprisonment and actual expenses of conveyance of Chinese persons to the frontier or seaboard for deportation; refunding of head tax upon presentation of evidence showing conclusively that collection was made through error of Government officers; and including not exceeding $2,000 for operation, maintenance, and repair of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles; all to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of Labor, $2,450,000: Provided, That the purchase, use, maintenance, and operation of horses and motor vehicles required in the enforcement of the immigration and Chinese-exclusion laws outside of the District of Columbia may be contracted for and the cost thereof paid from the appropriation for the execution of those laws, under such terms and conditions as the Secretary of Labor may prescribe: Provided further, That not more than $10,000 of the sum hereby appropriated may be expended in the purchase and maintenance of such motor vehicles.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 168, line 17, strike out the figure "4" and insert in lieu thereof the figure "6," so as to make it read: "$2,650,000."

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, $2,650,000 was the amount asked by the Department of Labor. Up to the last Congress that was the amount that had been appropriated, as I recollect it, but it was cut down then $200,000. This bill as reported leaves it at $2,450,000, as it was in the last bill. The Secretary of Labor and the Commissioner General of Immigration say that that amount is totally inadequate for the successful discharge of the duties of that bureau. It is true that immigration has decreased on the Atlantic coast, but even in spite of the decrease there were last year four hundred and fifty-odd thousand who came into this country. The Commissioner General informs me that within the last five or six months there has been a very considerable increase even on the Atlantic coast, but the necessity for the amendment to give the additional $200,000 is to a very great extent to protect the Pacific coast and the Canadian and Mexican borders. The Commissioner General of Immigration and Mr. O'Donnell, who appeared before the committee, made a very clear statement in regard to these conditions. Mr. O'Donnell said:

> Now, while the lopping off of force could go to a certain limit at the Atlantic seaports because of the effect of the European war, we have had a very difficult problem presented to us on both the Canadian and Mexican borders and on the Pacific coast. There has been no cessation of immigration on the Pacific coast; in fact, it has increased, and there has been no let-up so far as the Canadian border is concerned. As a matter of fact, the work there has also increased.
> Mr. GILLETT. Where is the immigration from on the Pacific coast?
> Mr. O'DONNELL. From the Orient, from Japan, China, and a little from India. There is also some from Russia. Now, the situation on the Canadian border which has caused us so much embarrassment is this: There were hundreds of thousands of aliens in Canada who were subjects of countries with which Great Britain is now at war. For very obvious reasons those people wanted to get out of Canada and into this country if they could. We have been swamped at times, and there have at all times been constant streams of these people seeking to get across the border, either legitimately or surreptitiously—most of them, however, surreptitiously.
>
> Mr. GILLETT. Why couldn't they come?
>
> Mr. O'DONNELL. Because the Canadian Government has interned all of them who have shown any disposition to get out. As long as they kept quiet they are allowed a certain limited amount of freedom, but as soon as they made a break for the border they were taken up and placed in the internment camps.
>
> The CHAIRMAN. That should have helped you. You had somebody else working in your favor then.
>
> Mr. O'DONNELL. The fact is that these people have worked their way down to the border and have tried every expedient they could to get in. A great many of them are of the most undesirable class. We have had to meet that situation as best we might. We have withdrawn officers from the Atlantic seaports until we have nothing but skeleton organizations at those ports.
>
> Mr. GILLETT. There is nothing to do there, is there?
>
> Mr. O'DONNELL. There has been more or less immigration. For instance, at the port of New York English and other ships have been coming in right along. Only the German and Austrian ships have stopped.

Mr. GILLETT. They have not brought immigrants, have they?

Mr. O'DONNELL. Yes, sir. The Italian lines have been operating continuously and the Mediterranean and Greek lines have been operating.

Mr. GILLETT. They have not been bringing immigrants, have they?

Mr. O'DONNELL. Yes, sir. Here at the Ellis Island station, for instance, all the reduction of force that we could make consequent upon the reduced number of immigrants would not alter the fact that we would have to maintain our buildings there. We have got to keep up the mechanical force there, and we have had several hundred aliens in detention that we have been unable to deport for the reason that we could not get them into Europe. They were criminals, prostitutes, pimps, and the most undesirable class of people you could find, and we did not want to release them here, even on bond.

Mr. GILLETT. How many do you estimate have come over from Canada?

Mr. O'DONNELL. We have no way of estimating the number that have come over clandestinely, but the immigration on the Canadian border for the last fiscal year—that is, registered immigrants, or those that were manifested and recorded—the registered immigration over the Canadian border line in the last fiscal year was about 90,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman state from what page he is reading?

Mr. BURNETT. From page 1276 of the hearings. Mr. Chairman, Gen. Caminetti and Mr. O'Donnell give many other good reasons in the hearings before the committee. Here is a succinct statement with which I have been furnished by the Commissioner General in regard to this matter. It is as follows:

MEMORANDUM RELATIVE TO THE APPROPRIATION "EXPENSES OF REGULATING IMMIGRATION FOR THE FISCAL YEAR 1916–1917.

Two million six hundred and fifty thousand dollars is what has been estimated as necessary to maintain the Immigration Service for the ensuing fiscal year. The Committee on Appropriations has recommended only $2,450,000, a decrease of $200,000.

It is absolutely necessary that the $200,000 which has been cut out be restored for the following reasons:

(1) Immigration via the Atlantic ports, which are the most affected by the European war, is on the increase, and the prospects are that the total for the next fiscal year will be materially in excess of that of the fiscal year 1915; from present indications it may double in volume.

(2) There has been an increased immigration at all Pacific coast ports.

(3) Canadian border: Since the outbreak of the European war thousands of aliens in Canada, who were subjects of Governments with which Great Britain is now at war, have been seeking to cross the border into the United States, in most cases surreptitiously. The smuggling of contraband Chinese is also active. The registered immigration over the Canadian border line in the last fiscal year was 90,000 in round numbers, and rate of increase for the first 10 months of this year indicates that the increase will bring the figures above the 100,000 limit.

(4) Mexican border: In view of the Mexican situation additional officers and guards are necessary to handle the cases of diseased aliens and refugees, many of whom are entering the United States surreptitiously, the present force being insufficient to properly look after the work.

(5) There has been no cessation of work at the interior stations, as warrant proceedings have been instituted in the cases of several thousand aliens who can not now be deported because of war conditions, and their cases are being placed in shape for final action so that deportation may be made effective as soon as conditions permit.

(6) Employment work: There has been increased activity in connection with the employment work authorized by section 40 of the immigration act, and this must be curtailed and perhaps abandoned altogether unless additional funds can be obtained.

(7) Furloughs: During the first four months of the present fiscal year it was necessary to furlough a large number of employees in the Immigration Service in order to prevent a deficiency, and it is obvious that unless the additional $200,000 for which request is made is restored, it will become necessary early during the coming fiscal year to resume furloughs. It is apparent that to do so will have a very destructive effect on the morale of the service and prove extremely embarrassing. Not only that, but the effect of furloughing resulted in the loss of some of the best immigration officers because they were able to get steady employment either in civil life or in other departments of the Government at the compensation they were then receiving from the Immigration Service, and in some instances more.

(8) The Immigration Service, except during the European War, has been self-supporting; but when considered in connection with the service commencing at the time of the inauguration of the per capita tax on immigrants, it has yielded a net surplus revenue over all expenses of $10,000,000 in round numbers.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that this amendment will be adopted, because otherwise from the statement from the Department of Labor, the work along the borders especially will be greatly crippled. Not only that, but it is evident that the officers of the bureau at Ellis Island are doing much better work than they have ever done, of course by reason of the fact that they have more time to give to the individual alien on account of there being fewer of them coming over. Now, to reduce the amount or not to give the additional money for the purpose of increasing the force there will result in letting many undesirable aliens in who are now being kept out, on account of the fact their numbers are now increasing as stated by the Commissioner General of Immigration of the Department of Labor, and I hope that the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment close in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that all debate upon the pending amendment close in 20 minutes.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I want five minutes on this amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. I should like to have five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Five gentlemen seem to desire time.

Mr. BENNET. I would like to have two minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I will say 30 minutes; that is long enough.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 30 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the statement of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] in regard to this matter, and I simply want to reinforce his statement here by a word or two in regard to the conditions on the Pacific coast. It is true, as the gentleman stated, there is difficulty in keeping out immigrants coming from Canada. This immigration has greatly increased since the war in Europe. Now, I saw it stated by one of the officers of the charities association of our city, that practically 50 per cent of the people who applied for charity last year in Seattle, came from across the border.

It not only places a very great burden upon the people of that country to care for the people who are coming in, but it also very seriously disturbs the labor situation by having a great number of these men come over from Canada to the State of Washington. I know that no one in the House sympathizes with permitting that to be done. Then there is another feature also, and that is in regard to the Chinese. A great many Chinese cross the border from Canada. They take advantage of the general situation and cause additional trouble.

Mr. BORLAND. I understood the gentleman last winter to tell us that business was so good in Canada and so poor in Washington that the people were going from Washington over into Canada.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The gentleman never understood me to say anything of the kind.

Mr. BORLAND. Who work in the shingle mills in Washington?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. As to the shingle mills, during the last year, if it will be of any comfort to the gentleman, there was $2,000,000 worth of shingles shipped from British Columbia into the United States that would have been made in Washington if the duty had been left on shingles.

Mr. BORLAND. Where do all of these paupers come from?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. From British Columbia. But every man there does not work in a shingle mill. While the shingle mills up there were working full blast a majority of them in the State of Washington were closed, and it was due, I will say to my distinguished friend, to the law that your party placed on the statute books. I intended to make a talk on the immigration law, but I could not do so, as my distinguished friend, the gentleman from Missouri, seldom permits me to make a speech without attempting to immortalize himself by getting into it. I hope this increased appropriation will be made so that they may care for the Chinese, for the people that are coming across from Canada, to protect our country out there not only from taking care of the idle but to protect the laboring classes from this unjust competition.

If I have any time, I yield it to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has one minute left.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, in view of the limited time I would like to have the Chair stop me at the end of two minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I simply rise at this time to express the hope that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama will prevail. His views and mine on the literacy test, I think, can be correctly described as antagonistic, but so far as the existing law is concerned we have in the past and do now agree. The law as it is already on the statute books ought to be enforced. The force ought not to be permitted to disintegrate. The provisions which keep out undesirable immigrants, now in the law, are in the main good. They ought to be enforced, and if the bureau is crippled by reducing the appropriation, it will take years to get it back to the plane of perfection where it now is.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman know that this bill carries the same that the department had during the current year, and all that they were able to expend the year before?

Mr. BENNET. I know that the gentleman from Alabama gave good reasons why this $200,000 increase should be made.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this appropriation is somewhat different than many other appropriations that are carried in this bill. The Immigration Service has spent $10,000,000 less than has been obtained from those who enter this country by virtue of the head tax. Now, clearly the committee should not desire to hamper the Immigration Service and the splendid work they have been doing. It is serious not only on the Canadian border but on the Mexican border in particular. It was my privilege to have met the collector of the port of San Francisco yesterday and again this morning in regard to the smuggling of opium. It is the hardest thing on earth to keep the smuggling of opium from Mexico on the ground, as he states, that they have the highest power machines that the country will afford, and they can not even catch them. They get up in the country and the opium is brought in. It is the same way in regard to the Japanese and Chinese.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That has nothing to do with this.

Mr. RAKER. It is true; but the same thing more strongly applies to the Chinese and the Japanese in Mexico, and there have been many of them that have crossed the border and are crossing it continually, and it is admitted by the Department of Labor, the department having express charge of this, that there are many, many coming over all the time, when they can ship opium, and simply money involved, and how much more temptation it is to bring these men across when they pay $100 to $500 to come into the United States. And with that long border of some 2,000 miles they can come over. Undoubtedly the argument will be made that the Army now is on the Mexican border; but there is a vast territory between the place where the Army is and on the Pacific coast where these men can come in and do come in continually. And this is what the Commissioner of Immigration says:

Mr. CAMINETTI. There has been a large number of aliens trying to come in from Canada surreptitiously; we have had a lot of difficulty there. Our force on the border has been increased materially. The Mexican border also has been a source of difficulty, and there we have had to add to the number that was formerly employed. It has been a source of difficulty for the last two or three years; the difficulties are increasing all along and we have a larger force there this year than we have had for years past. Then, besides that, we are required to employ quite a force in the detection of smugglers on the southern border, on the northern border, and on the Pacific coast. Under the new system we have made 149 arrests of professional smugglers. During the last fiscal year, in order to keep up that work and prevent people from smuggling aliens into the country, it was necessary for us to employ a special force on our borders.

Now, gentlemen, this fund, ranging over $10,000,000 more than it has cost the Government to maintain it, the legitimate aliens coming to this country having paid that amount into the Treasury of the United States—and here comes this great department, that desires to keep out those who are undesirable citizens, keeping out the criminals, prostitutes, and pimps and the most undesirable class of people. They have them arrested, and some of them are deported at the present time. And I know that the great Committee on Appropriations, composed of these good men, do not want to cripple this service, and they ought to have this $200,000 to make it complete, to enforce the law so that this criminal class may be kept out, and that when they are apprehended in this country they might be arrested and returned to the country from which they came.

Two million six hundred and fifty thousand dollars is what has been estimated as necessary to maintain the Immigration Service for the ensuing fiscal year. The Committee on Appropriations has recommended only $2,450,000, a decrease of $200,000.

It is absolutely necessary that the $200,000 which has been cut out be restored for the following reasons:

(1) Immigration via the Atlantic ports, which are the most affected by the European war, is on the increase, and the prospects are that the total for the next fiscal year will be materially in excess of that of the fiscal year 1915; from present indications it may double in volume.

(2) There has been an increased immigration at all Pacific coast ports.

(3) Canadian border: Since the outbreak of the European war thousands of aliens in Canada, who were subjects of Governments with which Great Britain is now at war, have been seeking to cross the border into the United States, in most cases surreptitiously. The smuggling of contraband Chinese is also active. The registered immigration over the Canadian border line in the last fiscal year was 90,000, in round numbers, and rate of increase for the first 10 months of this year indicates that the increase will bring the figures above the 100,000 limit.

(4) Mexican border: In view of the Mexican situation, additional officers and guards are necessary to handle the cases of diseased aliens and refugees, many of whom are entering the United States surreptitiously, the present force being insufficient to properly look after the work.

(5) There has been no cessation of work at the interior stations, as warrant proceedings have been instituted in the cases of several thousand aliens who can not now be deported because of war conditions, and their cases are being placed in shape for final action so that deportation may be made effective as soon as conditions permit.

(6) Employment work: There has been increased activity in connection with the employment work authorized by section 40 of the immigration act, and this must be curtailed and perhaps abandoned altogether unless additional funds can be obtained.

(7) Furloughs: During the first four months of the present fiscal year it was necessary to furlough a large number of employees in the Immigration Service in order to prevent a deficiency, and it is obvious that unless the additional $200,000 for which request is made is restored, it will become necessary early during the coming fiscal year to resume furloughs. It is apparent that to do so will have a very destructive effect on the morale of the service and prove extremly embarrassing. Not only that, but the effect of furloughing resulted in the loss of some of the best immigration officers, because they were able to get steady employment either in civil life or in other departments of the Government at the compensation they were then receiving from the Immigration Service, and in some instances more.

(8) The Immigration Service, except during the European war, has been self-supporting; but when considered in connection with the service commencing at the time of the inauguration of the per capita tax on immigrants, it has yielded a net surplus revenue over all expenses of $10,000,000 in round numbers.

There has been no cessation of work at the interior stations, as warrant proceedings have been instituted in the cases of several thousand aliens who can not now be deported because of war conditions, and their cases are being placed in shape for final action so that deportation may be made effective as soon as conditions permit.

As shown in the statement, immigration for the Pacific ports is on the increase and the conditions along the border have rendered necessary greater expenditures than ever before in order to keep this country from being flooded with undesirable aliens of all classes.

UNEMPLOYMENT WORK.

A table on page 1279 of the hearings shows the increased activity in connection with the employment work authorized by section 40 of the immigration act. Bringing the figures down to April 30, 1916, it is ascertained that 51,897 persons have been directed to employment during the first 10 months of the fiscal year, as against 11,871 for the entire fiscal year 1915.

Smuggling prevention work, both as applied to Chinese and other aliens, is severely handicapped by a lack of men, and it is impracticable to furnish any more officers without creating a deficiency. The inauguration of patrol work with fast motor boats has cut down smuggling by water along the Great Lakes and in southern California, but the land borders are much harder to guard, owing to their great extent, and the need of money to furnish additional employees is very pressing. The $200,000 for which request is made restores the appropriation to what it was up to June 30, 1915, and as there is a surplus of over $10,000,000 from head tax on immigrants, it is believed that the service should be supplied with the amount of money necessary to operate it efficiently.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to take but a moment to favor the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT]. I think that at the present time and in the future we can not be too careful in enforcing our immigration laws.

In the district which I have the honor to represent there is a port to which come a great many foreigners during the course of a year, relatively speaking, for that particular section of the country, and I recall that last year, because of insufficient appropriations, the inspector who lives in that district and who is assigned to cover the city of New Bedford and also Providence was laid off because of insufficient funds, and in consequence of that fact the service in that particular section was seriously handicapped.

We ought not to have that condition with respect to the immigration laws of the country. I recall several instances where, because he was urgently requested to do so, he went down to his office and performed the work on one or two assignments, although he was furloughed because of insufficient funds provided by the bill.

I submit that we should increase this appropriation to take care of what may come in the future. They ask for $200,000 additional, and that was the amount estimated. It puts it back on the basis where it was two years ago, if I understand aright, I hope the amendment will be adopted. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, one of the most important discussions that we have had on the floor of the House—and it has been repeated several times—was on the consideration of the immigration bill. I need not describe how intense the feeling and sharp the contest on those occasions. Some of us were heartily in favor of making the immigration laws more stringent. Others thought that the present laws were adequate. Now, in this case it seems to me that those who were in favor of the immigration bill as well as those who most bitterly opposed it ought certainly to be in favor of giving the Immigration Service all the means whereby the present laws can be rigidly enforced. The amount here appropriated is not sufficient. A most casual reading of the hearing will convince anyone of its utter inadequacy. The Immigration Department estimates ask for $200,000 more than is provided for in this bill. The amount desired by the department and which is covered in the estimate is the amount that was granted by Congress two years ago. It was the amount that has heretofore been carried, and last year was the first time that the Committee on Appropriations reduced the amount. Aside from the increased immigration on the Canadian, Pacific, and southern boundaries, which demand this estimated increase, there are many important functions that the Immigration Department is now called upon to perform. I recall that in my city last year the immigration inspector was laid off twice, furloughed, as they call it, without pay. That is injust and should be remedied. It seems to me that if other employees in the Federal service, and that obtains in practically all the departments of the Government, are laid off with pay and given 30 days and 15 days leave of absence with pay, it is an unjust discrimination to exact of the employees of the Immigration Service the hardship not only of not being granted any leave of absence, but to be laid off without pay.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield to the gentleman from Louisiana?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I want to say to the gentleman that his city was not alone in that matter. The port of New Orleans suffered the same in that respect.

Mr. HARRISON. That is true with practically all the ports throughout the country. The immigration office could not do otherwise; it was the only way that the department had to reasonably transact the public service and at the same time come within the appropriation granted by Congress. It was necessary to furlough the men in the service without pay for that time.

Mr. WILSON of Florida. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. WILSON of Florida. I want to add to what the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DUPRÉ] has said with respect to my town also.

Mr. HARRISON. It affected the immigration inspectors at the various ports. That is true.

Now, we have enlarged the duties of this department by providing for the employment of the unemployed, and this additional service imposes more work on the men employed in the service. I notice from the hearings here that this branch of the Immigration Service has procured in one year employment for 41,000 people. That costs money. That has benefited humanity. That is a great work, and it seems to me that we ought to give the Immigration Service of this country all the money that is reasonably needed to rigidly enforce the immigration laws of the country, perform all other duties imposed on that branch of the public service, and treat the men employed in that service on an equal basis with the men employed in the other departments of the Government. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, on this question both the proponents and the opposition to restriction based on the illiteracy test agree. What I desire to express here to-day I am going to say from the practical standpoint. I was at Ellis Island last year and also this year a number of times. I was amazed to find that at the port of New York, where 450,000 immigrants arrived in 1915, for about four months various clerks, stenographers, inspectors, and others in turn had to be furloughed.

These men are not receiving any extraordinary salaries. Each man is receiving about the same salary in the port of New York that the city of New York pays for similar work, and in many instances less. There is no reason why the United States Government should compel men to stay away from one month to four months in order to keep their jobs and earn a livelihood. That was the exact situation that prevailed there. I personally found it so. I met some of the men who were put off. I make this statement regardless of what may be said by some gentlemen, who have not visited the island and who do not know the actual facts as they exist over there.

Much has been said about the large number of people who arrive there who are not fit to be admitted to this country. As to the enforcement of the law, each and every one of us agrees that it should be squarely and fairly enforced, doing justice to both the immigrant and the Government. You can not enforce this law and keep out men who have committed crime, men who are unfit morally and physically or otherwise to be admitted, or provide proper medical treatment for immigrants unless you maintain at Ellis Island and other places a number of men sufficient to handle these cases properly and make the necessary expenditures to keep the hospital in proper condition.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIEGEL. Yes; with pleasure.

Mr. RAKER. As a matter of fact, the service already has been hampered by reason of the reduced appropriation last year?

Mr. SIEGEL. There is no question about that. Any man who is interested in the question of immigration—and I have given the matter close study—must give an affirmative answer.

Mr. RAKER. If you do not give them this $200,000 this year, the service will be materially hampered.

Mr. SIEGEL. It will be more seriously handicapped this year than it was last. The same men will not remain in the service if they know in advance that they can not be employed for the entire 12 months in a year. But immigrants will arrive probably in larger numbers than in 1915.

There is another point that has not been discussed here. At Seattle a large number of immigrants are arriving at the present time. The department has not sufficient facilities with which to handle the immigration cases at that point. Arrangements must be made to be able to treat immigrants with care for their comfort, so that their first impression of the United States must be favorable and hasten the day when they will apply for citizenship. If this reduction is to be continued, it means that the immigrants arriving at Seattle will not be examined as they should be, nor will we be able to provide proper housing facilities or hospital treatment for them if required.

Mr. Chairman, realizing the vast amount of money that we have appropriated and that we will appropriate this year, I would not urge the expenditure of an additional sum of $200,000 at the present time for this purpose except for the fact that I think it is just as important, just as necessary, just as urgent to keep out of this country those who are prohibited from coming in under our present laws and to provide proper medical and surgical treatment and facilities for immigrants as it is to appropriate money for other necessary improvements in other branches of the Government. To keep out of this country those who would smuggle themselves into this country is doing a double service. It is doing a service to each locality, and it is doing a service to the States upon which the burdens will fall, because such people usually commit crimes; also because the United States Government does not take care of the sick or insane who have recently arrived, although we have a surplus derived from immigrants of over $10,000,000 and only expends a paltry sum toward helping to Americanize the immigrants who come to this country. There is no necessity to economize at the expense of the immigrant. Our people do not ask it. For that reason I ask that the amendment be adopted.

Mr. STAFFORD and Mr. FITZGERALD rose.

The CHAIRMAN. There are eight minutes remaining. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Wisconsin for three minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not care to speak for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Then, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will not prevail. For 1915 the appropriation was $2,649,000. The department asked $2,910,000 for 1915, but was only able to expend $2,489,000. For the current year it was given $2,450,000. Instead of discharging the men it did not need, as it confessed, it suggested to the employees of the bureau that every man be retained so as to keep his position, but be furloughed a part of the time without pay. There was no need for their services for the entire year, but in order to keep them all in the service it was suggested that instead of discharging them they should all be retained, but part of them furloughed without pay. Anybody who wants to pay these men when their services are not needed and can not properly be utilized by the Government will vote to increase this appropriation by $200,000.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I will not yield. I have only five minutes. When the immigration to this country was 1,400,000 persons a year the appropriation was what they now ask that they be given. Last year the immigration was about 400,000 persons. Gentlemen talk about the difficulties on the Canadian border. The Canadian Government will not permit any alien to come into the United States from Canada. It has practically interned all aliens. Gentlemen talk about aliens coming in from Mexico. There are only a few places where they can come in now, and with our military forces there no alien can escape. These gentlemen talk of putting a line of special agents from one end of the Mexican border to the other. They will need more agents than we will have men in the United States Army on the border to patrol that whole section; but it is a fact, notorious to anybody who has been near the Mexican border, that there are only two or three places where men can come in.

Now, this is what is meant here: This committee has recommended every dollar that this service needs for the proper discharge of its duties. There is a strong movement on foot to get this additional $200,000, so that these employees whose services are not required for the entire year will be paid for the entire year, regardless of the necessity for their services. Anybody who desires to keep these men employed when they are not needed will vote for the $200,000. Those who want to give the service the money that it actually requires for the discharge of its duties will give the department what the committee has recommended and just what the department spent in 1915.

Mr. NOLAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will not yield. All the time has been used on the other side. The department had $2,649,000 in 1915. They did not expend it all; they had $200,000 left on their hands; they did not need it. Immigration diminished last year and this year, and will not be any greater next year, because there is no immigration from Europe. There can not be any immigration from Canada and Mexico. The immigration on the Pacific coast is practically limited——

Mr. BURNETT. Where have the 400,000 come from, then?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I can not yield. The question is whether we will give the service the money it actually requires or whether we will contribute $200,000 to pay men who should have been discharged and whose services are not now required. This committee has recommended every dollar that the service ought to have. I am in favor of enforcing the immigration law. The only question I ever differed upon was the literacy test. I am in favor of enforcing the law. I want to give the service every dollar necessary, but I do not wish to give to this service or any other service of the Government money that it should not have merely to keep men on the public pay roll.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. NOLAN. I understood there was an extra three minutes; that the gentleman consumed five minutes, and that there were three minutes remaining.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman used the time. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. FITZGERALD) there were—ayes 43, noes 39.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask for tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. FITZGERALD and Mr. BURNETT.

The committee again divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 49, noes 55.

Accordingly, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BENNET: Page 168, line 26, after the end of the line, insert:

"Provided further, That no part of the sum hereby appropriated shall be expended for the maintenance at any United States immigrant station of any of the privileges now disposed of after public competition, as provided by the act of February 20, 1907, entitled 'An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States.'"

Mr. FITZGERALD. I reserve a point of order on the amendment. I could not understand it from the reading.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I would be very glad to be heard on the point of order. This is simply a limitation. The amendment provides that no part of the appropriation shall be used for the purpose of maintaining any of the privileges—that is, money changing or anything of that sort—which now by law are let by competitive bidding. It is not subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York make the point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the statement of my colleague, Mr. BENNET, is correct, I can not make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think it is subject to the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not see that there is any objection to the amendment, and we will accept it.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This paragraph in the bill carries an appropriation in a lump sum of $2,450,000. The paragraph is made up of a number of distinct items. In line 17, page 167, is an item for the enforcement of the laws regulating immigration of aliens; in line 21 is an item for salaries and expenses of various employees; in line 25 an item for the enforcement of the act of 1907 relating to immigration; on page 168, line 3, for necessary supplies; and in line 5 for the prevention of the unlawful entry of the Chinese into the United States.

I desire to ask the chairman of the committee, in view of the fact that the paragraph is made up of several items relating to distinct propositions, why the paragraph should not be so divided as to assign definite amounts to each one of the items that one service may not be supported amply and another made to suffer, and why Congress should not exercise the authority it has to say that a certain amount, in its judgment, is necessary for a certain purpose and no more, instead of leaving so wide a discretion in the hands of the department to distribute money between several services which are distinct in character?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The reason is very plain. All of these acts referred to are acts which exclude specific classes of persons. If a specific appropriation were made to enforce particular acts, persons employed under this specific appropriation could not be utilized to enforce some other act. For instance, $500,000 was appropriated to enforce the Chinese exclusion act. Special agents were appointed. They could not be utilized to do any work in the enforcement of other immigration laws, although they might be at a place where an agent was needed and no other agent was present. It might be necessary to send another man 200 or 300 miles to attend to a trifling thing which, if it were not for the limitation, the other man could attend to. These employees now can be utilized to enforce any law relative to the exclusion of aliens. It is for the efficient and better conduct of the service.

Mr. HAWLEY. But the gentleman believes that wherever it is possible, these appropriations ought to be broken up in the manner I suggested.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is true, but it is necessary to overcome the decision of the controller that the entire force of the immigration service be in such a condition that any man in it can be used to carry out any order of his superior officer affecting the service.

Mr. HAWLEY. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For refund to the Cunard Steamship Co. (Ltd.) of amount erroneously paid for maintenance of John and Carl Antila between October 19, 1914, and January 31, 1915, at the Ellis Island immigration station, $63.75.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes on a matter not connected with the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes on a matter not connected with the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

STAYING ON THE JOB.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, the impulse of every man who is unjustly assailed is to turn upon his assailant. There are very few of us who live strictly up to the Biblical injunction to "turn the other cheek." In what I am about to say I mean no criticism of any Member of Congress who has gone to his district or who may go to his district to fight for his political life. "Self-preservation is the highest law of nature." But, Mr. Chairman, we face an extraordinary situation in Congress today, and I believe it is the duty I owe to myself and the country to state the facts as they exist.

The party to which I belong, the Democratic Party, is in control of the Congress and the Presidency. The responsibility for legislation is squarely upon us. The country has a right to hold us responsible for legislation, and it will hold us responsible. The success of President Wilson and the Democratic Party demands that every Democrat in Congress stay at the post of duty.

Never before in the history of the country have so many important matters of legislation been pressing for solution. The Democratic Party is on trial for its life. We have made a good beginning. But we must not leave our work unfinished.

Mr. Chairman, in order to get this matter in a stronger light, I addressed a letter to Hon. CHAMP CLARK, Speaker of the House of Representatives, and I shall read his answer to the House and place it in the RECORD. The wise leadership of CHAMP CLARK in the Sixty-second Congress made possible the great Democratic victory of 1912. I have sought his advice in this matter. He has given it, and I shall "stay on the job" without regard to consequences at home. Following is the Speaker's letter:

THE SPEAKER'S ROOMS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., June 22, 1916.

Hon. MARTIN DIES,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MARTIN: Answering your letter as to whether it is better for you to stay on the job here or go campaigning in your district, my own judgment is that you ought to stay here. I believe if you do that your constituents will realize the fact that you are determined to discharge the duties for the term of which you were elected and will take care of you.

The situation in Congress is by no means satisfactory. The House has done very well, but the Senate is very much behind. We only have 23 majority in the House, which is a very narrow margin as compared with the whole membership of the House—435. If 13 of our men kick out or vote with the Republicans it gives them a majority. If 24 of our men absent themselves and the Republicans are all here it gives them a majority.

July will be crowded with important business, as well as the rest of this month. Very shortly the House appropriation bills will be coming back from the Senate loaded down with amendments of all sizes and sorts, and we will have as much of a fight on some of the Senate amendments as we had on the original bills. Conference reports will be pouring in, and they are very important.

Added to all this and the ordinary run of business we have the Mexican situation on hand, and no man can tell what will come out of that at any time. Also, the good-roads legislation, the rural-credits bill, and, on top of the whole thing, the revenue bill, whereby to raise the money for the extraordinary expenses that we have undertaken because of the troubled condition of the world. I would not be at all surprised if there are more important matters up in the House between now and the first of August than have ever been up at any one time.

Individually, I have refused all offers and invitations of every sort that would take me outside of Washington, because I think it is of the highest importance to the Democrats that we get through with this session in time to give our men an opportunity to go home and campaign before the election. I am as certain as I am living if we had gotten away from here 30 days sooner two years ago that instead of having 23 majority in the House we would have at least 50.

Now, the only way for Congress to get away from here as early as the middle of August is for all hands, from the captain to the cook, to stay here and work at it.

I am giving you the very same advice that I would give every Democratic Member if they would ask me.

Your friend,

CHAMP CLARK.

[Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

The accounting officers of the Treasury are authorized and directed to credit in the accounts of George Johannes, special disbursing agent, Department of Labor, the sum of $12.90, representing the amount reimbursed by him to Ettore Girolami, engineer in the Immigration Service, for expenses for lodging and meals at San Diego, Cal., which were disallowed by the Auditor for the State and Other Departments.

Mr. MANN. Notwithstanding what my friend from Texas [Mr. DIES] has said, there are now 34 Democratic Members out of over 200 on the floor of the House, and I do not see the gentleman from Texas. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

NATURALIZATION SERVICE.

For compensation, to be fixed by the Secretary of Labor, of examiners, interpreters, clerks, and stenographers, for the purpose of carrying on the work of the Bureau of Naturalization, provided for by the act approved June 29, 1906, as amended by the act approved March 4, 1913 (37 Stat. L., p. 736), and for their actual necessary traveling expenses while absent from their official stations, including street car fare on official business at official stations, together with per diem in lieu of subsistence, when allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914, and for such per diem together with actual necessary traveling expenses of officers and employees of the Bureau of Naturalization in Washington while absent on official duty outside of the District of Columbia; telegrams, verifications of legal papers, telephone service in offices outside of the District of Columbia; not to exceed $5,300 for rent of offices outside of the District of Columbia where suitable quarters can not be obtained in public buildings; carrying into effect section 13 of the act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., p. 600), as amended by the act approved June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. L., p. 765): Provided, That in no event shall the whole amount allowed the clerk of a court and his assistants from this appropriation or any similiar appropriation made hereafter exceed the one-half of the gross receipts of said clerk from naturalization fees during the fiscal year immediately preceding; and for mileage and fees to witnesses subpœnaed on behalf of the United States; the expenditures from this appropriation shall be made in the manner and under such regulations as the Secretary of Labor may prescribe, $275,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 171, line 3, after the word "preceding," insert the following:

"Provided further, That payment is authorized for the services rendered during the month of June, 1916, by clerical assistants originally authorized by the Secretary of Labor, where allowances for salaries exceeding the one-half of the naturalization fees of the court for the fiscal year 1916."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the decision of the comptroller was that the one-half of the fees of the current year controlled. He held that one act passed in 1910 contemplated the fees of the preceding year. Before notice was sent out of that decision many clerks in these various offices had rendered services in this month for which they could not be paid unless this amendment passes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The unexpended balance of the appropriation of $2,500 made in the sundry civil act for the fiscal year 1912 and reappropriated for subsequent years, for removing fence and wall around the Botanic Garden and such grading, soiling, seeding, and sodding as may be incident thereto, is reappropriated and made available for the same purposes for the fiscal year 1917.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that portion of the paragraph beginning on line 3 and ending on line 10, page 173. This is an unexpended balance of appropriation of $2,500 made in the sundry civil act of the year 1912 and reappropriated.

Mr. SHERLEY. It is not subject to a point of order. The law requires the removal of the fence.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. My view of the matter is that it was required to be done during that year, and it has been carried forward every year since. There is no law requiring the removal of the fence.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have been unable to find it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, my recollection is that in the act locating the Grant monument in the Potomac Gardens the provision is contained.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not rule until it can be furnished with the law.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I have been unable to find any such law.

Mr. FITZGERALD. At any rate, it is in order in making provision for the Botanic Garden to move a fence, or anything else.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] would not make the point of order, probably, if he understood the situation. It is contemplated to take the fence down when the Grant monument is completed. It has not been taken down because the Grant monument has not been completed. It has been carried forward from year to year until the completion of the monument. When the monument is completed the fence will have to come down.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman is aware that there is a bill pending here, known as the Clayton bill, to move the Botanic Gardens further out into the country.

Mr. MANN. That has nothing to do with this.

Mr. SLAYDEN. That can not be done until this fence is removed.

Mr. MANN. I am in favor of the bill to which the gentleman referred, but that has nothing to do with this.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that if there is a law for the removal of it, of course the item is in order.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, there is such a law, but I can not put my hand on it just now.

The CHAIRMAN. Suppose we pass the item for the moment, until we can find the law.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Very well.

Mr. SHERLEY. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Capitol power plant: For lighting the Capitol, Senate and House Office Buildings, and Congressional Library Building, and the grounds about the same, Botanic Garden, Senate stables and engine house, House stables, Maltby Building, and folding and storage rooms of the Senate; pay of superintendent of meters, at the rate of $1,600 per annum, who shall inspect all gas and electric meters of the Government in the District of Columbia without additional compensation; for necessary personal and other services; and for materials and labor in connection with the maintenance and operation of the heating, lighting, and power plant, and substations connected therewith, $90,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I understood the gentleman from New York intended to offer an amendment at this point.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes, Mr. Chairman; I offer the following amendment as a new paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 173, after line 24, insert as a new paragraph the following: "The Washington Terminal Railroad Co. is required to place Garfield Park siding leading to the Capital Power Plant, where it crosses Virginia Avenue, in safe condition both for vehicles and foot passengers crossing the same, and for failure to do so within 90 days after the passage of this act said company shall be liable to a penalty of $10 for each day that said siding at said point remains in unsafe condition for the passage of vehicles and foot passengers, to be collected in any court of competent jurisdiction at the suit of the United States. The sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is appropriated to enable the Superintendent of the Capitol, in case the Washington Terminal Railroad Co. does not place the siding hereinabove referred to in safe condition for the purposes above mentioned within 90 days after the passage of this act, to place said siding in condition as above described, and to collect in the name of the United States and on its behalf any sum of money so expended from the Washington Terminal Railroad Co. by proper proceedings."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For fuel, oil, and cotton waste, and advertising for the power plant which furnishes heat and light for the Capitol and congressional buildings, $82,924. This and the two foregoing appropriations shall be expended by the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds under the supervision and direction of the commission in control of the House Office Building, appointed under the act approved March 4, 1907, and without reference to section 4 of the act approved June 17, 1910, concerning purchases for executive departments.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, in view of the amendment which has just been adopted I would ask the gentleman from New York whether the language in line 3, page 174, "this and the two foregoing appropriations," ought not to be modified?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, that is correct. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment which has just been adopted be transferred to follow the paragraph which has just been read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the amendment just agreed to be inserted in the bill, on page 174, after line 11. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the Department of Agriculture, including not to exceed $47,000 for the Weather Bureau, and including the annual report of the Secretary of Agriculture, as required by the act approved January 12, 1895, and in pursuance of the joint resolution No. 13, approved March 30, 1906, and also including not to exceed $137,500 for farmers' bulletins, which shall be adapted to the interests of the people of the different sections of the country, an equal proportion of four-fifths of which shall be delivered to or sent out under the addressed franks furnished by Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress, as they shall direct, $550,000.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 180, in line 7, by striking out "$137,500" and inserting "$177,500"; and, in line 13, strike out "$550,000" and insert "$600,000."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, the effect of this amendment is to increase the appropriation in this item $50,000. Forty thousand dollars of that sum will be devoted to the printing and distribution of farmers bulletins, and $10,000 of the sum will be devoted to the printing of administrative bulletins, circulars, and the like of that. The Secretary of Agriculture, through the regular channels, submitted a supplemental estimate, I understand, as shown in Document No. 900, asking for an increase in the printing item for the Department of Agriculture of $100,000. The Committee on Appropriations has recommended in this bill an increase of only $50,000 of the sum asked by the Secretary of Agriculture. The Secretary of Agriculture, in a memorandum furnished me, sets out very strongly that the sum carried by this bill, although an increase of $50,000 over last year's appropriation, is entirely insufficient to enable the department to print and distribute its administrative bulletins and its farmers' bulletins as requests for them come in. I call the attention of the committee to the fact that since 1910—seven years ago—there has been an increase in the funds for general printing of the Agricultural Department of only $5,500, while the increase during those six or seven years for printing of farmers' bulletins has been only $12,500.

Since 1914, up to this time, there has been absolutely no increase whatever in the fund for the printing of farmers' bulletins. Now, several things I would like to call to the attention of the committee. First of all is this: In 1910 when the appropriation for farmers' bulletins amounted to $125,000 per annum, the annual appropriations for the entire Department of Agriculture amounted in round numbers to only $12,900,000. The bill we have just passed in this House, the annual Agricultural appropriation bill, carries in round numbers $24,500,000. Thus it is apparent that the activities of the Department of Agriculture since 1910 have doubled while the appropriations for the distributions of farmers' bulletins, which is one of the means of carrying out the information being gathered, have been increased during that time only $12,500. The proportion is absolutely out of proportion. Now, another thing——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I dislike very much to impose myself on my good friend from New York, but I would like to ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina? [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. LEVER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I happen to know that the work of the department is increasing rapidly each year in the direction of gathering information, which must be distributed through the publication of farmers' bulletins.

In 1914 we passed the Agricultural extension bill, carrying large appropriations, and furnished another agency for the distribution of agricultural information, but that act in itself has necessitated the gathering in the department of a great deal of valuable agricultural information which should be gotten to the people in the most economical way, in the way of printed bulletins. More than that, since 1910, yes, in very recent years, the Bureau of Markets has grown up in the Department of Agriculture, starting only three or four years ago with $50,000, while this year's bill carries for that purpose something over $700,000. Valuable information is being collected on marketing and is being held away from the people for the reason that the fund for printing carried in this bill is not large enough to take care of the situation.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Just for a question.

Mr. BORLAND. I notice one unpublished bulletin they have in the Department of Agriculture is entitled, "What is a Day's Work?" I want to ask the gentleman, What is a day's work in the department?

Mr. LEVER. That is a very important matter which the gentleman from Missouri should learn about, and it ought to be published for his information.

Mr. BORLAND. I know what is a day's work on the farm, but I wanted to know what was a day's work in the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. LEVER. Now, the department calls my attention to this fact: During the present fiscal year it has been necessary to withhold from publication 115 manuscripts prepared specifically with a view of publication and requiring reasonably prompt issue to make available to the public the results of the work they summarize. Attention is called to the fact that the Farm Soils Survey Bulletins of the soil surveys of the country are not being printed and distributed promptly, because the fund in this item is not large enough to permit it. More than that the department says in this memorandum:

So great is the demand for these various publications that only about 33 per cent of the requests for department bulletins can be complied with—

That is, the departmental bulletins—and only about 5 per cent of the requests for farmers' bulletins can be complied with.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. For a question.

Mr. STAFFORD. I notice in the hearings that Mr. Arnold advises that with this $40,000 additional he would be enabled to increase the quota to Members of Congress over the 2,500 to approximately 20,000 per year. Does not the gentleman think that with the amount 50,000 instead of a hundred thousand the increase of 3,750 would be a reasonable increase in one year in these forwarded to Members for distribution?

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that I appreciate the position of the Committee on Appropriations. I think that that committee has done reasonably well, but it is not as well informed as to the value of these Farmers' Bulletins as the members of the Committee on Agriculture must necessarily be.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman does not answer my question.

Mr. LEVER. I hope, therefore, the amendment may pass.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the appropriation for the current fiscal year is $500,000. This is the amount the Department of Agriculture requested. The estimate for the next fiscal year was $500,000. In March of the present year a supplemental estimate of $100,000 was furnished to Congress. The committee recommends an appropriation of $550,000 in this bill for the printing for this department. There is an increase over the current fiscal year of $50,000. This is more than the Department of State uses in a year, and is 50 per cent more than the Department of Justice uses in a year. I appreciate the value of these bulletins and these documents, but it does seem to me that if $550,000, which is a very large sum to some people, it may not be to others, is allowed for printing, it should be considered as a reasonable appropriation. The great bulk of this increase is to provide Members of Congress with facilities for distributing these bulletins. I think under existing conditions Members of Congress should not be too eager to increase opportunity for distributing public documents——

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman from New York will agree that this request has not come from me so much as it has come from the department, with which I am intimately associated.

Mr. FERRIS. I understand that; but the department's request is based on the fact that it wants to give Members of Congress documents to distribute, not that it wants the money for documents for the department, and the committee gave to the department all the money that it would need for this printing, and it felt that it was reasonable not almost to double the quota of Members of Congress at this time.

Now, there is an enormous number of these bulletins distributed and printed. Here is an increase of 10 per cent for printing alone. I think there is not much waste.

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would sooner finish what I have to say.

Mr. LEVER. I do not think the gentleman would want to misrepresent the facts. I know he would not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I would not.

Mr. LEVER. He will notice that $137,500 is the amount carried for farmers' bulletins. That has not been changed. The total is changed to $550,000, but the amount of farmers' bulletins is no greater than it is for this fiscal year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman wants to distribute this additional $550,000 for farmers' bulletins, that is a different thing. But I submit it is an unreasonable proposition for any department of the Government to ask to have that amount of money available for printing, an increase of 20 per cent in 100, particularly when the percentage is upon a sum which is one-half million dollars. To give this department an increase of $50,000 for printing for next year is treating it liberally, and I think it is sufficient.

Mr. HAUGEN. When $50,000 is appropriated for the Department of Agriculture, it seems to me we can well afford to grant the request for $600,000 for printing to acquire knowledge of things when the knowledge that is bottled up in the department is of no great value unless it is disseminated among the people. The committee has allowed $550,000. It seems to me we should grant the appropriation of at least $650,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, as an illustration of how careful Congress needs to be in not following blindly departments' views of their needs, it is interesting to see what the department really thinks it needs and what it did not ask for simply because it knew it would not have any chance of getting it. The memorandum it has issued says, "If the department's actual requirements were fully to be met, it should have a printing fund of at least $850,000." Just stop and think about it, gentlemen. Here is $25,000,000 of an annual appropriation. Now they need, they say, $850,000, nearly a million dollars, as a printing item. I say a man with that conception has a judgment that is so far wrong that Congress can afford to ignore it entirely. We know that if the departments of the Government were to expend in that proportion for printing, our printing bill, which now is almost a public scandal, would be twice, three times, or four times what it is.

Mr. HAUGEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. I yield; yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. To the $25,000,000 we should add the annual appropriation.

Mr. SHERLEY. Even then, the estimate is absurd. They are appealing to Members of Congress with the idea that because we can make political use of their publications they can get a reception that they could not otherwise get. We all know that is a fact, and somewhere we have to draw the line. Are we to be swept off our feet by appropriating these extreme sums because some clerk in the Department of Agriculture says that they can expend it? If so, we had better start the printing presses to furnish the money, because we will not have anything else for the purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LEVER. I will ask the gentleman if his statements, instead of being a criticism of the department, are not actually a commendation of the department. They say they need $850,000, but under the exigencies they are willing to take $150,000 more than you recommend.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am not pointing out the modesty of their present claim, but the absurdity of their judgment. They will find that they will finally overreach themselves, and the common sense of Congress will rise above a desire to have bulletins to distribute.

Mr. LEVER. I notice in the next paragraph you are providing $400,000 for the Department of Commerce, which is a baby among the departments of the Government, and in another paragraph you provide $575,000 for printing in the Patent Office.

Mr. SHERLEY. A good deal of that is for printing that has to be done, and I am not going to object if the gentleman is going to cut some of the printing items for the other departments. I think it is high time that we were calling a stop on these extravagant estimates. Gentlemen spend their days, apparently, in the Department of Agriculture making up memoranda for the purpose of overriding the judgment of Congress so as to increase appropriations for the expenditure in the department.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. LEVER. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 56, noes 17.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will dispose of the point of order made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS]. The Chair finds in the act approved March 3, 1899, it is provided that on or before January 1, 1903, the fence around the Botanic Garden shall be removed. Now, while the law provides that it shall be removed on a certain date, the fact that that date is passed does not, in the opinion of the Chair, thereby repeal, as it were, the law. Therefore, the Chair thinks that the law authorizes the removal of this fence, and hence the reappropriation of a sum which has heretofore been appropriated for the purpose is in order on this bill. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For furniture and fixtures, typewriters, carpets, labor-saving machines and accessories, time stamps, adding and numbering machines, awnings, curtains, books of reference, directories, books, miscellaneous office and desk supplies; paper; twine, glue, envelopes, postage, car tickets, soap, towels, disinfectants, and ice; drayage, express freight, telephone and telegraph service; repairs to building, elevators, and machinery; preserving sanitary condition of building, light, heat, and power; stationery and office printing, including blanks, price lists, and bibliographies, $33,000; for catalogues and indexes, not exceeding $16,000; for binding reserve remainders, and for supplying books to depository libraries $80,000; equipment, material, and supplies for distribution of public documents, $17,000; in all, $146,000.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing the construction and equipment of the Panama Canal, including $1,000 additional compensation to the Auditor for the War Department for extra services in auditing accounts for the Panama Canal; equipping of colliers Ulysses and Achilles with self-discharging equipment at not exceeding $125,000 each and not exceeding $50,000 for covering certain unprotected surfaces of said colliers with bitumastic enamel; toward construction by contract or in navy yards complete in every detail, including self-discharging equipment and all other necessary apparatus, of two colliers at a total cost not exceeding $1,300,000 each under a contract or contracts hereby authorized therefor; also toward construction of one dock at Cristobal (No. 6) at a total cost not exceeding $1,500,000 under a contract or contracts hereby authorized therefor, $10,000,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. FITZGERALD: Page 186, line 22, strike out the sum "$10,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$9,750,000. No part of this sum or of any unexpended balance of appropriations for construction and equipment of the Panama Canal shall be expended for construction or establishment of new quarantine stations."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, this language is a transfer from page 187.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For sanitation, quarantine, hospitals, and medical aid and support of the insane and of lepers, and aid and support of indigent persons legally within the Canal Zone, including expenses of their deportation when practicable, $450,000. No part of this sum or of any unexpended balance for sanitation, quarantine, and hospitals shall be expended for construction or establishment of new quarantine stations.

Mr FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. FITZGERALD: On page 187, strike out all of lines 10, 11, and 12, and in lieu thereof insert the sum "$700,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Except in cases of emergency, or conditions arising subsequent to and unforeseen at the time of submitting the annual estimates to Congress, and except for those employed in connection with the construction of permanent quarters, offices, and other necessary buildings, dry docks, repair shops, yards, docks, wharves, warehouses, storehouses, and other necessary facilities and appurtenances for the purpose of providing coal and other materials, labor, repairs, and supplies, and except for the permanent operating organization under which the compensation of the various positions is limited by section 4 of the Panama Canal act, there shall not be employed at any time during the fiscal year 1917 under any of the foregoing appropriations for the Panama Canal any greater number of persons than are specified in the notes submitted, respectively, in connection with the estimates for each of said appropriations in the annual Book of Estimates for said year, nor shall there be paid to any such person during that fiscal year any greater rate of compensation than was authorized to be paid to persons occupying the same or like positions on the 1st day of July, 1915; and all employments made or compensation increased because of emergencies or conditions so arising shall be specifically set forth, with the reasons therefor, by the governor in his report for the fiscal year 1917.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, there is a typographical error in line 1 to be corrected there, the latter syllable in the word "purpose" not appearing in the print.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the typographical error will be corrected.

There was no objection.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I want to reserve a point of order on the paragraph for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question, if I may have his attention for a moment. In lines 11 to 14 on page 189 it is provided—nor shall there be paid to any such person during that fiscal year any greater rate of compensation than was authorized to be paid to persons occupying the same or like positions on the 1st day of July, 1915.

Who would be affected by that provision?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It might affect them all and it might not affect anybody. A similar provision has been carried for several years which prevents increasing the maximum rate of compensation except in cases of emergency, in which cases the Governor of the Canal Zone is compelled to report the emergency and the reason for the increase. If there is a special emergency as the result of which there should be an increase of the maximum pay, the power exists to make that increase. It was done designedly for this purpose: The compensation is fixed on a liberal scale, and it is intended to stop the continual agitation and dissatisfaction resulting from men agitating for an increase of pay and not getting it.

Mr. KEATING. Would this prevent the Governor of the Canal Zone increasing the pay of machinists, or of other workmen employed on the canal, or a certain class of workmen?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No. This affects only the construction work. In the permanent organization the compensation is adjusted so as not to exceed 25 per cent in excess of the prevailing rate of compensation in similar employments in the United States, so that the compensation can be adjusted from time to time. The construction period is now practically at an end, with the exception of the dry dock at Balboa and a new dock on the Atlantic side for commercial purposes.

Mr. KEATING. To cite a specific instance, as I understand it, under the law a man may receive 25 per cent more than the prevailing rate of wages in this country?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is, in the permanent organization.

Mr. KEATING. Suppose he had not received that 25 per cent additional on the date mentioned here—the 1st of July, 1915—and it was the desire of the governor or the proper official to grant it to him after this bill goes through.

Mr. FITZGERALD. He would not be affected by it.

Mr. KEATING. I will say to the gentleman that the representatives of some of the men who are employed on the canal have felt that they would be affected by this provision.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; that does not apply to them. As a matter of fact, this is not very important at this time, because the law provided that when the permanent organization went into effect that scale of wages should prevail. The permanent organization was put into effect, and then it was found that a large number of men who were employed in the construction force and who would not be covered into the permanent force would have their compensation reduced, so that in a deficiency bill it was provided that the compensation of the men employed in the construction branch should not be reduced, but that the construction period should be considered to end on the 30th of this June.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman's time be extended for a minute or two in order that I may make this statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It was recognized that the men who were in the construction force were not intended to be affected, because, although their employment has lasted in many instances eight or nine years, it is still in the category of a temporary employment. The men who were to be transferred into the permanent organization were to be given practically life positions, and it was believed that if they received 25 per cent in excess of the prevailing compensation in similar employments in the United States they would be reasonably well provided for. And I suppose that under that law, if the prevailing rate of compensation, say, of machinists in the United States should be changed because of changed conditions, if a readjustment were deemed advisable, there would still be the authority to receive that same rate of compensation.

Mr. KEATING. This would not interfere with that at all.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No. Where it says they shall receive not more than 25 per cent in excess of the prevailing rate, I understand the canal officials have construed it to mean that they shall receive the prevailing rate plus 25 per cent. This is not intended to affect them, and if it did in any way it would be corrected.

Mr. ADAMSON. The only people who are affected by this law possibly go out of service on the 1st of next month.

Mr. KEATING. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

In addition there is appropriated for the operation, maintenance, and extension of waterworks, sewers, and pavements in the cities of Panama and Colon, during the fiscal year 1917, the necessary portions of such sums as shall be paid as water rentals or directly by the Government of Panama for such expenses.

Mr. CULLOP. I move to strike out the last word. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if he knows what the receipts of revenues are from the operation of the waterworks at Colon and Panama?

Mr. FITZGERALD. About $167,000.

Mr. CULLOP. Is not that sum entirely too much to be paid for the operation of the plants at the two cities?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think not.

Mr. CULLOP. The waterworks were already established in each city.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This is for the maintenance of the waterworks system, sewers, pavements, and the whole thing.

Mr. CULLOP. I overlooked the provision as to sewers and pavements as well as waterworks What are the rates charged as water rentals there? How do they compare with those charged in cities in this country? Has the gentleman any data on that?

Mr. FITZGERALD. We did have, but I will say to the gentleman that I do not recall the figures just now. I have not looked at them since last November.

Mr. CULLOP. It seemed to me that the entire proceeds arising from the use of the water revenues would be altogether too large a payment for the operation of the plant.

Mr. FITZGERALD. At Panama the water revenues were $40,546, and the same sum was expended on the operation and maintenance of the waterworks. They just charge it up to cover the cost.

Mr. CULLOP. In other words, the charges are only such as to cover the cost of operation, extension, and repair?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The repairs and maintenance of the pavements in Panama amounted to $16,848. The operation and maintenance of the Colon waterworks and sewers was $29,721.17. The repairs and maintenance of the pavements in Colon, $10,209.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CULLOP. I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that his time be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The proportion for repairs and maintenance of the water-supply system of Panama was $31,000; proportion of maintenance and repairs of the Colon water system, $24,195.28. They make the charges so as to cover the exact cost of maintenance and operation, and it is under agreement with the Republic of Panama. It is done by us because the sanitation of those two cities is of so much importance to the health of persons in the Canal Zone that under the treaty we have the right to take charge of that.

Mr. CULLOP. I understand there has been splendid work done in that regard.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, aside from the item I was just discussing with the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] it is appropriate to speak at this time a few words about conditions now existing in this country. It seems to be a record-making period, the like of which has never been witnessed. From every section of the country comes the good news of an unprecedented prosperity in every line of industry, in every legitimate calling. Labor is employed, the demand greater than the supply; wages are higher than ever known; the products of labor find a ready sale at high prices, the supply is not adequate for the demand. Every market is filled with buyers, with cash to pay for what they buy. Confidence in the business world was never better, and the investor feels safe, and hence all industry is active and profitable. From Cleveland, Ohio, one of the great industrial centers of this country, we take the following from the public press, which explains the prosperous conditions existing there:

CLEVELAND WORKERS GET $15,000,000 MORE WAGES.

Wage increases affecting 100,000 workers here and totaling $15,000,000 annually have been or will be granted before July 1, according to figures compiled by John Owens, Cleveland Federation of Labor secretary.

Owens estimates that half the men and women working here, numbering 200,000, will benefit in wage boosts, at an average of not less than 50 cents a day each.

Common labor, which has advanced from $2 to $2.50, is scarce at the latter figure. A quarry strike at a near-by town affected 500 men who asked that their pay be raised to $2.50. Before the quarry could settle it, Clevelanders had hired all the strikers at their own prices.

Many thousands of workers here already have been granted more pay, including 10,000 steel workers. Agreements have been signed affecting over 20,000 other employees and granting wage boosts of from 20 cents to $1.20 per day per man.

Machinists and building laborers numbering 16,000 have made demands or plan to make them for increases ranging from 30 to 50 cents a day.

In practically every industry in the Cleveland district workers have begun to share or intend to share in the prosperity of the mills and factories.

Reports of this kind drown the echoes of the calamity howlers in this House, who, it seems of late, have silenced their evil prophecies and have accepted the advent of real prosperity as a fixed fact in this country. Very much to their discomfiture, no doubt, they now concede the people are enjoying a prosperous era, and realizing the results of the wise and wholesome policies adopted by the present Democratic administration. As further proof of these splendid conditions I commend the reading of the following article taken from one of the leading metropolitan papers this morning:

BUSINESS IN GOOD FORM AND FINE FEATHER.

We direct attention of the readers of the Post to a few of the many encouraging items of business progress throughout the United States.

These items cover very different lines of affairs, but they all tell the story of amazing prosperity so strongly, so forcibly, so eloquently that we feel that extended comment upon them is superfluous. Standard Oil Co. of Indiana sales in May showed an increase of 1,000,000 gallons over May, 1915.

Public Service Corporation of New Jersey directors have voted to recommend stockholders to increase the capital stock from $25,000,000 to $50,000,000.

Railway-equipment orders placed in the last week included 1,116 cars, and the Habana Central Railway is reported to have placed two orders for steel freight cars this week, each order being for 500 cars.

Dominion Steel Corporation has sold its entire output for the current year.

The Northern Pacific's gross revenue for the first two weeks of June was $2,932,000, a revenue which has been exceeded for a similar period but once in the past seven years.

Southern cotton mills are doing the largest business in their history, and the majority of them have sold up their possible output to the close of the year.

At the single port of New York from June 10 to June 20, inclusive, the exports amounted in value to $70,880,922; the imports were of a value of $44,001,767. Thus from the business of that one port there was an excess value of exports in the nine business days of the period of nearly $26,000,000.

A contract was closed this week by the Oriental Navigation Co., of Battery Place, New York, to ship 15,000 tons of steel billets to Paris, where they are to be converted into projectiles.

Coal and coke shipments on the Pennsylvania Railroad increased in May 874,077 tons.

A $6,000,000 order for electrical equipment was received by the General Electric Co.

Such evidences of prosperity are found daily in the great papers of this country. The prosperous conditions of our country, of its entire population, refute the predictions made by those opposed to the policies of this administration when it began the great work it planned when it took up the administration on the 4th day of March, 1913. Those who charged then that a Democratic administration and bankruptcy were allies now are convinced—or, at least, the facts are ample to convince them—that a Democratic administration and prosperity are inseparable allies, and the people so recognize them as such. The prosperous conditions now existing are not the result of chance or conditions elsewhere. The primary cause is directly attributable to the progressive and constructive policies adopted by this administration, the remedial legislation enacted since it came into power. Without such legislation it would have been impossible for such conditions to have existed, for the people to have enjoyed such an era of prosperity. Times might and doubtless would have improved, but the policies then enforced and the want of remedial legislation were a restraint upon the freedom of business which would have prevented an approach to anything like the present. People realize this fact and give credit where it belongs, and they appreciate the splendid work in every section of our great country. Unfortunately now the specter of war appears above the horizon, which will doubtless turn the attention of many from the peaceful walks of life, from industrial pursuits, to the defense of our country, the preservation of our rights.

American citizens loyal to their country, patriotic in their purpose, will not tolerate a single right to be trampled under foot or a single wrong imposed without resenting it and vindicating our national honor. No more chivalrous people live in the world; loyal and warm-hearted, courageous, they will not permit wrongs committed against us as a Nation without punishing those who attempt our injury. We deplore the fact that such an issue is imminent. The President and Congress have patiently tried to avert it, but it seems that efforts to that end longer are in vain, and that it must be now met. If meet it we must, then meet it we will, with the courage and patriotism for which our people are distinguished. We hope a peaceful solution may yet be had. The President, no doubt, would gladly have our Nation spared, if it could be honorably done, the awful distress of war; but if it can not be done, then he will use every effort to protect, preserve, and uphold the rights of our Nation and the dignity of our people.

The American people are a unit in supporting him in this great crisis through which we are now passing.

It seems to me the duty of the people and their attitude is so well expressed in an editorial in the Washington Post this morning that the attention of the country should be called to its patriotic declarations. It is as follows:

THE PRESIDENT AND THE AMERICAN PEOPLE.

The question is often asked as to what position this or that newspaper, this or that public man, this or that individual is going to take if the administration decides to intervene in Mexico for the purpose of preserving American lives there, American property there, American national rights there, or upon our own domain within the border.

There is but one position for any loyal American newspaper or any loyal American citizen to take in that matter, and that is, to give the Government of the United States the most cordial and hearty support by word and, if necessary, by deed.

The American people are a unit upon that.

They are as firm as granite and as solid as an ingot of steel in favor of protection of the rights of this country as against every violator of them, either upon the land or upon the sea.

The masses of the American people have no leaders when it comes to defense of this Republic, its rights, or its citizens.

The entire population is in a solid square on such a proposition, and would-be leaders have no identity as such owing to the uniformity and universality of the citizens' love and loyalty to the Union.

When President Wilson strikes for defense of the rights of our people in Mexico, or in Santo Domingo, or in Nicaragua, or upon the high seas, showing no favor to any violator of our national rights, to any interferer with our freedom of the seas, or our rights to neutral markets of the world, he should have, and will have, the fullest support of the people of the United States.

It is the failure to strike down the offenders that has been criticized in the past, just as it would be in the present, just as it should be in the past, present, and future.

The people of the United States are no swashbucklers, ever on the aggressive and seeking trouble or pretending to seek trouble to cut a figure in the eyes of worthless admirers.

They love their land; they carry no hatred to the people of any other land, but they know that their liberties and their rights must be protected as against all foes, and they are ready to sacrifice their lives and their fortunes in defense of those liberties and rights.

President Wilson has but to act vigorously in defense of the lives and property and rights of American citizens and in defense of the national rights to command the support of all Americans.

In my judgment this truly states the sentiment of the American people. They stand squarely behind the President in this trying situation, ready to defend the country, if war must come, and vindicate the rights of our people. They believe in his patriotism, his high purpose, his ideals of justice, and his love for humanity. Every citizen in this Republic has confidence in his wisdom and his courage to protect and preserve the honor and dignity of this great Nation under all circumstances which may arise. Its destiny is safe in his hands.

The Clerk read as follows:

In addition there is appropriated for the operation, maintenance, and extension of waterworks, sewers, and pavements in the cities of Panama and Colon, during the fiscal year 1917, the necessary portions of such sums as shall be paid as water rentals or directly by the Government of Panama for such expenses.

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 192, after line 20, insert the following:

"Provided, That no part of the appropriations made in this act shall be available for the salary or pay of any officer, manager, superintendent, foreman, or other person having charge of the work of any employee of the United States while making or causing to be made with a stop watch, or other time-measuring device, a time study of any job of any such employee between the starting and completion thereof, or of the movements of any such employee while engaged upon such work; nor shall any part of the appropriations made in this act be available to pay any premium or bonus or cash reward to any employee in addition to his regular wages, except for suggestions resulting in improvements or economy in the operation of any Government plant."

Mr. FITZGERALD. I want to say to the gentleman that there is no appropriation in this bill that this amendment would affect.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FITZGERALD) there were 34 ayes and 23 nays.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert on page 192, after the amendment just adopted, the following as a new section:

"SEC. 2. That the sum of $10,000,000 be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be available until expended, for the following purposes:

"The construction and equipment of not to exceed three plants for the manufacture of munitions of war for the use of the Army and the Navy and the coast fortifications of the United States, and for the purchase of suitable sites for said plants.

"The sites for said plants shall be designated by the President of the United States, with special reference to considerations of safety in time of war, and the construction and equipment of said plants shall be under the direction and supervision of such officials of the War and Navy Departments as the President may select.

"The expenditures for drafting, technical, expert, clerical, and other assistance deemed necessary by the President for the proper execution of the provisions of this section shall be paid from said appropriation.

"Nothing herein contained shall be construed as directing the abandonment of any existing munitions plant owned and operated by the United States, or the curtailment of the output thereof."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I will reserve a point of order on that for 5 minutes.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from New York for courteously refraining from pressing the point of order at this time. I wish to make a brief statement concerning this amendment. The amendment provides for the construction and operation of Government munition factories. Some three or four months ago some gentlemen on the Democratic side of this House who believe in Government ownership of munition plants held a meeting and selected a committee, of which I was chairman. The other members were Mr. VAN DYKE, of Minnesota; Mr. TAGGART, of Kansas; Mr. TAVENNER, of Illinois; and Mr. CROSSER, of Ohio. There was a suggestion that we endeavor to take steps which would enable the House to secure a square vote on the question of Government ownership of munition factories. We proceeded to prepare a petition for a Democratic caucus. The petition was signed by the number of Democratic Members required under the rules of the Democratic caucus. That caucus met on the 29th of March, 1916, and a quorum was present. This subject was thoroughly thrashed out. Certain distinguished gentlemen opposed the proposition which we submitted, and after the caucus had considered the matter for some three hours, it decided by what was practically a unanimous vote that the Committee on Rules should be instructed to bring in such rules as might be necessary to give this House an opportunity to vote on the question of Government ownership of munition plants.

In order that the instructions of the caucus may be understood, I wish to read the resolution which was finally offered and adopted. The resolution was offered by Mr. GARNER, of Texas, as a substitute for a resolution that I had offered.

Mr. GARNER's resolution adopted at the Democratic caucus was as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this caucus that the Rules Committee shall report a rule making in order amendments to the Navy, Army, fortification, and sundry civil bills having for their purpose provisions providing for Government manufacture of arms and munitions.

This action of the caucus has been called to the attention of the Committee on Rules repeatedly, and the suggestion has been made that they should comply with the instructions issued by the body that created the Committee on Rules, in so far as the Democratic members of that committee are concerned. The suggestion has been ignored, the rule has not been brought in, and now when I offer an amendment to this bill along the lines authorized by the Democratic caucus the gentleman from New York makes the point of order that it is out of order.

Mr. MEEKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. Yes.

Mr. MEEKER. In the light of the resolution adopted by the caucus and what the gentleman says, is it not evident how your party stands on the question?

Mr. KEATING. It does not show how my party stands; it may show how certain gentlemen in the House stand. All I ask is to have an opportunity for Republican and Democratic Members of the House to show how they stand. All we ask for is a square vote on this question of Government ownership of munitions factories.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. Yes.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Does not the resolution adopted by a Democratic caucus indicate how the Democratic Party of this House stands?

Mr. KEATING. I think it indicates it in a very emphatic fashion.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, this matter of Government ownership of munitions factories is a very important matter. We have heard a great deal about preparation for war and many references have been made to the reports of the War College and of the boards that control our naval policy. I want to read to this House one paragraph from a report submitted to the late Secretary, Mr. Garrison, by the War College Division, General Staff Corps, in compliance with the instructions of the Secretary of War, in March, 1915. It is entitled "Statement of a Proper Military Policy for the United States," and paragraph 60 is as follows:

As a general military principle, no supply depot, arsenal, or manufacturing plant of any considerable size, supported by the War Department appropriations for military purposes, should be established or maintained east of the Appalachian Mountains, west of the Cascade or Sierra Nevada Mountains, nor within 200 miles of our Canadian or Mexican borders, and steps should be taken immediately to cause to be moved depots and manufacturing plants already established in violation of this military principle.

Mr. Chairman, every arsenal now owned by the United States, with the exception of the arsenal at Rock Island, Ill., is located in violation of what the gentlemen of the War College lay down as a fundamental military principle, and the bill or amendment which I have just submitted places it within the power of the President of the United States—and naturally he would consult with the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy—to remedy that condition. I believe if this House were untrammeled to the extent that it might be permitted to vote on this question the amendment would carry. The question of whether it is in order or not is one which must be determined by the chairman of this committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, when this bill was presented to the House on last Monday I called attention to the fact that in it were included items aggregating over $3,000,000 in excess of the estimates submitted by the departments to increase the facilities of the Government to manufacture munitions of war. I called attention to the fact that the Committee on Appropriations, in the consideration of the fortifications appropriation bill and of the sundry civil appropriation bill, had made an exhaustive and complete investigation of existing facilities and of the possibilities of increasing existing governmental facilities so as to use them to the very best advantage possible, and as a result of that investigation these items were reported. One of the largest is $500,000 on account of a field artillery assembling plant at the Rock Island Arsenal, to cost $1,250,000, and another is $500,000 to establish an entirely new powder factory, for which there is now no authority of law. All of these items were before the committee. They were considered, some of them, on Monday and the balance on Thursday, the next day this bill was taken up. So far as I was concerned, in view of what happened in relation to the inclination of Members to have considered propositions for the Government to manufacture all munitions of war, I was ready to have discussed and considered any item that might have been proposed on either of those days when armories and arsenals were under consideration. I stated that the information before the committee was to the effect that it would require an additional investment of $75,000,000 to enable the Government to manufacture all of the munitions of war that would be required and that the committee had endeavored to meet as far as possible what it considered to be the desire of Congress that the Government should engage in this manufacture by utilizing, enlarging, and extending existing plants as far as could be justified. I now think it is hardly reasonable, at the very conclusion of this bill, at a time when it is essential that it should be passed, in order that the Senate may work upon it to-morrow, which is Sunday, to expect me to consent, at a place in the bill where it is not properly proposed, to inaugurate a discussion on a matter of this kind, and I know that if I did not make the point of order some one else would.

Mr. KEATING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will yield to the gentleman from Colorado. I suggested Monday, Thursday, when the discussion was going on, and my attention was called to the fact that Members wanted a rule brought in making this in order——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Just time enough to complete this sentence—that we were at that time on that part of the bill where those things were being considered, but unless somebody proposed an amendment it was useless to bring a rule in making it in order, and no amendment was proposed.

Mr. KEATING. May I ask for just a minute to ask the gentleman a question?

The CHAIRMAN. It can be done by unanimous consent. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I am going to make the point of order if the gentleman from New York does not. I am quite willing to stay here and pass the bill in order to expedite business, but I am not willing to stay here and listen to hot air at this time of night.

Mr. KEATING. I will suggest to the gentleman that I am not going to indulge in a great quantity of it and do not usually do so.

Mr. MANN. Well, the other gentleman——

Mr. KEATING. I also acquit the other gentleman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We are not making any promises, because I think it is not reasonable to ask me to be bound by conditions which gentlemen on that side refuse to impose upon themselves.

Mr. MANN. We are silent at present.

Mr. KEATING. I wish to ask the gentleman, which will take but a moment, does he believe the amendment which I have offered would have been in order at that time and at that place?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not; but I would not have made the point at that time because the committee itself brought in a proposition to establish a powder plant that was not in order, but the gentleman who raised the point of order withdrew it on the showing made, and I think it is very doubtful whether a number of items we reported in the bill were in order.

Mr. KEATING. I am asking this in good faith. Was there any point in the bill where this amendment which I suggest, or an amendment of similar purport, could have been offered and held in order if some gentleman had desired to make the point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think I could have drawn an amendment embracing the amount of $10,000,000 that would have been in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired. Does the gentleman from New York insist on the point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That no part of the money appropriated by this act shall be used for payment of salaries or expenses of the Joint Land Commission, established under article 15 of the treaty between the United States and the Republic of Panama, in adjudicating or settling any claim originating under any lease or contract for occupancy made by the Panama Railroad Co. in the Canal Zone or for the payment of any awards made by said commission on account of any such claims.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by the committee: In lieu of section 2 of the bill insert the following:

"SEC. 2. That the Joint Land Commission established under article 15 of the treaty between the United States and the Republic of Panama, proclaimed February 26, 1904, shall not have jurisdiction to adjudicate or settle any claim originating under any lease or contract for occupancy heretofore or hereafter made by the Panama Railroad Co. of lands or property owned by said Panama Railroad Co. in the Canal Zone, and no part of the moneys appropriated by this or any other act shall be used to pay such claims."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That the information required in connection with estimates for general or lump-sum appropriations by section 10 of the sundry civil appropriation act, approved August 1, 1914, shall be submitted hereafter according to uniform and concise methods which shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 194, after the word "Treasury" strike out the period, insert a comma, and add the following: "But with reference to estimates for pay of mechanics and laborers there shall be submitted in detail only the ratings and the trades and the rates per diem paid or to be paid."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 194, before line 3, insert the following:

"SEC. 5. That in measuring vessels for the purpose of imposing and collecting tolls at the Panama Canal and for other purposes the measurements shall be determined in all cases by the Panama Canal rules, and the maximum and minimum tolls for vessels of commerce prescribed in section 5 of the act entitled 'An act to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone,' approved August 24, 1912, shall be based on net tonnage as determined by said Panama Canal rules."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 177 of the bill to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 177, line 25, after the word "war," insert the following: ", and not exceeding $50,000 shall be available for printing and binding under the direction of the Chief of Engineers."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, without objection, I ask to return to page 178 for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.
The Clerk read as follows:

Page 178, line 4, strike out the word "for" and insert in lieu thereof the word "from."

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. FITZGERALD. Also the following amendment.
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.
The Clerk read as follows:

Page 86, line 9, after the sum "$5,500," insert: "one half of which sum shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia and the other half from the Treasury of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. FITZGERALD. Now, Mr. Chairman, there were two amendments that were passed over. On page 51, an amendment proposing an appropriation of $2,000, offered by the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. HERNANDEZ].
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.
The Clerk read as follows:

Page 51, line 12, after the word "periodical," strike out "$42,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$44,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.
The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.
Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.
The committee divided; and there were—ayes 47, noes 44.
Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.
Tellers were ordered; and Mr. FITZGERALD and Mr. HERNANDEZ took their places as tellers.
The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 35, noes 52.
So the amendment was rejected.
Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 61 to offer an amendment concerning the Picatinny Arsenal.
Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, when the item in line 11, on page 61, was read I asked that it be passed over. After having given the matter further consideration I have concluded not to offer the amendment.
Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may be authorized to correct the totals and properly number the sections.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] asks unanimous consent that the Clerk may be authorized to correct totals and correct numbers of the sections. Is there objection?
There was no objection.
Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.
The motion was agreed to.
The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HAY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union reported that the committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 15836) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.
Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.
The previous question was ordered.
The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? [After a pause.] If not, the Chair will put them in gross.
The amendments were agreed to.
The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.
On motion of Mr. FITZGERALD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I misunderstood the time for extension of remarks on the pension bill passed last Saturday, and I ask unanimous consent now to extend my remarks.
The SPEAKER. Which one of the pension bills?
Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The widows' pension bill.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.
Mr. FOSTER. I make the same request.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.
Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I make a similar request.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
There was no objection.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech of Mr. W. P. G. Harding, of the Federal Reserve Board, delivered at my home city of Tuscaloosa before the Alumni Society of the University of Alabama.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. MANN. I will not object to that, but I will object to any other requests to-night.
The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

HOUR OF MEETING MONDAY.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 10 o'clock and 30 minutes a. m. on Monday.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 10.30 a. m. on Monday. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

SENATE.

MONDAY, June 26, 1916.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, accept our tribute of praise as we come with reverent spirit into Thy divine presence. We know that the highest achievement of our statesmanship will have been reached when we have no other will for ourselves or for our Nation but Thy will. Thou art supreme, and Thou dost communicate Thy will to those who come with reverent and earnest spirit. Thou hast taught us that if any lack wisdom let him ask of God, who gives to all liberally. So we pray that in time of great stress we may find the divine plan and have in our hearts the purpose to follow the divine will. We thank Thee that we stand calm before the dictates of sweet reasonableness in the midst of increasing provocation. We pray that Thou wilt still guide us so that we may not be brought into the great tragedy of war. Guide us this day in our deliberations and all the people in all their ideals of life and of the State. May they seek together to do Thy will. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Vice President being absent, the President pro tempore took the chair.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

ANACOSTIA RIVER AND FLATS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report of a board of engineers proposing a modification of the project for the reclamation and development of the Anacostia River and Flats, D. C., which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

FRANKFORD ARSENAL, PHILADELPHIA, PA. (S. DOC. NO. 473).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of War, submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Frankford Arsenal, Philadelphia, Pa., etc., which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House agrees to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 228) to amend the United States homestead law in its application to Alaska, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (H. R. 15836) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 15836. An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. THOMAS. I present resolutions adopted by the Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of Larimer County, Colo., which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolutions adopted by the Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of Larimer County, Colo.

Whereas the discrepancy between $6, the average price paid to the growers of sugar beets by the Great Western Sugar Co., and $8.50 the present price of 100 pounds of sugar on the retail market, is so great as to cause any reasonable person to inquire into the cost of manufacturng refined sugar and marketing its product, and to give rise to a general belief that both buying price and selling price are controlled by the manufacturers to such an extent that an exorbitant and unreasonable profit results; and

Whereas the sugar-beet growers of the United States are paid but $6 per ton for sugar beets, while the growers of France receive a minimum of $9.65 per ton and the growers of Austria receive $8.12 per ton, thus enabling the grower who can perfect a crop with the cheapest labor to secure a much higher price than can the American grower, who pays living wages to all employees; and

Whereas it was commonly remarked in the press that immediately following the announcement that the Congress would retain a duty of 1 cent on foreign sugar the stock of the Great Western Sugar Co. and allied concerns advanced materially in price and still remains at a price which indicates an unreasonable earning capacity; and

Whereas it has been freely announced in the press that the Great Western Sugar Co. has declared or is about to declare a stock dividend amounting to $11,000,000, and will increase its cash dividend to stockholders from 5 per cent to 10 per cent, thus proving beyond question the fact that the company has accumulated a vast sum of money above any reasonable profit on its investment: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Larimer County Farmers' Union, That the beet growers of the United States register their protest against such apparent and flagrant injustice and voice their firm conviction that the United States authorities should commence at once an investigation to determine whether existing conditions in the beet-growing and sugar-manufacturing industries do not, in fact, make it an easy matter for the manufacturers to control both the price to be paid for raw beets and the price at which the manufactured sugar shall be sold; and whether such control has not now resulted in unjust discrimination against the producer of beets and the consumer of sugar, with the result that the manufacturers have reaped enormous profits above any fair or reasonable return on their investments.

Adopted this 9th day of June, 1916.

B. F. EARLY,
G. S. PINTLER,
A. C. MICHELS,

THE POSTAL LAWS.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on Tuesday, June 27, or as soon thereafter as possible, I shall move to suspend that provision of paragraph 3 of Senate Rule XVI prohibiting any amendment proposing general legislation to any general appropriation bill for the purpose of offering the following amendment to the Post Office appropriation bill now pending by adding a new section to the bill, as follows:

SEC. —. That no letter, postal card, circular, newspaper, pamphlet, or publication of any kind containing any advertisement of spirituous, vinous, malted, fermented, or other intoxicating liquors of any kind, or containing a solicitation of an order or orders for said liquors, or any of them, shall be deposited in or carried by the mails of the United States, or be delivered by any postmaster or letter carrier, when addressed or directed to any person, firm, corporation, or association or other addressee, at any place or point in any State or Territory of the United States at which it is by the law in force in the State or Territory at that time unlawful to advertise or solicit orders for such liquors, or any of them, respectively.

Whoever shall knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited or shall knowingly send or cause to be sent anything to be conveyed or delivered by mail in violation of the provisions of this section, or shall knowingly deliver or cause to be delivered by mail anything herein forbidden to be carried by mail shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than two years, or both; and for any subsequent offense shall be imprisoned not more than five years. Any person violating any provision of this section may be tried and punished, either in the district in which the unlawful matter or publication was mailed or to which it was carried by mail for delivery, according to direction thereon, or in which it was caused to be delivered by mail to the person to whom it was addressed.

SEC. 2. That whoever, being a postmaster or other person employed in the Postal Service, shall knowingly send by mail or deliver any letter, package, postal card, circular, newspaper, pamphlet, or publication of any kind containing any advertisement of the said liquors or any of them mentioned in the first section of this act, or containing a solicitation of an order or orders for said liquors, or any of them, when addressed or directed to any person, firm, corporation, or association, or other addressee, at any place or point in any State or Territory of the United States at which it is by the law in force in the State or Territory at that time unlawful to advertise or solicit orders for such liquors, or any of them, respectively, shall be fined not more than $100 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

SEC. 3. That any advertisement for such liquors, or any of them, stating the person from whom, or the firm or corporation from which, or the place where, or the price at which, or the method by which said liquors, or any of them, may be obtained, or containing the picture of a brewery or distillery or bottles or other receptacles designed to serve as an advertisement of such liquors, or any of them, shall be within the inhibition of this act.

GOOD ROADS (S. DOC. NO. 474).

Mr. BANKHEAD. I submit the conference report on House bill 7617, commonly known as the good-roads bill. I ask that it be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be received and printed.

The conference report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill H. R. 7617, "An act to provide that in order to promote agriculture, afford better facilities for rural transportation and marketing farm products, and encourage the development of a general system of improved highways, the Secretary of Agriculture, on behalf of the United States, shall in certain cases aid the States in the construction, improvement, and maintenance of roads which may be used in the transportation of interstate commerce, military supplies, or postal matter," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment to the title of the bill, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by the amendment of the Senate insert the following:

"That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to cooperate with the States, through their respective State highway departments, in the construction of rural post roads; but no money apportioned under this act to any State shall be expended therein until its legislature shall have assented to the provisions of this act, except that, until the final adjournment of the first regular session of the legislature held after the passage of this act, the assent of the governor of the State shall be sufficient. The Secretary of Agriculture and the State highway department of each State shall agree upon the roads to be constructed therein and the character and method of construction: Provided, That all roads constructed under the provisions of this act shall be free from tolls of all kinds.

"SEC. 2. That for the purpose of this act the term 'rural post road' shall be construed to mean any public road over which the United States mails now are or may hereafter be transported, excluding every street and road in a place having a population, as shown by the latest available Federal census, of 2,500 or more, except that portion of any such street or road along which the houses average more than 200 feet apart; the term 'State highway department' shall be construed to include any department of another name, or commission, or official or officials, of a State empowered, under its laws, to exercise the functions ordinarily exercised by a State highway department; the term 'construction' shall be construed to include reconstruction and improvement of roads; 'properly maintained,' as used herein, shall be construed to mean the making of needed repairs and the preservation of a reasonably smooth surface, considering the type of the road; but shall not be held to include extraordinary repairs nor reconstruction; necessary bridges and culverts shall be deemed parts of the respective roads covered by the provisions of this act.

"SEC. 3. That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, the sum of $5,000,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, the sum of $10,000,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the sum of $15,000,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, the sum of $20,000,000; and for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, the sum of $25,000,000. So much of the appropriation apportioned to any State for any fiscal year as remains unexpended at the close thereof shall be available for expenditure in that State until the close of the succeeding fiscal year, except that amounts apportioned for any fiscal year to any State which has not a State highway department shall be available for expenditure in that State until the close of the third fiscal year succeeding the close of the fiscal year for which such apportionment was made. Any amount apportioned under the provisions of this act unexpended at the end of the period during which it is available for expenditure under the terms of this section shall be reapportioned, within 60 days thereafter, to all the States in the same manner and on the same basis, and certified to the Secretary of the Treasury and to the State highway departments and to the governors of States having no State highway departments in the same way as if it were being apportioned under this act for the first time: Provided, That in States where the constitution prohibits the State from engaging in any work of internal improvements, then the amount of the appropriation under this act apportioned to any such State shall be turned over to the highway department of the State or to the governor of said State to be expended under the provisions of this act and under the rules and regulations of the Department of Agriculture, when any number of counties in any such State shall appropriate or provide the proportion or share needed to be raised in order to entitle such State to its part of the appropriation apportioned under this act.

"SEC. 4. That so much, not to exceed 3 per cent, of the appropriation for any fiscal year made by or under this act as the Secretary of Agriculture may estimate to be necessary for administering the provisions of this act shall be deducted for that purpose, available until expended. Within 60 days after the close of each fiscal year the Secretary of Agriculture shall determine what part, if any, of the sums theretofore deducted for administering the provisions of this act will not be needed for that purpose and apportion such part, if any, for the fiscal year then current in the same manner and on the same basis, and certify it to the Secretary of the Treasury and to the State highway departments, and to the governors of States having no State highway departments, in the same way as other amounts authorized by this act to be apportioned among all the States for such current fiscal year. The Secretary of Agriculture, after making the deduction authorized by this section, shall apportion the remainder of the appropriation for each fiscal year among the several States in the following manner: One-third in the ratio which the area of each State bears to the total area of all the States; one-third in the ratio which the population of each State bears to the total population of all the States, as shown by the latest available Federal census; one-third in the ratio which the mileage of rural delivery routes and star routes in each State bears to the total mileage of rural delivery routes and star routes in all the States, at the close of the next preceding fiscal year, as shown by the certificate of the Postmaster General, which he is directed to make and furnish annually to the Secretary of Agriculture.

"SEC. 5. That within 60 days after the approval of this act the Secretary of Agriculture shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury and to each State highway department and to the governor of each State having no State highway department the sum which he has estimated to be deducted for administering the provisions of this act and the sum which he has apportioned to each State for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and on or before January 20 next preceding the commencement of each succeeding fiscal year shall make like certificates for such fiscal year.

"SEC. 6. That any State desiring to avail itself of the benefits of this act shall, by its State highway department, submit to the Secretary of Agriculture project statements setting forth proposed construction of any rural post road or roads therein. If the Secretary of Agriculture approve a project, the State highway department shall furnish to him such surveys, plans, specifications, and estimates therefor as he may require: Provided, however, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall approve only such projects as may be substantial in character and the expenditure of funds hereby authorized shall be applied only to such improvements. Items included for engineering, inspection, and unforeseen contingencies shall not exceed 10 per cent of the total estimated cost of the work. If the Secretary of Agriculture approve the plans, specifications, and estimates, he shall notify the State highway department and immediately certify the fact to the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon set aside the share of the United States payable under this act on account of such project, which shall not exceed 50 per cent of the total estimated cost thereof. No payment of any money apportioned under this act shall be made on any project until such statement of the project, and the plans, specifications, and estimates therefor, shall have been submitted to and approved by the Secretary of Agriculture.

"When the Secretary of Agriculture shall find that any project so approved by him has been constructed in compliance with said plans and specifications, he shall cause to be paid to the proper authority of said State the amount set aside for said project: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture may, in his discretion, from time to time make payments on said construction as the same progresses; but these payments, including previous payments, if any, shall not be more than the United States pro rata part of the value of the labor and materials which have been actually put into said construction in conformity to said plans and specifications; nor shall any such payment be in excess of $10,000 per mile, exclusive of the cost of bridges of more than 20 feet clear span. The construction work and labor in each State shall be done in accordance with its laws, and under the direct supervision of the State highway department, subject to the inspection and approval of the Secretary of Agriculture and in accordance with the rules and regulations made pursuant to this act.

"The Secretary of Agriculture and the State highway department of each State may jointly determine at what times, and in what amounts, payments, as work progresses, shall be made under this act. Such payments shall be made by the Secretary of the Treasury, on warrants drawn by the Secretary of Agriculture, to such official, or officials, or depository, as may be designated by the State highway department and authorized under the laws of the State to receive public funds of the State or county.

"SEC. 7. To maintain the roads constructed under the provisions of this act shall be the duty of the States, or their civil subdivisions, according to the laws of the several States. If at any time the Secretary of Agriculture shall find that any road in any State constructed under the provisions of this act is not being properly maintained he shall give notice of such fact to the highway department of such State and if within four months from the receipt of said notice said road has not been put in a proper condition of maintenance then the Secretary of Agriculture shall thereafter refuse to approve any project for road construction in said State, or the civil subdivision thereof, as the fact may be, whose duty it is to maintain said road, until it has been put in a condition of proper maintenance.

"SEC. 8. That there is hereby appropriated and made available until expended, out of any moneys in the National Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and each fiscal year thereafter, up to and including the fiscal year ending June 30, 1926, in all $10,000,000, to be available until expended, under the supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture, upon request from the proper officers of the State, Territory, or county, for the survey, construction, and maintenance of roads and trails within or only partly within the national forests, when necessary for the use and development of resources upon which communities within and adjacent to the national forests are dependent: Provided, That the State, Territory, or county shall enter into a cooperative agreement with the Secretary of Agriculture for the survey, construction, and maintenance of such roads or trails upon a basis equitable to both the State, Territory, or county and the United States: And provided also, That the aggregate expenditures in any State, Territory, or county shall not exceed 10 per cent of the value, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, of the timber and forage resources which are or will be available for income upon the national forest lands within the respective county or counties wherein the roads or trails will be constructed; and the Secretary of Agriculture shall make annual report to Congress of the amounts expended hereunder.

"That immediately upon the execution of any cooperative agreement hereunder the Secretary of Agriculture shall notify the Secretary of the Treasury of the amount to be expended by the United States within or adjacent to any national forest thereunder, and beginning with the next fiscal year and each fiscal year thereafter the Secretary of the Treasury shall apply from any and all revenues from such forest 10 per cent thereof to reimburse the United States for expenditures made under such agreement until the whole amount advanced under such agreement shall have been returned from the receipts from such national forest.

"SEC. 9. That out of the appropriations made by or under this act the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to employ such assistants, clerks, and other persons in the city of Washington and elsewhere, to be taken from eligible lists of the Civil Service Commission, to rent buildings outside of the city of Washington, to purchase such supplies, material, equipment, office fixtures, and apparatus, and to incur such travel and other expense as he may deem necessary for carrying out the purposes of this act.

"SEC. 10. That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to make rules and regulations for carrying out the provisions of this act.

"SEC. 11. That this act shall be in force from the date of its passage.

"Amend the title so as to read: 'An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

THE NATIONAL DEFENSE.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. From the Committee on Military Affairs I report back favorably with amendments the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 242) to authorize the President to draft members of the National Guard and of the Organized Militia of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia and members of the National Guard and Militia Reserves into the military service of the United States under certain conditions, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JAMES in the chair). Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution requested by the Senator from Oregon?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The first amendment was in section 1, page 2, line 9, after the word "emergency" to strike out "not exceeding three years," so as to make the section read:

That in the opinion of the Congress of the United States an emergency now exists which demands the use of troops in addition to the Regular Army of the United States, and that the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to draft into the military service of the United States, under the provisions of section 111 of the national defense act approved June 3, 1916, so far as the provisions of said section may be applicable and not inconsistent with the terms hereof, any or all members of the National Guard and of the Organized Militia of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia and any and all members of the National Guard and Organized Militia Reserves, to serve for the period of the emergency, unless sooner discharged: Provided, That all persons so drafted shall, from the date of their draft, stand discharged from the militia during the period of their service under said draft.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, after mature reflection and consultation with some members of the committee whom I have been able to see I think it is best to disagree to that proposed amendment, because the term of enlistment of the National Guard is three years. I suggest that the proposed amendment of the committee be disagreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, this is a very serious proposition that is brought in by the committee. As I see it and understand it and weigh it, the amendment on page 3 is practically tantamount to the demoralization of the National Guard of the United States in the presence of an enemy and in a great international crisis. I therefore call for a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names.

Ashurst	Gronna	Martine, N. J.	Shields
Bankhead	Harding	Nelson	Simmons
Brandegee	Hardwick	Norris	Smith, Ariz.
Bryan	Hitchcock	O'Gorman	Smith, Ga.
Chamberlain	Husting	Oliver	Smoot
Clapp	James	Overman	Sterling
Clark, Wyo.	Johnson, Me.	Owen	Sutherland
Clarke, Ark.	Johnson, S. Dak.	Page	Taggart
Culberson	Kenyon	Phelan	Thomas
Cummins	Kern	Poindexter	Townsend
Curtis	Lane	Ransdell	Vardaman
Dillingham	Lea, Tenn.	Reed	Walsh
Fletcher	Lee, Md.	Shafroth	Warren
Gallinger	Lewis	Sheppard	Works
Gore	Martin, Va.	Sherman

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I am unable to agree with my colleagues on the Military Affairs Committee in their report. I favor retaining the section of the resolution providing a monthly payment to poor and dependent families of guardsmen if we draft them into the Army and send them into Mexico.

On every consideration of justice as well as policy we should make some provision for dependent women and children if we compel the breadwinner to drop his work of supporting his family and take up the work of defending his country.

It is the duty of every man to defend his country, and it is not the duty of one more than it is of another. If out of the millions who owe this duty only 100,000 are called to the front, then let the millions who stay at home do their share by looking after the needy families of those at the front and let Congress provide the means.

The member of the National Guard is a citizen first and a soldier only in case of emergency. He is generally supporting himself by his work and often supporting others. The country has, of course, the right to draft him in this emergency and send him to the front. He has been somewhat trained and partly equipped for just such an occasion, and to select him rather than the ordinary citizen is proper. He is under a moral obligation to go, and he is willing and often eager to go. When, however, we proceed to put him under a legal obligation to go and to go for an indefinite time, the least we can do, and should do, is to provide bread and butter for the family he may be supporting. We may not owe this to him, but we certainly do to his dependent family.

It would be barbarous for our Government to take a man forcibly from his wife and children and leave them dependent on local charity. It is enough to require a man to serve his country and risk his life for $15 a month without requiring his wife to beg or his children to go to the poorhouse.

Of these 100,000 men thus ordered out of civil life and into military duty which may last for years, some are well-to-do and more are poor. This provision only concerns the poor. Some are merely supporting themselves, while others are supporting families. This provision only relates to those who are supporting families. Suppose 10,000 of these young men are married, and half of that number are supporting their wives by work of one sort or another; what is to become of those wives? We propose to take away their provider and protector; shall we make no provision for those who are dependent? Some of them, of course, are mothers and have a child or children to look after. What about them? Shall they be left to the tender mercy of chance or charity? Shall homes be broken up, furniture sold, and suffering entailed on women and children while these young men are at the front?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. GORE. I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska if one of these guardsmen he describes is killed in battle would the Senator be in favor of giving his family a pension of $50 a month?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I certainly would be in favor of giving a very proper pension, whatever may be required.

Mr. GORE. The present pension to the widow of a Union soldier is $12, and it has been for some years. Prior to that it was $8.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the country has been dealing properly and liberally with the enormous number involved. But this raises a new issue. These men are citizens of the United States to-day. They are being forcibly seized and drafted into the national service.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And it is absolutely, in my opinion, obligatory upon us in honor to look after the dependent families of those who are poor.

Mr. GORE. The Senator thinks a man who is drafted into the service is entitled to greater consideration than a man who volunteers?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think when a man volunteers it is generally a man who has not a family dependent upon him. This great Nation now requires only 100,000 out of a million men, and naturally those who volunteer will be those who have not superior duties at home.

Mr. GORE. That is a mere supposition.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But these men are being taken by compulsion, they are being taken properly, and they are ready to go.

Mr. GORE. I will ask the Senator——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I insist that those they leave behind shall not become objects of charity.

Mr. GORE. One other question. I should like to ask the Senator if he would deal more generously with the surviving family of one of these guardsmen killed in battle who is drafted into the service than he would with the widow of a Union soldier who volunteered into the service and was not obliged to be drafted?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am not undertaking now to answer any hypothetical question. We have a practical question before the Senate to-day that ought to be decided to-day. It is an emergency case, and I am anxious to see that it is decided right and decided as it was decided in the House of Representatives.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask the Senator if the amendment proposed by the committee does not meet the situation as he claims it ought to be met. He says these men are compelled to serve. The amendment proposes that whenever there are those dependent upon the member of the National Guard who is drafted he may, upon application, be relieved from service.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I shall come to that later. I have prepared an answer to that.

How is a little family that has been living perhaps on $75 to get along with $15 per month? Why should that family be sentenced to suffering for the benefit of the rest of us who are staying at home and doing nothing? And why should the charitably disposed be forced to take up this burden of providing relief in each community instead of having it borne equally by all of us by means of an appropriation?

This plan to look after the families of citizen soldiers is no novelty or experiment. Germany is doing it in the great war, so is Great Britain, so is France; and I have no doubt other countries as well are doing it, not for the benefit of the soldiers at the front, but for the benefit of society in general. It is not only a matter of common justice to these families, but it is a matter of good policy, Mr. President.

How in the future can we expect poor young men to enlist in the National Guard if, when war comes, they are the first to be torn from their families and sent to the front without any provision being made for such of those families as are left in need? There is the question. How are we going to enlist men in the National Guard hereafter when we tell them now that they are liable in any emergency to be drafted into the service ahead of anyone else without any provision being made for the families that may be in absolute want? Men will not enlist in the National Guard in the future if they know that such consequences will come to their families.

Now, I come to the question propounded by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. What is it that the committee proposes as a substitute for allowances to these families? This substitute is, in the first place, an admission that it is wrong to leave these families in distress and it is, in the second place, an admission that the number does not probably represent a very large proportion of the 100,000 men or it would not provide for excusing them. I may say, in brief, that this substitute is to authorize the Secretary of War to give an honorable discharge to those men who claim that they have dependent families and who make the proper and conclusive showing to the department.

There are, in my opinion, Mr. President, several objections to the plan of discharging the men having others dependent on them. In the first place, this suggestion comes too late. It is too late now to make that proposal. Mobilization has already occurred. The situation is urgent. Troops are being called for. They are already being rushed to the border. To discharge even 5,000 men at this time when more are needed would be demoralizing. It would involve the loss of some of the best qualified men, no doubt. It would also be a serious embarrassment to men to ask to be discharged and sent home at such a juncture. It would humiliate them unnecessarily to make such a plea and subject them to ridicule, if not contempt; and many a man rather than face that ridicule and that contempt and the reproach which would be visited upon him forever might be tempted to continue in the service even at the expense of suffering in his immediate family.

The thing to do is to proceed as we have started and carry out the House provision to look after needy families. Suppose of the 100,000 men five or even ten thousand have families that need help. The matter is discretionary with the Secretary of War. In no case can he allow over $50 a month, and in many cases he will allow less. The bill in the aggregate may be large if the war is long, but it is better to have the Nation stand it than to have it carried by the poor or even than to have the service demoralized at this time by discharging 5 or 10 or possibly 15 per cent or more of the men of the actual mobilized Army.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. OVERMAN. Would the Senator make this principle apply to volunteers? Suppose we called for 500,000 volunteers—would the Senator pay the families of those volunteers $50 a month?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is a bridge that we shall cross when we come to it.

Mr. OVERMAN. Well, we might have to come to it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am not now talking about a man who has come forward and volunteered; I am talking about a man upon whom Congress proposes to put the hand of the Government and to take him arbitrarily under compulsion from his family. The presumption is that, if we are compelled to call for volunteers—which is not likely—there will be enough volunteers composed of young men without family incumbrances or responsibilities.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Is there anything in the joint resolution which provides for the maintenance of the family in the event the soldier should be killed on the first day of service?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There is nothing.

Mr. VARDAMAN. There is no provision made for the families of soldiers of the Regular Army, is there?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Those families will receive such pension as is provided in the act governing the Regular Army, as I recall.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes; there is such a provision in the joint resolution, I desire to say to the Senator.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There is a provision for a pension; yes.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I should like to ask this question: Why is it, then, that it is deemed more important here that you should provide for the family while the soldier is living, who will have the addition to his salary, than it is to provide in the case of the death of the soldier?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, my answer to that is that that is a provision which entitles the guardsmen, who are now drafted, to have the same status, so far as the pensioning of their dependents is concerned as has the regular soldier.

Mr. VARDAMAN. What does the regular soldier receive?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, frankly speaking, I do not know; but that is another question which Congress will probably have to meet; and when the time comes, I trust we shall meet it fairly.

The objection that the provision of a small amount for the families and dependents of a citizen drafted into military service is a discrimination against the Regular Army is a poor argument. The man in the Regular Army is a professional soldier. He rarely has a family, but if he has it is no worse off in time of war than in time of peace. He earns just the same in war as in peace. Under our unwise system of long enlistments and reenlistments at increased pay we only get men in the Regular Army who are seeking to get away from civil life and who want to make the Army a business.

I object to the system. I made a fight here for shorter enlistments and larger pay, and I do not believe we shall have a proper Army until we take that step. At present we have an Army of professional soldiers. They have few of the responsibilities of the citizen, and they welcome war as an increased opportunity for adventure and promotion. The citizen soldier or guardsman may also have no family or dependents. If so, he does not come within the provisions of this joint resolution as passed by the House of Representatives. It applies only to those having dependent and needy families, and I am informed by high authority in the War Department that that may affect as many as 15 per cent in the National Guard. I voted in committee to retain the provision as it came from the House of Representatives and I support it now. I think it neither good policy nor justice to take from a family its provider and supporter without giving it something to live on while his services are required. If we required the horse or wagon or home of a citizen for a public purpose, we would make some compensation for the loss. Shall we forcibly take the father, husband, brother, or son who is the only support of a family and make no compensation whatever—not even enough to ward off hunger or distress or privation? Such an act would be a gross outrage on justice and on humanity, and I shall oppose, therefore, and vote against the amendment proposed by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, as I understand, the position of the Senator from Nebraska is based on the fact that the members of the National Guard are being drafted into the service and forced to serve. I want to ask the Senator whether that can justly be said under the circumstances? As I remember, when the provision that they should be made Federal soldiers was before the Senate in connection with the military reorganization bill, the friends of the National Guard very strongly favored that proposition and insisted that that provision should be enacted as part of the law. If so, the National Guard have voluntarily subjected themselves to just the condition that has now come upon them. There is no reason under those circumstances why they should be favored above the Regular soldier. I opposed that provision in the law which has already been enacted. It was taking away, as I contended, the military forces of the States and converting them into a Federal force in violation of the Constitution; but it was done through the instrumentality and upon the urgency of friends of the National Guard. Now, under those circumstances, it seems to me that the National Guard, or its members, are not entitled to claim anything for their services beyond that of the Regular soldier. They have brought this condition upon themselves. I was opposed to it myself.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, Mr. President, the answer to that question, if it be a question, is this: The National Guard are not claiming anything, so far as I know. No one has come to me or applied to me on the subject; but I was shocked in the meeting of the Committee on Military Affairs at the proposition that these men should be forcibly taken from their civilian occupations and sent to the front, and no provision even made for those men who were the only providers and supporters of dependent families. This is a matter of the family; it is a matter for society; it is a matter of the duty of Congress to families which they propose to render helpless.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator from Nebraska will pardon a question, I ask how does the Senator get the idea that these men with families are being forcibly taken away? The Senate provision says:

SEC. 2. That when any member of the National Guard or the Organized Militia of any of the States, Territories, or the District of Columbia, or any member of the National Guard or Organized Militia Reserves, is called or drafted into the service of the United States under section 1 of this resolution and has a family dependent upon him, the Secretary of War is authorized, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to excuse such person, upon his own application, from the call or from the draft, and if drafted, upon a like application, to honorably discharge him from the service. The word "family" shall include wife, children, dependent mother, father, sisters, or brothers under the age of 14 years.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, Mr. President, I have already answered that question. Possibly the Senator was not in the Chamber at that time. I have stated that, in the first place, that section makes it discretionary with the Secretary of War. He may refuse the application. In the second place, if it is carried out to the extent that it probably might be, of 10 or 15 per cent, it would produce a very demoralizing effect on the mobilization now in progress. In the third place, it puts the men in the embarrassing and distressing position of being compelled to make a plea for release from the service practically in the face of the enemy, which plea would be thrown against them as a reproach in after years; and I do not think we ought to subject those men to that. In the last place, it might result in losing from the National Guard 10 or 15 per cent of possibly the most valuable men in it and filling their places with green troops.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, if a man enlisted in the National Guard under the pretense that he was ready to go to war and it is subsequently found out that he is not ready to go to war, that is a proposition that he ought to have considered when he enlisted in the National Guard, and not when the National Guard is called into service.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator from Mississippi knows very well that many of these men enlisted years ago, before there was any legislation which would make it possible for them to be drafted in this way and sent beyond the borders of the United States.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; unless they consented.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The legislation is recent; the emergency is recent; and it is without precedent that a great country of a hundred million people should place its hand upon a hundred thousand men and take them away from their civilian occupations without making any provision for their families.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is not without precedent, whatever else may be true. There has never been a great war when it was not done; but the point is this: The Senator says that this provision leaves it discretionary with the Secretary of War. It lays down a rule for him to obey. I differ with the Senator. If I were a poor man and had no way of supporting my family while I was out in the service, I think I should have the moral courage to say so, and I would say so; and I have no idea that right-thinking men would consider that I had acted the coward because I had said so; but, independently of that, what I was getting at was that the Senator's entire argument was based upon the assumption that these men are forced to go; they are not forced——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. They are being drafted at the present time, Mr. President.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If they have dependent families and make that statement and have not means to support them.

Mr. WORKS and Mr. LEWIS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from California.

Mr. WORKS. I entirely agree with the Senator from Nebraska that this wholesale drafting of the National Guard is utterly unjust. If there is to be any drafting of citizens of this country into the service it ought to be general, and if I did not believe that the National Guard had courted this very thing and asked for it when the recent Army legislation was before the Senate I should feel quite differently about it.

The enlistment of members of the National Guard did not contemplate any such service as is now attempted to be imposed upon them. They were under no obligation by virtue of their enlistment to render any such service to the country. We are attempting or have actually imposed upon them by law an obligation that was not contemplated by their enlistment at all. Therefore they are entitled to some consideration, taking that view of it; but they have, as I have said, voluntarily subjected themselves to the imposition of this additional service upon them, and it seems to me under those circumstances that they have no right to call upon the Government to pay them additional compensation for their service.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I interrogate the Senator from Nebraska as to a matter concerning which I endeavored to seek information while he was on his feet previous to his taking his seat? I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska if I correctly understood him as urging that, as to the members of the guard who have been drafted, their families shall be provided for; but does the Senator from Nebraska intimate that the members of the National Guard who volunteer and who also may have dependent families shall not likewise be provided for merely because they have not had a forcible hand laid upon them compelling them to go?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is a question which is not entirely practical, because no volunteers are being received. There has been a draft of approximately a hundred thousand of the National Guard, but no volunteers have been called for and will not be called for in all probability. The draft of a hundred thousand members of the National Guard will probably be adequate.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. LEWIS. I was not occupying the floor in my own time other than for the purpose of the interrogatory. I do not claim the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator took the floor in his own time, the floor having been yielded.

Mr. LEWIS. The Chair is right, possibly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I simply desire to correct a statement of the Senator from Nebraska.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator says that no volunteers have been called and none are likely to be called. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that on the 17th of March a resolution passed both Houses of Congress providing for 20,000 volunteers, and we have not gotten them.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, that was for enlistment in the Regular Army. I am not referring to that; I am referring to the present emergency. There certainly has been no call for volunteers, and I was informed by the Secretary of War this morning that there was no present contemplation of calling for volunteers and no present contemplation even of adding to the number of the National Guard called out from the various States.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I will state to the Senator that while the present emergency was not mentioned on the 17th of March because of our delicacy about mentioning it, we all know what they were called out for. They were called out to go down on the border to guard our border against invasion by a lot of bandits.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I want to repeat that that was for regular service in the United States Army. Those men were enlisted for seven years apiece, as members of the Regular Army, and not of the National Guard nor as volunteers.

Mr. REED obtained the floor.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri permit me to ask a question of the Senator from Oregon?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Has the Senator any information as to the number of enlistments under that call for 20,000?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I had it some time ago, but I can only approximate it now.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Approximately. I do not ask the Senator for the exact number.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, I can inform the Senator accurately.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator from Maryland says he can state the number accurately.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I went to the department this morning and ascertained that these men—who are not Volunteers, but who are Regular soldiers—have been secured, out of the 20,000 required, to the extent of about 11,500, leaving about 8,500 to get; and it has taken 100 days to secure the 11,500.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Is any provision made for their families under the terms of this resolution?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. They volunteered for 50 cents a day, and they are not men with dependents. They will not take married men as Regular soldiers. It is marvelous that the Senate does not seem to understand this situation any better.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, this is a very poor time to stand here caviling about terms or definitions. The fact of the matter is that 100 days ago we passed a bill authorizing an increase of 20,000 in the standing army. Of that 20,000, a little over 11,000 have enlisted. The men joining the Regular Army under that law joined just as other men who have been enlisting in the Regular Army for years past. They went into the professional soldiery of the country. They expected to serve for a period of years at a certain wage. They knew they were going into immediate service. They had the opportunity to, and undoubtedly did, take into consideration all of their family relations, their own business conditions, their own situation in life. They entered the service because they desired to enter it, not because any emergency confronted the country, not because we were going to war or because war was threatened.

I do not say that we should not, if war actually occurs, take steps for the relief of the professional soldier. I do not say we should not do many things for his benefit. When, however, we come to consider the question of the National Guard or of volunteers, if volunteers shall be called for, we have an entirely different proposition; and to that, for a few moments, I want to invite the attention of the Senate.

First, we stand face to face at this moment with a great international crisis. We may never have war with Mexico, but war may be declared within a few days or even within a few hours. Whether war is ever declared or not, it has suddenly become necessary, for the protection of the border of this country from invasion, to mobilize a large force of men on that border. The action referred to is necessary for the defense of the United States of America. The duty to defend the country rests on every citizen of the Republic, high or low, rich or poor, black or white alike; each must do his full part. It is the duty of each to give the last dollar of his property, to give every moment of his time, and to yield his life if it be necessary. It is a duty devolving not on any part of our citizenship, but upon every man and even upon every woman of the Republic, and it is a duty that no man who is worthy the name of an American citizen will desire to shirk in any part.

Mr. President, such being the obligations of all, we are confronted with this practical proposition. Men are suddenly needed. We find in our country an organization partially equipped, partially trained, and, in a large degree, organized. It is the only body of men we can call for in this emergency. The practical question is before us: What shall we do when our border is being invaded and our rights trampled upon? The answer that comes to the lips of every sensible man is, "Call for that force which is best organized and best equipped for the immediate performance of the task."

Now, who are the members of this force? They are the boys from the homes of our people. They owed no duty, night after night, to meet in armories and drill, that did not fall upon every citizen of the United States. They saw fit to do a little more than the rest of us were doing. They saw fit to enter the armories, to sign the muster roll, to put themselves under discipline, to sacrifice their time, to fit themselves better than the rest of us are fitted for the defense of the country. Shall it be said by any American citizen, especially by any Member of Congress, that because these men have voluntarily done more than we that we will therefore impose upon them not only the burden of going to war, but because they have already made these sacrifices they shall be asked to go to war, leaving behind them wife and child unprovided for? Shall we base that demand upon the miserable argument that "they voluntarily entered the National Guard," and hence should now make these great sacrifices without right of assistance from those who remain at home? Who says that is no patriot!

Suppose they did, as has been said, "enter the National Guard with their eyes open." Suppose when they went into the guard they looked ahead with the vision of the prophet and saw the war with Mexico; suppose their vision embraced bloody battle fields and witnessed the carnage of war and that nevertheless they enlisted. They should therefore not be condemned or discriminated against, but they should be justly granted the greater credit and the higher honor. Every brave man should feel so much the more impelled to deal fairly and generously by them.

What is the practical question presented? We passed the Army bill long after they enlisted, but I care not for that. That bill provided that these men should take an oath to obey the orders of the President. That bill gave the President the right in certain emergencies to call out the National Guard. He did call out the guard, and the sneers of those who a few weeks ago referred to them as "a lot of men who met for the purpose of enjoying themselves and who asserted they "would not make soldiers," and who further insisted "they would not respond in time of danger," have been met by the prompt mobilization of the guard almost to the last man. And, Mr. President, when they came to go, when the call came, many of them had to tear from around their necks the arms of wives and children. Some of them that I have heard of abandoned positions that paid them as much as a hundred dollars a month and answered the call, although they were obliged to leave wife and child behind. They are going to the front, and we stand here and cavil about whether or not we will support that wife and child while they are gone.

I come back to the proposition that "the duty to defend our country rests on all alike." If one man, in the performance of that duty, bares his bosom to the hail of war, if he endures the hardships of the camp, if he accepts the danger of the battle line, if he leaves his home and his avocation, if he does all these things, shall we who stay at home refuse to see that those he loves and who are dependent upon him are kept from want and misery?

I do not like the form of the House bill. I said on last Saturday that I would rather increase the pay of these men so that out of the pay of the Government they could care for their loved ones. But I am informed that this bill is here as an emergency measure; that the men are already on the march; that if we delay the passage of the bill as it came from the House some misery may result. Therefore I accept the House provision until a better can be framed.

I put it upon the consciences of all men here: Shall the man who stays at home and holds his hundred-dollar-a-month position or enjoys the profits of some great business complain because he pays a little taxes to take care of the wife of the man who has yielded his position and who is also ready to yield his life? Shall we play so unworthy a part while these guardsmen nobly sacrifice position, home, and mayhap life? What duty rests on them that does not fall on us? What claim has the country to their services that does not in like manner devolve upon every citizen of this Republic? Shall we complain for the taxpayer? These men are going forth to defend the country, and that means the defense of the life and property of the taxpayer. Shall we pose here as economists and ask that a few men make all the sacrifice while we make none?

This is not a question to be decided according to the way we have treated the soldiers of the Civil War. It is not to be decided according to the recompense we would pay if the country were in a death grip with some great nation, when every man having property, every man having power of arm or strength of body, was called on to do his utmost. The situation is that a few men out of a hundred million must leave their homes and sacrifice their time and their blood. I say the man who is willing to stay at home and accept their service and who is not willing to pay a part of the expense of their maintenance is a coward, a poltroon, and an unworthy citizen of the United States. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair must admonish the occupants of the galleries that applause is not permitted, and the Chair hopes it will not be indulged in again.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I only want to say a few words in reference to the proposition involved in this joint resolution.

In the first place, I believe that if this proposition as it was submitted to the House in the House joint resolutions, appropriating money for the support of the families of the National Guardsmen, were submitted to the enlisted personnel of the National Guard, 90 per cent of the enlisted personnel of the National Guard would resent a proposition which had in contemplation the support of their families when they were out doing a duty which they had sworn to perform. I take a different view of the National Guard from some of my friends. There is not a National Guard in any State in the Union that could be maintained either at a peace strength or a war strength if there were not lingering in the mind of every guardsman the thought that at some time during his period of service he would be called into the service of his country, without money and without price further than is paid to men who are performing that duty as Regular soldiers.

As evidence of that, Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that whenever there has been legislation before the Congress of the United States providing for the utilization of volunteers in time of trouble, the National Guard have always been here patriotically offering their services as the first line of defense in case volunteers were to be raised; and they have done it in no uncertain way, Mr. President. They have joined the National Guard for the purpose of being enlisted in their country's cause if there is ever a war with any foreign power.

Take the Dick law, Mr. President—and this was prepared by the National Guards of the country, introduced in the Senate by Senator Dick, and put through the Congress of the United States. It provided:

That whenever the United States is invaded or in danger of invasion from any foreign nation, or of rebellion against the authority of the Government of the United States, or the President is unable with the regular forces at his command to execute the laws of the Union, it shall be lawful for the President to call forth such number of the militia of the State or of the States or Territories or of the District of Columbia as he may deem necessary to repel such invasion, suppress such rebellion, or to enable him to execute such laws, and to issue his orders for that purpose, through the governor of the respective State or Territory, or through the commanding general of the militia of the District of Columbia, from which State, Territory, or District such troops may be called, to such officers of the militia as he may think proper.

Mr. President, that was not strong enough to suit the National Guard. They wanted the law so framed that they would be called in preference to any other volunteers, and later section 5 of the Dick law, as amended by section 4 of the act of May 27, 1908, added this proviso:

Provided further, That when the military needs of the Federal Government arising from the necessity to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrection, or repel invasion can not be met by the regular forces, the Organized Militia shall be called into the service of the United States in advance of any volunteer force which it may be determined to raise.

That was ingrafted into the law at the request of the National Guardsmen of this country because there was nothing in serving simply the State unless there was some hope for them to serve their country in time of war.

That is not all. Following the enactment of that law and since I have been a member of the Military Committee the National Guard came with the same patriotic purpose in view offering their services to the country in time of need, not for pay, not for promises to their families to be supported by the Government like a lot of paupers, but offering their services as every volunteer offers his service to his country in time of need.

I call the attention of the Senate to the provision of section 3 of the Volunteer Army act of April 25, 1914, which was an act which was sought to be ingrafted in the Senate amendment known as section 56, and it, I assume, was suggested by the National Guardsmen:

Provided further, That when three-fourths of the prescribed minimum enlisted strength of any company, troop, or battery, or when three-fourths of the prescribed minimum enlisted strength of each company, troop, or battery comprised in any battalion or regiment of the organized land militia of any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, organized as prescribed by law and War Department regulations, shall volunteer and be accepted for service in the Volunteer Army as such company, troop, battery, battalion, or regiment, such organization may be received into the volunteer forces in advance of other organizations of the same arm or class from the same State, Territory, or District, and the officers in the organized land militia service with such organization may then, within the limits prescribed by law, be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, as officers of corresponding grades in the Volunteer Army and be assigned to the same grades in the said organization or elsewhere as the President may direct.

Again offering their services to their country without any conditions of pay or allowance.

Mr. President, it will be remembered that the Dick law provided that the National Guard might be utilized in foreign service as well as in domestic service under the strict terms of the Constitution, and there was an attempt to do it, but the Attorney General of the United States held, and he was confirmed by an opinion of the Judge Advocate General, that the National Guard, notwithstanding that provision in the Dick law, could not be utilized for services abroad. That was not what the National Guardsmen wanted. They wanted to be in a position to serve if the emergency ever arose. In order to get around that proposition——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon whether he thinks that the family, say, of a grocer's clerk in Portland, who had been living on $75 a month earned by that clerk, who was a private in one of the militia companies of Oregon, should be thrown on the community and reduced to accept charity, perhaps, because the officers of the National Guard in their lobby here at Washington had argued in favor of having the National Guard called out first and provided for rank for officers of the guard? Does the Senator think that that attitude taken by the officers of the National Guard renders any less the duty of Congress toward the wife and children of that grocer's clerk in Portland? Can Congress excuse itself of its obligations to them? Must they become the objects of local charity because Congress has enacted this legislation? The enactment of legislation is the act of Congress, not the act of the guard.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, answering the Senator, let me say that I question very much if there is a National Guardsman in Oregon, and I doubt very much if there is an enlisted National Guardsman in the Senator's own State, who would take advantage of the charity that is proposed to be given to him in advance of the service that he proposes to perform for his country.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not object to being interrupted, but I want to get through with what I have to say.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I want to object to the word "charity." If the Senator will permit me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Certainly, to make an explanation.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I should like to ask the Senator if he does not know that all the European States give support to the dependents of the soldiers in the field, recognizing that it is not charity, but justice, to the man's family in the cause in which he is engaged.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not care what the Senator calls it. In the form that this bill is drafted it is a charity offered to a soldier to perform his duty that he owes to his country. You may call it what you please. "A rose by any other name would smell as sweet."

Mr. President, the National Guardsmen themselves asked for the legislation that requires their being drafted into the service. As a matter of fact their service must be utilized before you can get any other volunteers.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. If any National Guardsman has asked for this demoralizing measure, that may break up the full——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I shall ask the Senator to produce a single letter from a single man asking for an appropriation of $1,000,000 for the support of the families in case of an emergency. I shall ask anybody to present such application from any man. I do not believe the National Guard would ask to be so protected at the hands of Congress. As a matter of fact, under the laws which have been enacted with reference to the Military Establishment by Congress the National Guardsmen every time have been at the door of Congress asking that they might be utilized in advance of any other volunteers for the service of their country. The Senate will remember that when the Army reorganization act was passed this drafting proposition did not originate in the Senate at all. It originated in the House after discussion, and it, too, was proposed by the National Guard. Not only was the drafting proposition embodied in the bill in the House, but they came over to the Senate and wanted us to strengthen the law by making a dual obligation, one to the State and the other to the Nation, so that there might not be any question about the power of the Government of the United States to utilize them for service, and the Mexican trouble was right on the horizon then. "Grim-visaged war" faced the National Guardsmen then just as much as it does now.

Mr. President, Senators talk about the duties of the Government to the soldiers. They had better speak of the duties of the soldier and of the citizen to his country. The Senator talks about appropriations that have been made in other countries for the protection of soldiers' wives in time of war, when, as a matter of fact, the soldier does not get anything for his service, practically he gets from 10 to 28 cents a day for his services.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is not true of Great Britain.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not know the pay in Great Britain, but I am thinking particularly of Germany and Japan, countries where duty is accepted from the citizens or subjects without pay. When the Army appropriation bill comes up every year the extravagance of Congress is heralded abroad, and now we are proposing to add this amount to the $160,000,000 per year for pensions now paid to the old soldiers of this country and nobody criticizes the payments of those pensions except possibly some who will urge the payment of this charity in advance of enlistment. We propose now to add to the pension or charity before enlistment and then a pension after the service has been rendered.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator explain what he means by adding a charity before enlistment?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Before service performed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. We are proposing to draft these men, and in drafting them the House has incorporated a provision providing for, perhaps, 15 per cent of the families of those men who may be indigent and dependent. How can that be called paying in advance? They are paid only monthly and it applies only to 15 per cent, according to the estimate of the War Department.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It covers the men who have families dependent upon them, and it covers every emergency of the family, even brothers and sisters under 14 years old. Why not ask them to be excused from the service?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Does not the Senator think if 15 per cent of these men are excused in this emergency, if that were possible, it would make a great loss?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If the Senator will allow me——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Would it not demoralize the service?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If this amendment is attached to the joint resolution, I venture to say that there will not be a single man reenlist in the Army of the United States. Why should they? It would absolutely demoralize the Regular Army. Let me call attention to the enlistment condition now.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Before that, if the Senator will pardon me a suggestion, the Senator from Nebraska keeps talking about these men being drafted. Is not in truth the only difference between this National Guard force and the Volunteer force that the Volunteer force volunteer individually and when the National Guard enter the National Guard service they volunteer by organizations?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is practically all there is to it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I object to that. The very joint resolution which is on the Senator's desk provides for drafting these men into the national service so that they can be sent to Mexico. The word "draft" is used. It is compulsory upon every one of them without any exception.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator is treating the question in a different way. When these men joined the National Guard and when they accepted this legislation, they agreed to volunteer in case of war under certain conditions, and the act of Congress which the Senator calls a draft is merely the legislation which pronounces that the conditions exist.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Very many of these men enlisted before there was any such legislation as the Senator from Mississippi speaks of.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And immediately they could have resigned from the National Guard before becoming a part of the present constituted National Guard, but they chose not to do it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. As a matter of fact, the enlistments in the National Guard have been increased since there was a prospect of their being called into the Mexican trouble.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not doubt that most of these men are anxious to go. I do not doubt that even those who are responsible heads of families are anxious to go. It is in the nature of the young man to desire it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And it ought to be.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is all right, but I am thinking of the families at home. We have a duty to them as well as the men at the front.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What did they do during the Civil War and what have they done in every great war?

Mr. THOMAS. In the Spanish War and the War of the Revolution.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator knows very well that in the Spanish War the men were not drafted; that they volunteered. Every man in the Spanish War was a volunteer; but in this case the man is drafted.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I merely wish to ask a question of the Senator from Nebraska. Why does the Senator from Nebraska object to these men, who he says are being drafted, being permitted to retire from the Army and attend to their obligations at home; and if he complains that this provision requires that they shall be drafted into the Army——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have endeavored to answer that, but if the Senator from Oregon will tolerate it I will answer it again. It is because these men are trained for military service, and because it would demoralize the service to take them out at this time and put green men in their places.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I do not think there is anything in the Senator's argument. The fact is that the Senator objects to applying to these militia a rule which has been applied to the Regular Army.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. On the other hand, I am in favor——

Mr. BROUSSARD. The Regular Army is now being recruited more than four and a half months after the passage of the law for which on the floor of the Senate the Senator from Nebraska voted, and every man who has responsibility at home has been turned down by the military authorities, requiring him to stay at home and attend to his family duties. When a man of family has enlisted in the guard and it is proposed to apply the same rule to the militia that is now being applied to the enlisted men of the Regular Army the Senator is opposed to it; he does not want to permit that man to stay at home and let a young man without responsibility take his place. Why does the Senator oppose a militiaman in Nebraska with a wife and children at home who has enlisted in a military organization in the State staying at home and attending to his family and letting the young man without responsibility take his place?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will answer the Senator, if the Senator from Oregon will permit me. It is because I believe it is contrary to the public interests at this time to force 15 per cent of these young men to resign their positions in the militia in the face of the enemy and have their places taken by green men.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President——

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Will the Senator from Oregon allow me?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I should like very much to resume.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon refuses to yield.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I wish to ask the Senator a question on this point.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I would rather the Senator would take it up in his own time.

Mr. President, leaving this sentimental question out of the discussion—because it is a question of sentiment, that is all there is of it—there is not any sound economic reason for providing one method of pay for one portion of the Army and an entirely different method of pay for another portion of the Army. In the last analysis this country has to depend on the Regular Army for the perpetuation of its institutions. There is not any question in my mind about that, and there never was. When these National Guards go into the Army under the muster-in proposition, it will be found that whenever trouble comes they will be so interspersed with the Regulars that the Regular Army will be a balance for a brave and patriotic body of soldiers.

Now, what are we proposing to do? We propose to discriminate against the force that we must rely upon in time of emergency. We propose to say that the families of the National Guardsmen shall be taken care of by the Government of the United States. There was a measure proposed here on Saturday which provided for a different rate of pay for National Guardsmen. Both propositions are disorganizing. There would not be a single reenlistment in the Army of the United States, not a volunteer would go into the Army of the United States if such a discrimination existed as a matter of fact. Why should he? There come to my office every once in awhile young men who have gone into the Army—great, strong, vigorous, fine-looking fellows. They have gone into the Army and enlisted in the hope that they would be able to win a commission in the Army.

Only a few days ago a young man was studying at his own expense in order to stand an examination to get a commission in the Regular Army. He would not stay, because he wanted to go back to his command and serve in Mexico. He is a splendid young fellow from my young State. Why should they go into the Regular Army when they can accomplish the same thing through the National Guard? Even as it is you can not keep the Army up to its strength. It was insisted by The Adjutant General of the Army that it would be impossible to recruit 50,000 a year, and even if you appropriated for an army of 250,000 you could not get them in the Regular Army. Here is the record of reenlistments for the years 1913, 1914, and 1915: In 1913 the total enlistment was 19,983, and there were only 2,000 of those men reenlisted. In other words, only one-third of the men who went out of the Army reenlisted for service.

In 1914 there were 28,559 enlistments and 10,000 reenlistments, in round numbers—practically a third again. In 1915 there were 30,000 enlistments, in round numbers, and 14,000 reenlistments—about one-half.

So, Mr. President, not only would these reenlistments fall off, but there would be no volunteering into the Regular Army. Of the number who have been enlisted under the resolution of March 17—11,000, I believe the Senator from Maryland stated—many have gone out of the service by virtue of the completion of their term of enlistment.

Mr. President, I think I have just as much right to speak for the National Guard as has anybody else; and I state that, in my opinion, the National Guard would resent this legislation proposing to appropriate a million dollars for the support of their families. On the other hand, I believe that the young men who really have families dependent upon them will not hesitate to ask to be excused from service. In fact, I received a telegram this morning from a man, stating that he did have a dependent family and that he wanted to be excused from service with the National Guard. This joint resolution provides for just such cases as that. However, under this House provision in a case of that kind a man must serve anyhow, and look to the charity of a beneficent Government to take care of his family while he is gone.

This is all I care to say. I hope that the amendment proposed by the Senate committee will be adopted by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Oregon that there is an amendment now pending to section 1 which has not yet been acted upon.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The amendments are not dependent upon each other at all. I addressed myself practically to the amendment to section 2.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, I wish to address myself to the amendment of section 2, and I shall therefore wait until the Senate shall have disposed of the amendment to section 1.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee to section 1 of the joint resolution, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, page 2, line 9, after the word "emergency," it is proposed to strike out "not exceeding three years," so as to make the section read:

That in the opinion of the Congress of the United States an emergency now exists which demands the use of troops in addition to the Regular Army of the United States, and that the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to draft into the military service of the United States, under the provisions of section 111 of the national-defense act approved June 3, 1916, so far as the provisions of said section may be applicable and not inconsistent with the terms hereof, any or all members of the National Guard and of the Organized Militia of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia and any and all members of the National Guard and Organized Militia Reserves, to serve for the period of the emergency unless sooner discharged: Provided, That all persons so drafted shall, from the date of their draft, stand discharged from the militia during the period of their service under said draft.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I presume the question will come on disagreeing to the amendment. I desire that it shall be disagreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, the matter before the Senate is divided into two heads. The first proposition is to strike out section 2, which provides for the maintenance of dependents of National Guardsmen. That is one entirely distinct proposition, and it is bad enough; but the abominable feature of the committee report is the proposed substitute for section 2, by which it is proposed to honorably discharge in the face of a national crisis, actually in the presence of an enemy, any man who wants to be discharged from the service of his country. Such a man could go out and get married to-morrow or at any time and come in and get his discharge on the theory that he has a dependent.

Mr. President, there has been one of the most glorious responses made to the call of the President by the National Guardsmen of the country that perhaps has been witnessed in our recent history. Two hundred thousand or more of the soldiers of the guard are waiting now. I have made some investigation as to their numbers this morning. In Maryland more than 100 per cent has been added under this call to the original numbers of the National Guard. Some of these commands are now on the way to the front; and now comes in the committee with this proposition to disrupt, if possible, the discipline and organization and noncommissioned personnel of these commands, some of whom are actually on the way to the front. The proposition is monstrous and unheard of under such conditions.

Discriminating against the Regular Army, the Senator said! I am not going to discuss that question just now. The insertion means, honorably discharge men on the way to the front and demoralize the whole organizations of which they are parts! In the last 48 hours, since this amendment was reported to the Senate, I have made some inquiry of the company officers of the Maryland National Guard. I did not want to involve any man of high rank in the matter, but I have gone about and consulted with the personnel of the companies, the lower commissioned officers, on this subject, and I find it may take out of these commands 25 per cent of the personnel of the enlisted men if you enact this legislation; that is, unless the men are superior to the lawmakers.

To be "honorably discharged," says the committee giving its legislative sanction of this disintregation of our military forces; "no duty to go to the front; go to the rear," and the Senate of the United States says it is all right. Mr. President, this might take 50 per cent of the personnel of the noncommissioned officers. The noncommissioned officers are very vital to the efficiency of any company. "The backbone of an army is the noncommissioned man"; and now they come in with this proposed amendment to authorize half of the noncommissioned officers to resign "honorably," and to resign in the face of an enemy! The more this proposition is analyzed the worse it appears to be.

I have just stated that the National Guard of Maryland has responded nobly to the call of the President, and has been more than doubled in its numbers since that call was issued. At the last muster of the National Guard of Maryland there were 2,300 men upon the roll; and from that inspection only 22 men were absent. The present number on the rolls of the Maryland National Guard is 4,452, or a doubling of the Maryland Guard in response to the call of the President.

There is a great misunderstanding here in the Senate on the subject, and particularly, I regret to say, on the part of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE]. The Senator could not have failed to have known that there has been a struggle going on in this body during the past winter between the friends of a great centralized army under the control of any President, and the friends of an army of citizen soldiers, an army primarily for defense and associated with the local State governments of this country. In such a discussion, in the determination of so large a policy, the sympathy of the Senator from Oklahoma should have been on the Jeffersonian side of the question. At that time it was shown by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] that Alexander Hamilton approved of the local association, of the local origin of the Organized Militia of the several States as guaranteeing this country against usurpation or empire. With the Hamiltonian and Jeffersonian theories both agreeing, there ought not to be any doubt as to where the Senate should stand, especially the Democrats of the Senate.

That question was settled here. We voted to give—I know I voted to give—250,000 Regular soldiers to the Army, if they could be obtained. But we also voted to make the National Guard very much larger and to pay it; and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], who brought that measure in and who voted for it, never laid a line down in that measure precluding married men or men with dependents from being members of the National Guard.

The Senator from Oregon and every other member of the Military Affairs Committee is committed to the policy of enlisting men with dependents in the National Guard; and there is a very good reason, an excellent reason, for it. It has been shown here on the floor of the Senate how essential it is to take in men with dependents. Why, the Senator from Oregon has illustrated that himself by calling attention to the fact that we have been for a hundred days trying to get 20,000 men enlisted in the Regular Army. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] called attention to the matter just now. We have been a hundred days trying to get 20,000 men enlisted in the United States Army. Fifty thousand men have applied for enlistment, but the requirements of the Army are so severe that only 11,500 have been accepted out of the 50,000 who have applied. One of the requirements of the Regular Army is that the man shall be single. The Senator from Oregon knows, as well as I know, that the Regular Army of the United States is recruited from men without dependents, and yet he stands up here and says that we are discriminating between the two great forces.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President——

Mr. LEE of Maryland. The Senator from Louisiana knows that, too.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Certainly.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator whether the provision inserted in this joint resolution by the committee does not accomplish exactly the organization which the War Department, under its regulations, has accomplished, with regard to the enlistment of the 20,000 men authorized by the act of Congress to which reference has been made?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Oh, Mr. President; has it not gotten to the Senator's mind that that method means the failure to secure any sufficient armed force?

Mr. BROUSSARD. No; it does not.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Have we not been for a hundred days trying to get 20,000 unmarried men for the Army?

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maryland permit me further?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Certainly.

Mr. BROUSSARD. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] awhile ago stated that the provision inserted in this measure by the House, providing an appropriation of a million dollars, would affect only about 15 per cent of the militia force of the United States.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. He was wrong about that. I fear it would affect fully 25 per cent.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I rather agree with the Senator from Nebraska that it would not affect much more than 15 per cent. There is not practically anywhere in any State, including the State of the Senator from Maryland, any militia company which is recruited to the full strength provided by the law which we passed recently, and all of them must be so recruited.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. The Senator is wrong about that. Every one of the Maryland companies is up to the minimum requirement, and well above it.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I am talking about the maximum requirement. The Senator stated a few moments ago that 2,300 men in the Maryland National Guard have been recruited to nearly double that number since the call of the President has been made.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Precisely.

Mr. BROUSSARD. All of them must be recruited. Now, shall it be said that adding 50 per cent to the forces of the militia in Maryland under this joint resolution will not disorganize the militia; that the taking away of 15 per cent of the old militiamen and the substitution of 15 per cent of new men will destroy the military qualifications of these regiments for service in the field?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I will explain that to the Senator; and I am glad he asks for such information as I possess as to the situation. The policy of the commands ordered to the front will be when they start to take with them the better trained men. They will leave behind them the absolute "rookies," to be further trained before going to the front. I hope that that satisfies the Senator. But imagine the situation if when a company or a regiment starts we should say to its commanding officer, "You may have to give up 25 per cent more of your enlisted personnel, and you may have to send home 50 per cent of your noncommissioned officers." That is the situation that presents itself to us here; that is what is really before us; that is the real meaning of the amendment which the Senate committee has brought in.

I want to go on a little bit further in connection with the remarks of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE]. The Senator from Oklahoma reflected upon the National Guard on the theory that they had to be drafted, showing that he was not familiar with the legal situation to any great extent.

Mr. GORE. I think it was the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] who made that statement.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. It was the Senator from Oklahoma, if I remember correctly.

Mr. GORE. I think not.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Under section 111 of the military law recently enacted by Congress this draft has been called for merely as a transfer to Federal control, but before that draft takes place a new enlistment oath is also called for, and that new enlistment oath is absolutely voluntary. A new oath is called for under this law, and that new oath is being taken and that practical change of enlistment is taking place freely and fearlessly all over this country to-day at this very moment when the National Guardsmen are rushing to the defense of the Nation. It is voluntary in the highest sense. The term "draft" in section 111 of the Army law and in this resolution merely marks the time and way in which these volunteers of the States become the Army of the Nation.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Certainly.

Mr. GORE. I want to say that the Senator from Maryland misunderstood me. The Senator from Nebraska contended this morning that these men are being drafted, and I desire to ask the Senator from Maryland if these men are conscripts or volunteers?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. These men are volunteers.

Mr. GORE. I asked the question, Mr. President, because the Senator from Maryland has demolished the speech of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. These men are volunteers of the highest character; these men are volunteers of the best type of soldiery. They supported themselves at home; they maintained the industries of this Nation; they devoted their time—or they have heretofore—without compensation to the acquirement of some knowledge of the military art; and they are now ready, in pursuance of that voluntary union with the forces of the United States, not only to go to the front but to go to the front under a new oath of enlistment, which is being required under the new law.

Why, Mr. President, there have been a good many difficulties and delays placed or left in the way of the National Guardsmen. The clothing which was due them and the equipment they ought to have had has been sent somewhere else, presumably to Plattsburg. It has not been forthcoming for the supply of these troops, who now go to meet an enemy. The Maryland National Guard have been waiting a week in camp for shoes, rifles, and the ordinary equipment of soldiers.

Mr. President, in addition to that, thrown right in the way of this movement of troops at this critical time, comes the necessity for the taking of the new oath. In the camp of the Maryland National Guard yesterday there were the men facing the question of taking or not taking this new oath of enlistment, with their relatives standing near, conditions calculated to discourage, and particularly so in view of the fact that the Senate Committee on Military Affairs had the day before reported that it would not be dishonorable for a man to stay at home if he wanted to stay. Mr. President, I venture to say that the proposition of this committee attacking the military integrity and discipline of the National Guard at this crisis and in this way is without precedent in the legislative or military history of the United States.

The situation is not only alarming; it is unique. Here are these guardsmen answering the call of the President, and the Congress of the United States is deliberately advised by the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate to tell these men that they can honorably stay home.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Since the Senator seems to be so well informed touching the military history of this country and the matter before the Senate, I wish to ask him, for information, if ever before in the history of the country provision was made such as is proposed by the House joint resolution for the support of the families of those who enlist to serve the country?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I am glad the Senator asked that question, because it is a new proposition in this country. It is a new proposition for the reason that all wars in the United States up to this date have been fought by boys. The policy that now controls the United States Army enlistment, of not letting married men join the regiments, has been the policy of the wars conducted in this country heretofore.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Has that been the case in wars, or does the Senator apply that to regular service?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Yes, sir; that has been the case in wars. It is universal knowledge that the War of the Rebellion on the Northern side was fought by boys. On the Southern side they "robbed the cradle and the grave."

Mr. VARDAMAN. It was not restricted to boys on either side in time of war.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Not by law, but practically. It is pathetic beyond words, Mr. President, in reading the statistics of the dead of the Civil War, to see how many boys, nearly all boys, fell on the Northern side on those great battle fields. That is the horrible part of it.

Mr. VARDAMAN. How do these widows come to be on the pension roll, if that is the case?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Those must have married after the war.

Mr. President, the failure to get enlistments for the Regular Army under present industrial conditions, the failure to enlist more than 11,500 men in 100 days for the United States Army——

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, if I may ask the Senator a further question, Those men were enlisting for Regular Army service, were they not?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Precisely.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Not to meet an emergency. Does not the Senator believe that if a call for volunteers were made to-morrow by the President of the United States an army of 5,000,000 men could be raised in the United States?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. If you asked for them for war, I think so; but the Senator from Oregon, in discussing this question, made the comparison, and said that these 20,000 Regular troops we are calling for are, strictly speaking, volunteers, and so they are.

Mr. VARDAMAN. If the Senator from Oregon is illogical, that does not justify the Senator from Maryland in being illogical.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. The Senator from Oregon is both illogical and unmilitary with his present proposition.

But to come back to the seriousness of this situation. This country finds it can get only 11,500 men for the Regular Army. The Senator from Oregon, the head of the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate, says we will not have a call for volunteers. We must, therefore, fall back on the National Guard, which is responding so wonderfully on this occasion—the National Guard which on the last day of last year was 134,000 men, and which to-day answers more than 200,000 strong to the call of the President. But the committee asks us to legislate to diminish and to demoralize that force, to strike out the personnel of its noncommissioned officers to a possible half, and tell also a quarter, if need be, of the enlisted men, "Go home; the Congress of the United States says you are honorably discharged."

The greatest piece of sarcasm that this amendment involves is that word "honorably." With the men facing the front, some on the way to Mexico at this moment, this committee comes in and proposes to "honorably" discharge them in unknown numbers.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon an interruption?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I do.

Mr. CLAPP. And for a cause that the Government itself——

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Can remove.

Mr. CLAPP. For a cause for which the Government itself refuses to allow a man to volunteer; namely, that he has a family.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. In the Regular Army—the Senator is absolutely right.

Mr. CLAPP. There is no law against it; but, as I understand, they are not accepting volunteers to-day who have families.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. It is not a matter of statute law that married men can not be enlisted in the United States Army. I think the Senator from Oregon, if he said that, was mistaken. It is simply a matter of Army practice.

Mr. CLAPP. That is it.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I do not think the Senator from Oregon said that.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, if I may be permitted to say so, I did not say that.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Did not the Senator say that? I thought he did. I beg his pardon, then. Perhaps it was some other Senator. But it is not a matter of law that the Regular Army shall not accept married men. It is a matter of voluntary action on the part of the enlisting officers of the United States. It is Army custom to deliberately choose to have it that way.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Certainly.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I know the Senator has been looking up the enlistment to the maximum limit of the militia in Maryland. Will the Senator inform the Senate whether the rule which heretofore has applied to the enlisted men in the Regular Army—that is, that no man shall be accepted who has family responsibility at home—is being applied to the enlistment of men in the militia of Maryland or in any other State?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Why, certainly not, Mr. President.

Mr. BROUSSARD. It is not?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Certainly not; and it was obviously the policy of Congress and of the Senator himself when he voted for the Army bill to put no such restriction in that bill. The matter has been left to the discretion of the enlisting authority. It has been left, as to that particular, to the Army officers, and they choose to say that no married man need apply. It is equally left by the law to the discretion of the enlisting officers of the State militia and they enlist any able-bodied man of proper age—from 18 to 45.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I do.

Mr. GORE. Does not the Senator think it would be equally wise for the Government to refuse to permit National Guardsmen who have dependent families to take the new oath under the new law?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I do not, Mr. President. I think war is now too serious a thing, too large a thing. I think the mechanical art of war, the scientific art of war, is too great to be successfully carried on any longer by young men exclusively.

In looking into the personnel of these Maryland companies I know why they seek to have noncommissioned officers who are married men. They are the steadier men. They are the men of the more matured character. They are the men who know how to handle other men, and they are the essential men for the backbone of the Army, namely, the noncommissioned personnel.

That is why the militia must have them; and that is why in any great future scientific war we must all have them; and that is one of the reasons, Mr. President, in my humble judgment, why the Regular officers say it takes them so long to make a soldier.

Why, Mr. President, they say it takes years and years to make a soldier, and the main reason is apparently that they want to go out and get very young men and have them grow up in the Army. They should take men who have stood the test of life, who have stood the test of business, who are good mechanics, good wage earners; steady, patriotic men, such as the members of the National Guard who are coming to the front on this occasion. Then it will not take so long to make a soldier; and that is just what the National Guard of the United States is on the point of showing. That is just why the enemies of the National Guard of the United States do not want to have the guard demonstrate as a fact on this occasion.

Mr. President, the late Secretary of War, Mr. Garrison, came before the committees of Congress, and he appealed to every centralizationist that could hear his voice, when he denounced the National Guard, the State troops of the several States, and sarcastically said, "Forty-eight little armies in forty-eight separate States!" But, Mr. President, what has been the result? How utterly refuted is that unworthy attack by the former Secretary of War! The character of our citizenry has met the subterfuge which that argument presented. The National Guard of the country has responded with such unanimity that no man in this body, hate the guard as he may, dares to get up and repeat again the aphorism of "Forty-eight little armies in 48 States!" The guard has vindicated the self-governing, democratic, republican capacity of the young men and citizens of this country; and now, Mr. President, the committee comes in with this proposition to cripple this organization, to confuse it, and to interfere with its discipline when it is marching with its face to the front!

We have this proposition divided into two sections. One is to strike out the compensation which the House proposes to give the dependents. Very well. If the Senator from Oregon wants to do that, let him do it, if he has the votes. That is bad enough, but do not go further. Do not aim this blow at these organizations which are going to the front with such patriotism. If you believe they do not want the money—and I have not heard a single one of them ask for it—let me assure you that they do aim to have discipline. They do aim to secure military efficiency, and I believe that the greater part of them will resent the suggestion of this committee to "honorably" discharge so large a proportion of the National Guard. That is the seductive aspect of this thing. That is where it will do its harm—the "honorable" discharge which the committee proposes.

The Senator says that 90 per cent of the guard would resent the proposal of supporting their dependents. I disagree with him about that. I do not believe any of those men would think this payment a charity. What the Senator from Oregon proposes is that these guardsmen go to the front, and then to let their neighbors contribute charitably for the support of their dependents. That will be actual and individual charity. But I want to say, Mr. President, that if I were an enlisted man in the National Guard, and if I were going to the front, leaving my business where I earned from two to five dollars a day, and my country proposed to give $50 a month for the support of my family when I was sacrificing two or three times that much in actual income, as many and most of these men are, I would not look upon it as charity. I would think that the language of the Swiss statute applies right here. I want to call the Senator's attention to the language of the Swiss statute. You will find it in Senate Document 360, page 21:

SEC. 22. Families who become destitute in consequence of being dependent upon some one called into service receive aid from the Government proportional to their needs. This aid may not be assimilated with public charities.

That, Senators, is the language of the statute of Switzerland, the free country of all Europe; and every other country in Europe to-day pays something—not to the bread winner but to the family—when the supporting man is sent to the front. I secured from the Legislative Reference Bureau of the Library of Congress a detailed report on the countries at war—on the countries that made this provision—but unfortunately I am not able to produce it here, having filed it in the Committee on Pensions, to which the bill was referred, and the committee not being able to produce it for the moment.

Mr. President, why reverse our policy? If you did not intend to have the entire Guard go to the front when you passed your military law, why did you not say that no man with dependents could be enlisted in the Guard? Every member of the Military Affairs Committee knew perfectly well what was going on in the National Guard of this country—at least he ought to have known it, if he was familiar with National Guard affairs. They were enlisting and they always have enlisted men with dependents, and you put your stamp of approval on that. You not only said, "It is all right," but you said, "Go on, and we will pay those men something, so that their time taken from their families will be partially compensated for"; and you passed a bill that gave to these guardsmen, for the support of their families while they were acquiring some military knowledge, a sum equal to between $70 and $80 a year.

Mr. President, the very prospect of that recognition had a good effect upon the Guard. Enlistments were becoming more rapid as the 1st of July approached, but when the call of the President went over this country all those questions disappeared. All these men came to the front, young and old, and they met two great needs when they did it—one, the need of an armed force in time of stress—but the most glorious thing that they did when they came was to meet the attack upon the balance of the Constitution, the attack of the centralization party, that comes in here and wishes to put into the hands of any President an Army of more than half a million trained men and to ignore the wise precaution and balance of the Constitution of the United States. Those old Constitution makers who sat over 100 years ago meditating, between the great Atlantic Ocean and the then untouched forests of the Appalachians, were the sages of all history, and they produced this great Constitution, this balance between local self-government and national power. They produced this wonderful combination of governmental limitations that means peace if it is respected; and in the face of warring Europe the patriotism of these men, young and old, has come forward here and established the fact that the National Guard of the States is also a national army for national purposes when need be. These men have demonstrated the wisdom of the makers of the Constitution. Far from being worthy of this attack from behind upon their discipline and the integrity of their organizations, they are worthy of the greatest honor and glory from all Americans who respect the meaning and the significance throughout the ages of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, as a member of the committee whose action has just received the condemnation of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. LEE], I deem it my duty to take the time of the Senate for a few moments in saying a few words in support of the proposed amendment.

I shall precede what I have to say by calling the attention of the Senate to a minority report of the House Committee on Military Affairs, made in 1912, when the measure known as the militia-pay bill was under consideration. This report first calls attention to the large, increased cost that the proposed measure would place upon the Treasury of the United States and then proceeds:

And this will be the cost at the very beginning of the operation of the proposed law, and it affords no indication as to the enormous increase that will inevitably occur later by reason of the increase in militia strength, which it is the plain purpose of the pending measure to bring about, and which can and will be brought about without any additional legislation whatever by Congress if this bill shall pass.

Childish must be the credulity of him who can bring himself to believe that the militia will rest content "with any such reward or compensation" as that proposed by the pending bill, or that, if the bill becomes a law, Congress can successfully resist the tremendous pressure that will certainly be brought to bear upon it for more and more legislation of the same kind. The appetite for pabulum from the Public Treasury grows by what it feeds on, and so does the political strength of the possessor of such an appetite if that possessor happens to be an organizable body of men with widespread political and social affiliations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 10484) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes.

Mr. HARDWICK. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside without prejudice pending the conclusion of this joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Senator from Colorado will proceed.

Mr. THOMAS. I proceed to read from the report referred to:

The gift of prophecy is not needed to foretell the nature of the demands that will be made upon Congress for additional militia legislation if this bill is passed. First and foremost there will be insistent and persistent demands for more pay for officers and men, and every demand of this kind that is made will be followed sooner or later by others of the same kind, each being based upon the assertion, doubtless correct, that the constantly advancing standard of requirements of members of the Organized Militia compels officers and men to give more and more of their time to their military duties and less and less of it to their ordinary vocations Then will come the demand, already voiced in some quarters, that the General Government shall assume the very great expense of furnishing and maintaining horses for Cavalry and Field Artillery and shall redeve the States of other and greater burdens, notably those of providing and maintaining armories, target ranges, drill, encampment, and maneuver grounds, and other necessary facilities, all of which but few, if any, of the States are able or willing even now to furnish to the extent of meeting the urgent needs of the present relatively small militia force, and all of which they will surely be far less able and far more unwilling to furnish to the extent required by the greatly increased force to which the door is opened by the pending bill.

Our population of more than 90,000,000 people will easily permit the expansion of our militia to more than a million men. With the same ratio of expense per man that this bill and existing laws permit the annual cost to the taxpayers would be $116,000,000. An officer of the National Guard has been heard to say that in a few years the yearly cost for maintaining the militia will be $100,000,000, and after making that statement he added, "But what of it?"

As the militia increases in numerical strength, so also will increase its power to influence the policy and legislation of the various States as well as of the Nation. It may be confidently expected that after it has been found that the General Government can be induced to bear an additional share of the burden of supporting the militia the States will not only shape their policy and legislation with a view to inducing or compelling the United States to shoulder more and more of that burden, but will actively support their militiamen in concerted efforts to obtain for themselves, at the expense of the General Government, more and more benefits in the shape of pay, allowances, quarters, retired pay, and pensions, all gradually approaching and perhaps finally equaling those allowed to officers and enlisted men of the Regular Army.

Mr. President, sometimes even Members of Congress seem to be endowed with the gift of prophecy, and the forecast made in that minority report of the constantly increasing demands upon the Treasury for the National Guard has been verified by the course of our national legislation since that time.

I know, Mr. President, from some small experiences of my own, how unpopular it is to oppose anything whose immediate object is an appropriation from the National Treasury for localities or for classes. Those who have the temerity to do so are not only nearly always unsuccessful, but, what is worse, they sometimes incur the quiet and unexpressed displeasure, if not the outspoken resentment, of some of their colleagues. This is an occasion, Mr. President, in which it is peculiarly obnoxious to some to present reports and arguments in support of them which are designed to prevent appropriations which seem to be not only unnecessary but extremely dangerous as precedents.

Mr. President, notwithstanding these conditions I want to assure the Senate that I voted for this amendment in committee, and I shall support it upon the floor of the Senate, actuated entirely from a sense of duty and in the belief and with the conviction that it is essential to the general welfare. It has been said here, and I accept the statement with much pleasure, that the House provision, as well as other measures of similar character introduced on the floor of the House, was made without the knowledge and certainly not by the request of any member of the National Guard.

I am glad to know that, Mr. President. It is to the honor and to the credit of the National Guard that that is so, and relieves them from what would otherwise be the natural imputation, that they have one eye on the enemy in Mexico and another upon the Treasury of the United States.

This measure, then, must be treated as one not having its origin among its beneficiaries, but prompted, doubtless, by the best of motives.

But, Mr. President, what is it? It is that while the National Guard, who are volunteers and not conscripts, are engaged in the national service they shall be given the sum of $1,000,000, to be paid at the rate of not to exceed $50 per month to the families of those who may need it, because dependent upon them for support.

It must be conceded that this is without precedent. It is a novel piece of legislation, certainly without precedent as regards the United States. It is something that we have never done before in any war, not in the War of 1812, not during the Mexican War which followed, not during the Civil War of 1861, not on the occasion of the Spanish-American War. We had in each of those great conflicts volunteers by thousands, as we always have had when the country needed her citizens and called upon them to fight for her honor and defend her territory.

If destitution follows from the separation of the volunteer from his family now, it certainly must have followed in those previous wars which have involved the Nation. Yet who has ever heard of any suffering by the families, the wives and children, of the volunteer soldiers of America, which was not common to the mass of the people. When did the people of this Nation at any time permit those dependent upon the volunteers of the country or, indeed, the members of the Regular Army, to suffer for want without making due reparation?

What is there in the present situation which would indicate the necessity of now providing what is practically a fifty-dollars-a-month pension to certain families during service? The chairman of the committee has well said that names are not important. You can call this donation by whatever name you please, but in its last essence and analysis it is a contribution in the nature of a pension to the families of soldiers while engaged in duty, the distribution to be determined by the War Department upon due investigation.

Mr. President, it may be that some have enlisted in the National Guard and are now compelled to do duty upon the frontier who can ill afford to separate themselves from their families and whose families can ill afford to lose the support which that separation necessarily entails, but if I read the press correctly there are but few, if any, instances in which enlistments under the late call of the President have not been followed by agreements voluntarily made by employers to continue the salaries of those enlisting, while in other instances benevolent organizations, like the Woodmen of the World, have voluntarily announced their intention to stand between their enlisted members and the want which is here apprehended.

I know it may be said that this is a burden which the individual should not assume; but, Mr. President, I can not understand why it is not. Each and every individual in this country is a unit of our 100,000,000 people, and each and every one is entitled—perhaps I should say required—to bear his or her proportion of the public burden.

The distinguished junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] on last Saturday asked why if a man receiving a hundred dollars a month is called from his home his fellow man receiving the same amount should not be required to contribute a small proportion of his income to the support of the family of the enlisted soldier. The question answers itself. Why should he not, and why should he not be expected to do so by a direct contribution as well as through the agency of public taxation?

These, Mr. President, are the common burdens of war, and especially in countries which depend upon voluntary enlistment. So we are not confronted with any emergency requiring this measure.

Now, what, if passed, will be its effect upon the Regular Army? Mr. President, it is impossible for me to perceive two sides to that question. It must necessarily be disorganizing and demoralizing. Shall this country, where all are equal, discriminate in its compensation between the Regular soldier who constitutes the first line of defense and who must first meet the enemies of the country upon the battle field in favor of the second line of defense because forsooth they constitute a distinct and different class?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARDWICK in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Does the Senator recognize the fact that the Regular soldier who has enlisted has no family?

Mr. THOMAS. No; I do not fail to recognize the fact that generally speaking, the enlisted soldier has no dependent in the sense that he has some one who is absolutely dependent upon him for a living.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. That is the point.

Mr. THOMAS. If the Senator means by that that the present Regular force is made up of single men—but I want to say to the Senator, as a matter of fact, there are many men in the Regular Army who have dependents and who are as worthy of consideration of the American Congress as all or any of the members of the National Guard.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield further to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. THOMAS. I do.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I should like to suggest to the Senator that although when the enlisted man in the Regular Army marries, or thinks about getting married, he has been very long in the service, and with a reenlistment has increased pay, and, of course, where they are noncommissioned officers there are always quarters furnished.

Mr. THOMAS. Where there is one noncommissioned officer, there are many privates, and the Senator knows, of course, that the pay is not in itself sufficient to support a family.

Mr. WARREN. The noncommissioned officers, except a very few on special details, do not have commutation of quarters furnished them. Of course regular quarters, clothing, and subsistence is furnished all enlisted men.

Mr. THOMAS. I, of course, accept the statement of the experienced Senator from Wyoming on any military proposition.

Mr. WARREN. As the Senator has said, there are a great many married men in the Regular Army and those who have relatives dependent upon them, and where they are suffering for the support of the soldier, it is recognized by the department, and upon an application by the soldier stating that his mother or his wife or whoever is dependent upon him is suffering for his support he is discharged, as we propose now to do, upon the request of the guardsman that he may be excused.

Mr. THOMAS. The real difference between the two is that one has and the other has no political influence.

Mr. WARREN. That is right.

Mr. THOMAS. That is the distinguishing characteristic between the two arms of the service.

Mr. WARREN. Absolutely.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. I wish to ask a question upon a point that the Senator passed a moment ago. I ask it because I am really in doubt about it in view of what has been said this morning. Everybody knows who heard me discuss the original Army bill that I am not in sympathy with section 111, nor do I think it necessary to the question that I desire to propose and which will to a large degree determine my vote upon the matter. Does the Senator from Colorado believe that enlisted men in the Guard who take the oath and enter into the obligation provided for in section 70 of the Army bill can be drafted under section 111?

Mr. THOMAS. I do not. I do not think that a man by taking the oath can change the effect of a constitutional provision.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is possible the Senator did not answer my question as I intended it.

Mr. THOMAS. Perhaps I did not understand it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Section 70 provides for an obligation taken by the enlisted man in the National Guard——

Mr. THOMAS. Yes, sir. I voted against it.

Mr. CUMMINS. In which he agrees to support the Constitution and obey the orders of the President of the United States. That is a new obligation, and is now being administered to those who are willing to take it among the members of the National Guard. Does the Senator think that an enlisted man in the Guard who has taken this obligation can be drafted under the provisions of section 111?

Mr. THOMAS. I do not, without his consent.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is precisely my view. I do not see that section 111 and the bill which is now before the Senate for the purpose of carrying it into effect can have any operation save upon those members of the Guard who decline to take the obligation contained in section 7. I should like to know if that is the view of the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I have never thought that drafting was necessary. Particularly I felt that when a man took the dual oath, one to the State and the other to the Federal Government, he would still have to be mustered into the service of the United States.

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That was the opinion of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and others at the time the Army reorganization bill was under discussion.

Mr. CUMMINS. I agree that he must be mustered in. That, however, has very little relation to the matter of power; but my view of it is that the members of the National Guard who take this oath and enter into this obligation can be called into the service of the United States and mustered in without any further legislation, and that it is a contradiction in terms to draft or conscript a man who is already in the service of his country.

Mr. THOMAS. I think, Mr. President, that that contradiction becomes more clear when you refer to the joint resolution itself, which declares that the President is hereby authorized to draft into the military service of the United States "under the provisions of section 111 of the national act."

Mr. CUMMINS. So that those who take that oath ought not to be reached by a draft. It is an impeachment upon their patriotism and, I think, illegal in the law, if not contradictory in the law, to reach them by a draft. So we are only trying to reach certain members of the National Guard who decline to take the oath provided in the Army bill. I wanted to know if that was the view of the Senator from Colorado, because I believe there is some misunderstanding in the Senate with regard to the operation.

Mr. THOMAS. I am inclined to agree with the Senator's view, although, to be perfectly frank, I have not considered that phase of the resolution.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I wish to ask if there has been any manifestation of a purpose on the part of the members of the National Guard to any considerable extent not to take the oath provided for in the bill of June 3, 1916?

Mr. THOMAS. I can only answer that negatively. I have heard of no reluctance on the part of any of them.

Mr. BORAH. The reason why I asked was that I agree with the Senator from Iowa that there can be no possible reason, it seems to me, for this bill, except upon the theory that certain members of the National Guard are not going to take or have not taken the oath. If they—if, in other words, the bill of June 3, 1916, has the effect which it was supposed to have by those advocating that particular provision, those men are subject to the order of the President now.

Mr. CUMMINS. May I answer the Senator from Idaho from a scanty and imperfect knowledge of the situation?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator, although I am anxious to get through.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think there are a few men who have as yet not taken the oath prescribed in section 70, and some of the officers provided for in section 73, but they are so few in number that in comparison with the body of the Guard, the total number, it is negligible. The point in my mind was this: If any officer or any man did not desire to take the oath provided in the bill on account of family obligations, he need not take the oath, and he therefore is not in the service of the United States. I think we ought under no circumstances to draft him any more than we draft any other citizen of the country.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask the Senator from Iowa if there is not a silent, tacit approval of the position of some of us that the oath which was supposed to put them into the service of the President would not have that effect by the passage of that bill; that is to say, does not the bill seem to indicate that there is a strong belief that the only way to get those men into the service of the United States is not by an oath but by drafting them the same as any other private citizen?

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes; Mr. President, the truth is that the bill attempts to embody both the view of the Senator from Idaho upon the matter and the views that I attempted to sustain upon the floor. Sections 70 and 73 are exemplifications of the position which I assumed and attempted to maintain. Section 111 is an express recognition of the view which the Senator from Idaho maintained with such eloquence and vigor. That is the truth about it. They are inconsistent in themselves.

Mr. BORAH. In other words, if the Senator from Iowa is correct in his interpretation, this bill is wholly unnecessary.

Mr. CUMMINS. I will not say that. It may be that there is fair room for contention that Congress must declare the emergency, must determine that the time has come when the guards shall be called into the service of the United States. I hardly agree with that view, but there are some, I am sure, who entertain it.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, when interrupted by the Senator from Maryland I was discussing the effect of this section of the House joint resolution upon the regular force. I do not think that effect will be greatly enhanced or diminished by the number of those who might because of their family relations feel a sense of discrimination. The difficulty is that every man will recognize in it a discrimination and an inequality which is justified neither in morals nor in practice. He will know the cause of this discrimination and will rebel against it and become dissatisfied with it, and when his term of enlistment ends, if he renews it at all, he will renew it in the National Guard. A dissatisfied soldiery, Mr. President, is not a safe reliance in a Republic, and when the cause of dissatisfaction is patent and comes as a result of express legislation its far-reaching consequences can not very well be foreseen.

It will operate also, Mr. President, in future. The man, between the two services, desiring to enlist would hesitate. Would he not go to the National Guard because of its attractive $50 a month, very properly and naturally preferring it to that less popular but more important branch of the military service? Would not this be so far-reaching, Mr. President, as to practically result in its disintegration?

I know that if I were a Regular soldier and were confronted with legislation of this kind I would protest against it, possibly to the extent of involving a breach of discipline. We can not afford to do it, Mr. President. It never has been done. And if we do it once it will serve as a precedent for similar and additional discrimination.

Mr. President, we have not been overly good to the Regular soldier. This body adopted an amendment of mine to the military bill preventing discrimination against the uniform, which, instead of being a protection, is virtually a badge of humiliation to the man who wears it.

That was passed in an emasculated form, which was the best the committee of conference could do. It is not what it should be, but it is something.

Shall we now add to these conditions by saying to the man serving in one rank, "You shall have a pension of $50 a month for your family," and to the other, who is or may become equally dependent, "You shall not be permitted to participate in this bounty of the Government"? It is not a question, Mr. President, of sentiment. All legislation that is designed to benefit the soldier and aid his family appeals to the American citizen, and propely so; but he should not permit his sentiments to go the extent to which legislation of this kind necessarily does.

Mr. President, there is another feature about this section. I do not know how accurate my friend the Senator from Maryland [Mr. LEE] is, with regard to many of the statements which he made. With all due charity and humility, I wish to say that he betrayed a lamentable ignorance of this amendment; and if the information which he vouchsafed regarding the facts which he laid before the Senate was equally unreliable, then perhaps I am not safe in referring to it at all; but he did make the statement that if the Senate committee amendment were not stricken out it would operate to relieve 50 per cent of the 200,000 men belonging to the National Guard from duty. If that be true, then there must be some 50,000 families dependent upon the Government of the United States because of these enlistments, which, at $600 apiece, would take $3,000,000, or just three times the amount provided for in this appropriation. Consequently the appropriation would fail because of its insufficiency, since it would necessarily result in discrimination by the War Department—necessary discrimination, Mr. President—betwen the families of soldiers, or it would result in the incorporation of an additional $2,000,000 in some of the numerous and constantly increasing deficiency appropriation bills.

I think the experience of the Nation with reference to our pension legislation is that it will soon be suggested to some one desirous of serving his country that there is no reason why we should discriminate between the family which is dependent and the family which is not, since every soldier who has bared his breast to the common foe and gone to the plains of Mexico, there to do his duty by his country, should have the same benefit. It would result in the extension of this $50 a month to the family of every one of the 200,000 soldiers now upon duty. My friend, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], tells me that I only missed my calculation by some $27,000,000 a year.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. The sum of $600 a year to the family of each soldier would make it $30,000,000.

Mr. THOMAS. Upon looking at the Senator's figures, I find that my statements are even further from the mark, though in the other direction, than those of the Senator whose statements I was just criticizing. [Laughter.] It would require $30,000,000 a year, Mr. President, instead of $1,000,000, to care for these 50,000 families; and if we are to apply it, as we shall in time, to the other 75 per cent, all we have to do is to multiply the $30,000,000 by 4 to secure the total amount that will ultimately be saddled upon the Treasury by virtue of the passage of this joint resolution. It is farcical, if we are going to do a thing of this kind, to make an appropriation of a million dollars. Why make two bites at a cherry? Why not appropriate money sufficient to meet the needs of these dependents, assuming that the Senator from Maryland, in his statement of 25 per cent, is right?

But, Mr. President, does it follow that the proposed Senate committee amendment, if adopted, will result in the decimation of the National Guard? Is there anything compulsory about its requirements? The Senator from Maryland should read this section again. It provides that——

> The Secretary of War is authorized, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to excuse such person upon his own application.

Senators have reiterated the patriotism of the National Guardsman, and I certainly would utter no word of limitation upon his patriotic sentiments and impulses. I assume they exist. I know they exist as fully and as fundamentally as is claimed on this floor. If a man so actuated shall be excused from service only upon his own application, will you tell me that because of our amendment the military force will be depleted 25 per cent, 10 per cent, or 1 per cent, or one-tenth of 1 per cent? No, Mr. President; to the honor of the guard, to the honor of the American soldier, Regular or Volunteer, be it said that under conditions such as now confront us and which may soon involve us in actual war there will be no shirking of duty by any American, there will be no requests for excuse except under the most exigent circumstances and conditions.

So with regard to the amendment there will be no depletion beyond that which absolutely necessary conditions entail. There will be no precedent established from which we shall shrink, and perhaps very soon. There will be nothing mercenary in the service about to be performed for the country, but, as in other cases and in other wars, the man who enjoys the benefits of our institutions and who pays the taxes in peace will be the man who serves and defends his country in time of war.

Mr. President, I have taken more time than I intended in the discussion of this joint resolution. The committee was almost overwhelmingly in favor of it. Indeed, if my recollection serves me aright, practically all of those who attended the meeting were a unit in voting to strike out the section and offering the substitute which has been read this morning. I hope that the good sense of this body will prevail and that this joint resolution as amended will be passed.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, some days ago I gave notice that I would to-day address the Senate on the subject of Americanism and of preparedness. At the request of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] I waived my right to insist upon the regular order so as to enable him to bring up the joint resolution which is now before the Senate. The resolution involves the question of Americanism, patriotism, and preparedness, and I think it is quite appropriate that I should now say what I intended to say on that subject. I shall say it briefly, and it will take no more time now than it would have taken during the morning hour or at some other time.

Mr. President, so much has been said of late about Americanism and preparedness for national defense that what I am about to say on the subject may seem to be superfluous. But I may look upon it from a little different point of view from that of some others, and my ideas of Americanism may differ from theirs. I hope my sense of the duties and obligations of an American citizen is as high as that of other men. I feel sure I have a higher conception of what Americanism should mean than some others. Looking at it as I do, I have felt moved to impose briefly on the time of the Senate by expressing some of my views and sentiments on this important and far-reaching subject.

Americanism means vastly more to me than love of country evidenced by the desire to defend it against forcible aggression from whatever source it may come. Physical courage is common to most men. The call to arms to defend the country from foreign invasion would meet with a ready response. Millions of our citizens would rise up and buckle on their armor in their country's defense. This Nation is in no danger from the lack of physical courage. It is in no danger from disloyalty to the flag, as some self-serving politicians would have us believe, or from indifference to the principles the Stars and Stripes stand for or the sentiments they typify and represent. But something more than the willingness to fight for his country is needed to make the truly good citizen. Something more is needed than the willingness to make sacrifices in money and treasure, personal ease and comfort, and the things that must be surrendered in time of war that the country may be saved, something more than sentiments of loyalty to the flag. These are admirable qualities that help to protect the existence and integrity of the Nation. They bear witness to the loyalty of the citizen to his country. These fighting qualities are the fruits of physical warfare that results in bloodshed and death. They are the attributes of citizenship most prized in the Dark Ages.

The chivalry of barbarous and cruel times was looked upon as the greatest of all the qualities of manhood. We had fondly and trustingly hoped that the great civilized nations of the world had lived beyond that time. We believed that civilization and the refinements of Christianity and education, with their elevating and purifying influences, had made a great and bloody war, such as is now devastating the countries of Europe, impossible. But these cherished hopes and beliefs have been rudely dissipated. The great nations of Europe have gone down into the depths of cruel and barbarous warfare. Nothing more cruel or barbarous was ever known in the Dark Ages. They may kill and slay in a more genteel way, because their instruments of warfare have been improved and refined by science, invention, and skill in the manufacture of such instruments, but that is all. They kill and maim in greater numbers. They destroy more lives, more cities, more homes, devastate the fields of the husbandmen with more widespread destruction, make more widows and orphans, and more helpless cripples than in the times of the barbarians.

This statement of what should constitute the ideals of a nation, found in a little book by Frank Harris, entitled "England or Germany—?" appeals to me very strongly:

> A nation, like an individual, should be judged by the contradictory virtues it embraces and reconciles. A man may be very brave and yet not excite our admiration more than a rat or a bulldog which displays the same disdain of pain or death; but if the man is not only courageous but gentle and considerate of others he at once approaches the ideal. And what is true of a man is true of a nation. An isolated or insular people is expected to love individual liberty and the hardy virtue that springs from individual self-assertion; but it only becomes admirable to us if it unites this love with a passion for equality and even-handed justice and a most sensitive consideration for the poor and the outcast and the disinherited.
> Similarly a people devoted to the idea of the nation, to the self-assertion and glorification of the whole, may be expected to be efficient in conflict, to display high military virtues of foresight, courage, and self-sacrifice; but it can only then become entirely admirable to us when it also shows a sensitive regard for the rights of the individual, for the claims even of peculiarly endowed individuals to live their own lives and cultivate their own special powers.

To this might be added that a nation to be truly great must have a sensitive regard not only for the rights of individuals but of other nations as well.

And now, Mr. President, the cry of Americanism is abroad in our own country. Americanism! What does it mean? What are the people who are shouting for Americanism attempting to accomplish by this outcry? This demand for Americanism is now coupled with the cry "Preparedness, preparedness!" It means the establishment and maintenance of a great standing army and the biggest navy in the world, that we may be prepared to do what they are doing in Europe to-day, kill and maim and destroy. In the estimation of the clamorous, unthinking people who are thus coupling these two things together the willingness or unwillingness to stand for them both is the test of true Americanism.

Mr. President, if one did not know that this cry of Americanism is a mere political shibboleth, intended to catch the public fancy and get votes, there should be serious alarm at this attempt to make military preparedness, military or physical prowess that leads the way to militarism, the domination of the civil authorities by the military, which in turn leads on to military despotism and the destruction of liberty, the test of Americanism. Just now we are being deluded into the belief that these things are necessary to the preservation of our own country by the bloody conquest that is going on in Europe and the use that is being made of it by designing men at home. Our people have been driven into hysterics of fear and apprehension by the selfish propaganda that has been going on up and down the country, instigated and financed by the men who make money out of war and preparations for war. This has been made infinitely worse by dragging it into politics. Politicians and political parties are joining in the senseless and injurious cry of Americanism and preparedness because it has been made popular by the sordid means and influences I have mentioned. When the elections are over and the people become sane again we may begin to inquire, and, in part at least, realize what it is that constitutes true Americanism, and that it is not willingness to prepare for or to go to war and kill and maim our fellow men and destroy the fruits of their industry.

Mr. President, it is not my purpose to question the importance of maintaining a true spirit of Americanism in this country or to belittle or degrade the citizenship of our people, but to elevate our Americanism to a higher level, and to say what I can to exalt the conception of the people of this Nation of what true Americanism means and what it stands for.

I have said something about physical courage as an attribute of good citizenship and a defense of our institutions and our soil. Without physical courage, without the capacity and the will to fight if fighting becomes necessary in defense of the country, our Nation would not be worth saving. It takes courageous men to make a great or a worthy nation. If our country is not worth fighting for, it is not worth having, and if our people are not ready and willing to fight to preserve it, they are not fit to have a country or to receive the protection and the benefits it bestows upon them. Neither do I question that in such times as these and after the rude awakening we have experienced as a result of the European war it is wise and patriotic to make reasonable preparation to defend our country against invasion and to protect our citizens in their rights. Such is not my purpose. What I am seeking to do is to call the attention of the Senate and the country to the fact that there are infinitely higher attributes of Americanism than physical courage or the willingness and desire to prepare for national defense by force of arms.

Mr. President, this country is not suffering, nor is it in danger from any lack of physical courage on the part of its citizens. It is suffering and it is in danger, serious danger, from a lack of moral courage on the part of its citizens, particularly those citizens who are in public life and as such the representatives of the country's interests.

What this Nation needs, what the world needs, most of all, is not physical but moral courage; courage to stand for what is right without regard to the consequences to one's self; courage to respect and maintain the rights of other nations as well as our own; courage to withstand the temptations of ambition and self-seeking; courage to uphold the public interests as against personal or party considerations; courage to be loyal and true to the country as against political expediency or party success; courage to say to the power of patronage and party gain, at the expense of the public interests and efficient service, "Get thee behind me, Satan"; courage to resist the Executive power in legislation and appointment to office and serve only the public good as judgment and conscience dictate, regardless of consequences to oneself or one's party. Courage to serve within the limitations of the fundamental laws of the country and to resist the temptation to dictate or coerce action by other public servants or departments of government; courage to be a servant of the people and not their master; courage to resist the ambition to be a dictator and a despot; courage to stand fearlessly against the power of wealth in defense of the rights of all the people, rich or poor, high or low, capitalist or laborer, black or white; courage to stand steadfastly for social and industrial justice to all; courage that stands fearlessly for honesty, integrity, independence, and loyalty to the public welfare against all the temptations and allurements of ambition, partisanship, public favor, or self-aggrandizement; courage to be loyal and true not only to one's own nation and its people, but to all the peoples of all the nations of the world; courage to stand for international as well as national patriotism; courage to be just to other nations at the expense of one's own country; courage to stand fast for the freedom and independence and liberty of all men everywhere without regard to race, nationality, color, or condition; courage to be just and neutral as between warring nations; courage to support and defend one's adopted country against the wrongful invasion or unjust or illegal infringement of its rights by any other country; courage to do the right thing at all times as conscience dictates, regardless of consequences.

Courage such as this would establish true Americanism in our own country. Such courage on the part of all mankind would put an end to war and make courts of international conciliation and arbitration, as well as war, unnecessary. The world would live in peace and amity without the aid or assistance of courts, armies, or navies or other tribunals. But, Mr. President, we have not reached, we have not as a Nation even approached, the height of this sort of Americanism. The man who suggests this remedy for the evils that afflict men and nations is ridiculed or derided. He is met with the good-natured smile or the sneer of contempt by practical men of affairs. He is pointed at as a visionary, a dreamer of dreams, an impractical reformer and uplifter whose views of what Americanism and life generally should be may be beautiful but are never to be realized among men. And these practical men and women who are content to leave things as they are have the evidence to sustain their outlook on life, present and future. The kind of courage to which I have referred exists only in small degree, I am willing to confess. Selfishness, the all-pervading enemy of mankind, is abroad in the world. We find it in the seats of the mighty, in the rulers and public servants of nations, in legislative halls, in the churches, in politics, in trade and commerce, in the minds of the capitalist and the laborer, in the public and social life of the country, and, worst of all, in the home. The places of power and responsibility are too often filled by self-seeking and subservient politicians, where disinterested and patriotic statesmen should be found. Political expediency and partisan interests rule where patriotism, love of country, and a desire and purpose to serve the public interests should be supreme.

But, Mr. President, after all is said, the world is not wholly bad. Never, I believe, in all the history of the world were greater or more sincere efforts made by the few to elevate thought, bring about a more enlightened understanding of good and evil and their results, to aid, succor, and elevate the down-fallen and redeem and regenerate the criminal classes than now. There are courageous, heroic, self-sacrificing souls who are giving their lives and the best that is in them for the betterment of humanity. They are not sustained by the applause of the multitude or rewarded by public approval. They need no arms or munitions of war, no armies, no navies to aid them in the defense of their country. These are the men and women who are striving unselfishly, patriotically, courageously to establish and maintain true and lasting Americanism. They carry the torch that lights the way to the freedom and independence of the masses, justice to all at home and abroad, domestic and international peace, and the liberation of mankind from the evils that make for discord, strife, and war among men and nations. It is they who are standing for national defense. It is they who are erecting the bulwarks of defense that can not be destroyed by shot or shell. It is they who are elevating American citizenship, leading the child in the way he should go, and making better, more loyal, more patriotic, and more intelligent and righteous men and women. They are making Americanism more respectable and the Nation more secure, more stable, and more deserving of the respect and confidence of other nations. Their burden in the righteous effort to purify, regenerate, and elevate the citizenship and Americanism of the country has been made infinitely heavier and their object more difficult of attainment by the admission into this country of undesirable, inefficient, ignorant, and criminal immigrants from foreign countries, knowing nothing and caring nothing about Americanism or our free institutions.

Mr. President, the work of these defenders of a nation's honor and its life is not completed. The bulwarks of defense they are building on the imperishable foundations of faith and charity and right and justice are not yet finished. Until they are our country must be defended by other and less worthy and commendable means. If need be, we must resort to the way of the barbarians of old and kill and maim and destroy with the instruments of death that are now devastating Europe. Ours comes the nearest of any nation on earth to a Government of freedom and independence. It must not be allowed to perish from the earth. Whatever is needed to prepare for its defense against internal strife or foreign invasion must be provided. The people are willing and anxious that this shall be done. But, sir, let us not act hastily and unwisely. Nothing that we can see or reasonably anticipate now calls for a large standing Army or a big Navy. By overarmament we may be inviting the very troubles some of our people so much fear. The people of this country have not lost either their patriotism or their courage. If danger should really threaten, the young men would spring to arms as they did when the liberty of our people was established, and this Government had its birth as the result of their bravery and sacrifices, and as they did when its dismemberment was threatened in '61. A volunteer force is not dangerous to liberty; sometimes a Standing Army is dangerous. A moderate-sized Regular Army suited to times of peace, to be made the nucleus of a volunteer force if war should come, supplemented by an industrial and constructive reserve force devoted to the continued and efficient carrying out of Government works and given military training sufficient to fit them for service in time of war, to be regularly enlisted in the public service and provided with homes, and a Navy of moderate size and made efficient and serviceable, should suffice now. The country is being stampeded with fear. We are in a hysterical mood. We can not, in this frame of mind, act with that calm and calculating judgment that the times, the importance of the question, and the lasting effect of what we may do demand at our hands.

I hope the time may soon come when nations will not need to prepare for their defense by force. The scenes of terror that are being enacted in Europe admonish us that it has not come yet. Every good and loyal American citizen will stand ready to do what is necessary to preserve the life and institutions of the country by waging war, if necessary, but let us hope that a loftier sense of the obligations of civilized nations to maintain peace and a purer and higher Americanism on our own part will save us from this dreadful necessity.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent at this point to insert in the RECORD, without reading, an article I have clipped from the Washington Post of several days ago. It is, I think, an accurate statement of the political and military events happening in Mexico since the resignation of President Porfirio Diaz, May 26, 1911, down to about October 19, 1915. I do not know who wrote it, but it puts these happenings in a consecutive historical way that I think would be of value to the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, this is simply a chronological record of events, without comment?

Mr. STONE. That is all it is. There is no comment in the article. It is absolutely without any political significance. I will ask to have it inserted in the RECORD without reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

MEXICO TORN BY SERIES OF REVOLTS SINCE DIAZ QUIT PRESIDENCY IN 1911.

Three weeks before Porfirio Diaz resigned the Presidency of Mexico, which he did May 26, 1911, he granted an interview in his rooms in the National Palace, Mexico City, and said at that interview:

"I am an old man and I am very tired. I would have resigned the Presidency long, long ago if I could have found in all of Mexico one man to succeed me and rule the country. But I know of not one. I know my people, and I fear that after I go there will be anarchy in Mexico. I love my country, and I would give my life willingly for it, but if I must resign to bring peace, I can see nothing ahead but anarchy. There will be no lasting peace."

But in those weeks people turned against the man who had governed their country for more than a third of a century and had brought peace and great prosperity to it, and he was forced to resign. His last words when he bade good-by to a friend on the night that he left Mexico City for Vera Cruz were:

"I am the first President of Mexico who ever left office and left money in the treasury."

Francisco Leon de la Barra, who was the minister of foreign relations in the cabinet of President Diaz, succeeded him according to the law of succession laid down in the Mexican constitution, and became provisional President on May 26, 1911, to hold office until a new presidential election could be held.

Francisco I. Madero, who had been defeated by Diaz for the presidency in 1910, and who had started his revolution in November of that year, made a triumphal entry into Mexico City June 8, 1911, reaching the capital a few hours after an earthquake had shaken the city and killed nearly 300 persons. The Mexicans, always superstitious, declared that the earthquake was a bad omen, but they gave Madero a great reception and acclaimed him as the savior of the nation.

ZAPATA THERE TO FIGHT.

Emiliano and Eufemio Zapata, the Morelos bandits, were among those who gave their vivas for Madero, but they fought him afterwards, and they fought De la Barra even before Madero was elected President. Then they fought President Victoriano Huerta and his numerous successors and are now fighting Venustiano Carranza just as wholeheartedly.

Madero was inaugurated President of Mexico on November 9, 1911. On the day before his election he said to me:

"I will have perfect peace throughout Mexico within 90 days. Mexico now will have a real republic, a real democracy, for the first time in her history. The people will be free and there will be lasting peace."

From that time until to-day there has been no peace in Mexico. Not for one day has the country been free from revolutions since President Madero made that statement. He had many enemies throughout the republic, and they kept his armies busy.

On January 31, 1912, a new revolt of importance began with a battle in Ciudad Juarez, opposite El Paso, and a considerable number were killed on both sides. The next day Emilio Gomez, who had rebelled against Madero, was proclaimed provisional governor. On February 5 President Taft sent four battalions of United States regulars to the Rio Grande to protect the border. Madero tried to compromise with the rebels and offered Pascual Orozco the governorship of Chihuahua. Orozco declined, and on February 7 went over to the rebels. On February 27 Ciudad Juarez was captured by the rebels, and the revolt spread to many States. Then President Taft forbade the exportation of arms and ammunition to Mexico under a law passed by Congress on March 14, 1912. On March 29 President Taft ordered rifles to be sent to the Americans in Mexico City, for there was a decided anti-American sentiment there at the time, and many Americans had been murdered in different portions of the Republic. On April 15, 1912, it was figured that 85 Americans had been killed since the war began.

OUTRAGES AGAINST AMERICANS.

The fighting in the north against Orozco and in the south against Zapatistas continued throughout the summer, and reports of outrages upon Americans and their property in many parts of Mexico poured in.

On October 13, 1912, Felix Diaz, a nephew of the deposed president, put himself at the head of a few hundred men and seized Vera Cruz, the chief seaport of Mexico. His revolution was of short duration, for on October 23 Madero's forces entered Vera Cruz waving white flags and crying "Viva Felix Diaz." Then when Diaz was greeting the officers of the newcomers they pointed their pistols at his head and he had to surrender.

Diaz was taken to Mexico City and put in jail there, and at first Madero declared that he would be put to death, together with Gen. Bernardo Reyes, who had tried to start another revolution in the north and had been captured. Many petitions were made to Madero to spare the lives of those two men, and he listened to the pleas and postponed action. In the meantime the secret agents of Diaz and Reyes were working against Madero in the army, and early on Sunday morning, February 9, 1913, the first cavalry and part of the mounted police and other soldiers liberated Diaz from Belem prison, while cadets from the military school at Tlalpam, a suburb of Mexico City, liberated Gen. Reyes from the penitentiary.

Reyes and Diaz, with their liberators, went to the national palace and attempted to take possession of it, but were repulsed by the Twenty-ninth Infantry, which formed the palace guard. There was a sharp fight. Gen. Reyes was killed at its beginning, and machine guns were turned loose on the roof of the palace, sweeping the crowded Zocalo, or main plaza, and the Avenida de San Francisco, which was thronged with people going to church. Diaz and his men were driven off after many of the cavalrymen had been killed, and on the plaza 610 noncombatants were killed, according to the official records of the police. Men, women, and children were killed throughout the length of the Avenida de San Francisco.

SUCCESSFUL ATTACK ON ARSENAL.

Diaz and his men stormed the ciudadela, or arsenal, about a mile from the national palace, and took it after a fight lasting half an hour. There they found huge stores of arms and ammunition and prepared for a siege. All day Sunday and Monday they remained quietly in the ciudadela, while Madero was gathering his forces to oust them. The battle began in the city on the morning of February 11 and continued until Feburary 18, with a daily cannonading and machine-gun and rifle firing between the ciudadela and the palace and many other places where the federals had planted batteries. In the "decena tragica," as the time of the battle is called in Mexico, more than 1,000 persons, mostly noncombatants, were killed and about 18,000 wounded. Several Americans were among the killed.

February 18 Gen. Victoriano Huerta, who had been commanding the Madero forces, met Felix Diaz at the American embassy by request of the American ambassador, Henry Lane Wilson, and they came to an agreement for the overthrow of Madero as the only means to stop the fighting and slaughter of citizens. It was agreed at that conference that Huerta should become the provisional president and that Diaz should have the naming of the new cabinet. Madero was arrested at the national palace and his brother, Gustavo Madero, was arrested in the Gambrinus Café, where he was entertaining friends at dinner. Madero and Pino Surez, his vice president, were locked up in the palace and Gustavo Madero was taken to the ciudadela.

On the night of February 22 Madero and Pino Suarez were removed from the palace and taken to the penitentiary, but were murdered shortly after midnight close to the walls of the penitentiary. Gustavo Madero was murdered in the Cuidadela the morning after his arrest under the excuse that he had attempted to escape—la lay fuga.

SIGNED THREE RESIGNATIONS.

Before Madero and Pino Suarez were removed from the palace they were forced to sign their resignations, thus making Pedro Lascurain, minister of foreign affairs, president according to the constitutional provision. Lascurain was president exactly 26 minutes, however, for he immediately appointed Victoriano Huerta as his minister of foreign affairs and then resigned, making Huerta the president.

On March 11, 1913, President Woodrow Wilson formally announced that the United States would not recognize assassination as a means for acquiring office and would only recognize a government in Mexico which should be formed after a genuine and free election.

Two or three days before the overthrow and death of Madero, Venustiano Carranza, governor of the State of Coahuila, it is stated on good authority, had started a revolution against Madero, but as soon as he heard that Huerta had usurped the presidency he began a revolt against Huerta.

The rebellion against Huerta spread rapidly in many States and Carranza and Francisco Villa headed it, Carranza being made "first chief of the constitutionalist armies" and Villa taking active command of the troops.

All the European nations recognized the Huerta government, and on July 15 a number of the foreign ambassadors to the United States asked President Wilson to outline his Mexican policy. The next day he recalled Henry Lane Wilson from Mexico. Charges had been preferred by Mexican Free Masons that Ambassador Wilson was guilty of complicity in the assassination of Madero and Pino Suarez, but had never produced any proof to back such assertions.

The revolutions against Huerta's government grew and multiplied, and he ruled the country with a rod of iron. He sent Felix Diaz to Japan on a mission to thank the Japanese Government for the part it had taken in Mexico's centennial in 1910, gradually got rid of all the cabinet members who had been named by Diaz, frightened any other presidential aspirants out of the country, and on October 11, 1913, arrested all the deputies while they were in session and locked them up in the penitentiary.

ADVISE AMERICANS TO LEAVE.

In the meantime William J. Bryan, Secretary of State, by direction of President Wilson, had ordered the American consuls throughout Mexico to advise all Americans to leave that country. On August 27 President Wilson delivered a speech to Congress, advising Americans to get out of that country, and money was appropriated on September 16 to bring "destitute Americans" away from threatened danger.

Huerta declared to me at that time that Americans would be in no danger in any territory he controlled, whether they were at war with the United States or not, and that he would strictly comply with the stipulations of the treaties between Mexico and the United States concerning Americans in Mexico in the event of war between the two countries. In the same interview he said that he had always liked the Americans, had done his best to further their interests, had always protected them in Mexico, and even offered to pay first-class passage for them on steamships leaving Vera Cruz when Mr. Bryan wanted some of them to travel third class.

Villa continued to make headway all through the year, and the constitutionalists were assisted in getting arms from the United States to fight Huerta, whose cause was becoming hopeless, because he could not get money to finance the Government.

AMERICANS TAKE VERA CRUZ.

On April 7, 1914, a boat's crew from the U. S. S. Dolphin was arrested by one of Huerta's officers at Tampico, while the town was being defended from an attack by Villa forces. Admiral Mayo, who was in command of the United States naval forces at Tampico, demanded that an apology be made and that the American flag be saluted because of the insult. Huerta apologized, through Nelson W. O'Shaughnessy, the American chargé d'affairs in Mexico City, but refused to order a salute to the flag until he had received a report on the occurrence and until he was satisfied that the salute would be returned.

On April 21 Admiral Frank F. Fletcher landed marines and sailors from the American fleet in Vera Cruz Harbor and seized the customhouse. The Mexican soldiers fought as well as they could, but Admiral Fletcher took the city and the hills around it. The Americans lost 17 killed and several wounded. Two of the wounded died later.

Then President Wilson invited Argentina, Brazil, and Chile to cooperate with the United States to try to bring peace between the warring factions in Mexico, but nothing came of their conferences, as Carranza declined to cease his efforts to oust Huerta.

Huerta resigned on July 15, 1914, and left Mexico with a large number of his immediate followers. Huerta went to Kingston, Jamaica, and then to Spain.

Francisco Carbajal succeeded Huerta and remained in that office about a month. The constitutional army entered Mexico City August 15 and took peaceful possession. Carbajal left the country. Carranza established his headquarters in Mexico City, and an early election was talked about.

There was comparative peace for a short time, but Francisco Villa and Carranza quarreled, and Villa issued an ultimatum that Carranza must retire. A convention of all the revolutionary chiefs was called to meet at Aguas Calientes to decide upon the establishment of a government. The Villa supporters got control of the convention and announced that Carranza had resigned and that Francisco Carbajal had succeeded him as president. The convention remained in session until November and then proclaimed Gen. Eulalio Gutierrez provisional president of Mexico.

Villa immediately undertook to see that Gutierrez was installed in office and began his march to Mexico City, reaching there with little opposition from the Carranzistas. Carranza fled from the capital and went toward Vera Cruz. The Americans evacuated Vera Cruz November 23, 1914, and shortly thereafter Carranza made the seaport his capital.

ZAPATA IN MEXICO CITY.

Gutierrez was forced out of the presidency January 16, 1915, and Roque Gonzales, another provisional president appointed by the convention of chiefs, was forced to leave Mexico City, and two days later Carranza's army took possession. Villa proclaimed himself in charge of the Mexican presidency, and on February 16 Carranza's forces under Gen. Obregon evacuated the capital and Emiliano Zapata marched in.

Then Ignacio de la Torre started a new revolution in the south.

The fighting between the Villa and Carranza forces continued, and on April 7, 1915, Obregon defeated Villa in a terrific battle near Celaya. In May the Carranza forces took Saltillo and on the same day serious food riots took place in Mexico City.

President Wilson on June 1, 1915, warned the warring factions in Mexico that they must restore order, and on the same day the Carranza forces captured San Luis Potosi and defeated the Villa forces at Leon four days later. The Carranzistas continued to win battle after battle, and in the first week of August again occupied Mexico City. In September Obregon took Chihuahua and Torreon for Carranza and Villa's power was finally ended. Villa ceased fighting, except as a guerrilla chieftain, in December.

President Wilson formally recognized the government of Venustiano Carranza October 19, 1915, upon Carranza's promise to hold elections and establish a stable government at the earliest opportunity after he had pacified the country.

Of late there have been reports that Obregon and other constitutionalist generals are demanding the elimination of Carranza.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, before voting on these amendments it strikes me that without intending it we are doing the National Guard a very grave injustice by the second of these amendments. The second amendment proposes that the Secretary of War may relieve a National Guardsman from the proposed call to arms upon the declaration of the guardsman that he has a family dependent upon him. Now, we are enlisting men to-day under a rule of the War Department that excludes men with families. Here are two men, Smith and Jones, eligible to duty. Smith has a family, and so has Jones. Smith happens to be in the National Guard. Jones, because married, is excluded by operation of a rule of the War Department from enlisting. Smith, to get the same exemption, has to go on the records of our War Department as claiming, in the face of possible war, the exemption which by rule we impose upon the other man. It is penalizing the members of the National Guard.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just a moment?

Mr. CLAPP. With pleasure.

Mr. HARDWICK. Is there not this difference between the two cases: The man who enters the Regular Army enlists for a definite period of years, whereas the citizen soldier is supposed to render only very brief and temporary service, and might not that be the occasion and reason for discrimination?

Mr. CLAPP. That might be a reason why we would exempt a man with a family who entered the Regular Army for a long term and not exempt a guardsman, but under this amendment we do exempt a guardsman, only he has to go on record, in the face of impending war, as claiming the exemption which we grant to the other by operation of law.

Mr. HARDWICK. One more question, if it does not disturb the Senator.

Mr. CLAPP. Not at all.

Mr. HARDWICK. Why would that be any discredit to him? Is it any discredit to any man to say that his presence is needed at home to support his dependent family?

Mr. CLAPP. I do not think the Senator from Georgia would want it thrown in the face of his descendants that in the face of impending war he had claimed an exemption of that kind. It does not seem to me, Senators, that it is just to the guardsman. And why should he be placed in that position? Why should we not apply the same rule and give him exemption by operation of a rule of the department instead of allowing one man an exemption without the discredit of claiming it and, because the other man has been willing to devote some time to service in the National Guard, imposing upon him and his descendants the discredit of placing upon the records of our War Department the fact that in the face of war he claimed this exemption?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly; with pleasure.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That was the purpose, or one of them, of this amendment. The National Guardsmen are in the service now, and have been for years. One purpose of this amendment is to place the National Guardsman in the same category as an enlisted man in the Regular Army. We arrange it so that he can get out if he wants to.

Mr. CLAPP. Oh, yes; he can get out by putting his children where it will be thrown in their faces at some time that in the face of a national danger and calamity he claimed this exemption. We do not put him in the same category with the enlisted man, because the enlisted man does not have to go on the war records of this Nation as claiming the exemption.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Let me say to the Senator that if we should adopt any other rule, if we should exclude the National Guardsman by a positive enactment, we would have the greatest howl from the National Guard that we have ever heard, because they want to go.

Mr. CLAPP. Then I think we should strike out that amendment entirely.

Mr. STONE. Strike out what?

Mr. CLAPP. The second amendment. We should reject it.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. CLAPP. With pleasure.

Mr. WORKS. I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota if he does not think the mere fact that the National Guard is drafted into the service will forever be a record against him?

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, if I can say so on the floor of this Chamber without violation of the rules as to the suggestion of what happens in other chambers, I can not understand how the word "draft" ever came into this joint resolution.

Mr. WORKS. Nor can I.

Mr. CLAPP. Why 100,000 men, ready and many of them anxious and eager to be sworn into the Federal service, should be characterized as "drafted," I can not understand. It seems to me incomprehensible that the term ever was used. The word "called" would have answered every purpose; and in two places in the bill as it reads the word "called" is used in the alternative with the word "drafted."

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. CLAPP. I do.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I should like to remind the Senator, if he will permit me, that this is simply the method provided by the military law that we passed here recently for transferring the militia to the command of the President.

Mr. CLAPP. Well, then, let us use the word "transferred"; let us use the word "called." Of course I know that in this sense it is not a draft as the word "draft" is used toward the close of a long war that has largely exhausted the enlistment of a country; but it goes into history; it goes into the records, as using the word "draft" to call 100,000 men the great majority of whom are willing and ready to go.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me.

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I want to call his attention to the fact that in this respect the bill is following the language of the Army bill which we passed recently. Here is the language:

When Congress shall have authorized the use of the armed land forces of the United States, for any purpose requiring the use of troops in excess of those of the Regular Army, the President may, under such regulations, including such physical examination, as he may prescribe, draft into the military service of the United States, to serve therein for the period of the war unless sooner discharged, any or all members of the National Guard.

This is the law, and the resolution in this respect simply follows the law.

Mr. CLAPP. Two wrongs do not make a right. I think it was unfortunate to use the word "draft" in the original law. The words "called to service" would answer every purpose, and the words "called to service" would answer every purpose in the pending measure.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I had forgotten that the word "draft" had been used in the military reorganization bill. I quite agree with the Senator from Minnesota that it is a very unfortunate word to be used in this connection, and I greatly regret that it is found in the bill we passed a few weeks ago. We all know what "draft" means. When our Government, in its days of stress in the Civil War, could not get soldiers in any other way, it drafted them—compelled them to serve.

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. And that meaning will attach to this word if it is used in the joint resolution we are considering to-day.

Mr. CLAPP. The words "called to active service," even with the previous law as it stands, would answer every purpose. Another thing: It goes out to the world that on the eve of a possible conflict with a small nation the United States has to resort to draft. I think the word is unfortunate.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator that it seems to me that the word "draft" is not intended to convey the idea of forced conscription.

Mr. CLAPP. It is not so intended, of course.

Mr. STONE. No. Now, possibly it was used as expressing by a single word what it would have taken several words or a sentence to have expressed otherwise. For example, the Senator says they might have used the words "called into the service." It would then have been necessary to have followed those words, "called into the service," with something to the effect that the guardsmen should be required to respond to the call, making it obligatory upon them. The word "draft," I imagine, was used as conveying the idea of a call by the Government, on the one hand, and of obligation upon those who are called to respond, and the word "draft" covers it all.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, the word "draft" does not involve the discharge, without force, of an obligation. It involves the suggestion that a person is being compelled. It was an unfortunate word to use there. We might have adopted the term which is so popular to-day in military parlance, "called to the colors." That has had a great run throughout Europe and America; but "called to actual service" would have answered every purpose, and "called into actual service" now would, I believe, cover every requirement of the pending law. But I do think the other is a most unfortunate thing, when we grant to one married man immunity by a rule which does not require him to go on record as asking for it, and then compel a man, because he has enough public spirit to go into the guard, to leave his dependent subject for all time to the charge that in the face of impending danger he asked for an exemption.

Mr. STONE. If I may be permitted, it seems to me to be equally unfortunate to say that a certain number of the National Guardsmen are put in a class, married men or men having other dependent members of their family—a provision that separates them from their comrades and fellows and gives to them a stipend of $50 per month during their service for the support of their families. It seems to me that it is in the nature of a bounty offer, an inducement in the form of a subsidy offered them to enlist in the service of the country. My friend from Minnesota is repelled by the thought that a guardsman so situated may be given the right to ask to be discharged from service, as he may be loath to impose that stigma upon himself; so the Senator thinks; but to my mind the stigma is as deep and in every way as repulsive to say to him: "If you will enlist we will give you not 40 acres and a mule but we will give you $50 a month above what your fellows get in the guard or in the Regular Army. Those who go along with you shoulder to shoulder, taking the hazards and perils of war, have no inducement of that kind to stir their spirits or to strengthen their nerves; but you we set apart and we offer you this stipend, this bounty, this inducement to serve your country."

Sir, it seems to me that the brave guardsman who is willing to go at the call of his country to his colors needs nothing of that kind. Moreover, he is comforted with the certain reflection that this Government has always in the past and will in the future, if ill befalls him, take care of him if he comes out wounded, crippled, impaired in health, or, if he dies, take care of his wife and his children and his dependent ones. I can not believe that he wants you to offer him this stipend. It would be a reflection he would resent.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, that is another and distinct proposal from the one I was discussing, and the one has no reference whatever to the other. The Senator has not heard me advocate that provision in the joint resolution. I was criticizing a provision that does require a man who does get the same exemption that a man gets if he goes to enlist to be penalized because he is in the National Guard.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, if I had not participated in a very active manner in what I felt was the necessary protection of the National Guard when the provisions of what is now known as the Army bill were under consideration here in the Senate, I would not now impose this trespass upon the Senate. I am interested in the Illinois National Guard. These are State soldiers, the equals of any defenders to be forthcoming from any land. For the National Guard and the volunteer soldier I have a few thoughts I beg the liberty to present to you, gentlemen, my colleagues of the Senate—reflections which interest me very much. They are suggested by the two measures now brought before this body—the one from the House and the amendment of the Senate.

I regard the effect of these measures as very serious. These measures are likely to be the only declaration of war that may be made between this country and Mexico or between this country and some forces of Mexico, if war is ever to be had. It must not be forgotten that we never did officially declare war in the controversy between the United States and Mexico that led to the result of 1846 and 1847. Conditions were parallel to these which are before the Senate in this very hour. It was the deception, the trapping, and through treachery the murder of American citizens. They were then under the command of a captain of an American troop and on the way to punish that form of marauding outrage, that treacherous assault, that cruel and bloody atrocity that the American people commanded to be avenged. There was, upon behalf of those in power in the American Government, the pretense that the action had for its object the mere chastisement of those who had inflicted a wrong upon our soldiers. It will be recalled by Senators sitting here—and paying me the compliment of their attention—who remember the history of their country, that there was then presented in this body a resolution which had for its purpose the authorizing of the President of the United States to increase the Army in order that there might be additional force sent to Mexico to make absolute and sure the enforcement of that punishment which our people felt was justly deserved upon those who had treacherously surrounded our soldiers and murdered them.

From that time on, Senators will recall, we were precipitated into war. The war became general. We moved to the heights of Chapultepec. We avenged the Alamo. We added California, New Mexico, Arizona, and the accompanying domain to the Union. The war was bloody. It was serious to our own people. It was regarded by many of that era of statesmanship as unjustified. It received from many quarters condemnation; and interesting it is here to remark that though we fought the war and achieved a victorious result, the party in power, which precipitated the war out of the necessities of the situation, was beaten in the immediately ensuing political campaign. A victorious general returned from the conflict and defeated those who had previously taken credit for the successful achievements in the support of their soldiery and the defense of their country.

I mark for your attention, learned Senators, that this joint resolution here to-day may serve the same office, under these parallel circumstances, that the resolutions in those older days gone did serve, and the uses to which they were put.

Now, sir, in frankness, what is the condition of this, our country? It is well for learned men, such as occupy seats in this body—students of history, cautious men—to hope to avoid war. They know the unholy consequences. They know it means wives widowed. They know it brings slain and maimed men.

They know the blood that is lost and the treasure that is expended—that there follows a confused and distracted country. They would avoid it. But out beyond the portals of these Halls is a sentiment called public opinion. However much we may at times set our faces against it, it has invariably, when risen to its due tide, deluged us, overcome us, and, by a decree of that great forum we style the people, reversed our judgment and compelled us to submit to that which our own good senses knew was not best for the welfare of the country, but realized that we had been precipitated to the result of having the country ruled—as was announced by the English King—by its will rather than by its weal.

This day, Mr. President, we are upon the eve of a very serious undertaking. This resolution to be passed here, authorizing the President of the United States to add a legion of soldiers to his forces, will receive its construction in the places most interested as a reinforcement of strength for the purpose of conducting a conflict to success; and if our purpose be not that, we have no purpose we can justify.

Mr. President, the legislative bodies of our country have dallied with the sentiment designated "humanity" in some instances, and "justice to nations" in others so long that these considerations advanced by our enlightened souls have been misunderstood and in many quarters construed as cowardice, and in other directions to serve as a license not only to assail our people but to estimate our country as contemptible. To longer continue this policy of extenuation is insupportable; it will make us pusillanimous. So long as this Government withholds real action this generosity will receive the opposite construction from its humane intention. But with action it will appear that at last America has awakened and that she has tested her patience as long as she could, and that still consistent with her Christianity, still just in her humanity; righteous in her Americanism, she now says to Mexico, in the language of Holy Writ, "Thus far and no farther shall you come." You have reached the end of your perpetrations. America now through her soldiery cries "Halt!"

To those who assail us wrongfully, to those who murder our children, to those who take advantage of our generosity and reward our benefactions with injury, the announcement must go forth that America has tolerated as long as she can, and whether her legislative bodies would endure it longer or not the American people cry "Stop!"

Now, Mr. President, if we are about to proceed to execute the will of the people, or do that which we feel is essential in this hour, I propose to my colleagues this thought, that we must do it by such methods as will effect the object. However, it will not do to divide upon mere technical constructions of an amendment here or a substitute there.

The question must remain as we have now made it; that is, what of all these remedies proposed will most completely effect the clear purpose which we Senators well know is our object? The object is to have enough force in Mexico at the very earliest moment that can achieve the purpose of the administration and the American people—the immediate and effective chastisement of those who murder our people and do insult to our country. We are now to maintain the dignity of the United States without exhibiting her in a spirit of bravado or as a great Nation that would take advantage of the weakness of a smaller. Yet we can not permit her to be the object of humiliation before the eyes of our countrymen.

Mr. President, I do not indulge in the belief which many around me have expressed, that we are in for a short undertaking. I recognize the condition of Mexico as presented by the records. Three contesting forces, each seeking superiority over the other, each by methods of warfare, and each having been in the field for years—and let it be remembered these have from certain sources been provided with ammunition; each section provided with modern rifles and each with machine guns, as we have now had illustrated; each with its tried methods of warfare among themselves, in which during two years and a half they have been in conflict continuously. They have become trained soldiers, skilled in shooting and artful in the devices of war. They have prepared for the undertaking in a country of which they have knowledge in excess of that which can immediately be acquired by our men, going for the first time into these lands as strangers. Our men now go to a country where the heat burns the eyes from the face, where diseases unknown to strangers will seize them, maladies unknown to American science; all these foes to meet our countrymen when they are far away from civilization, with mountain ledges about them, with tropical growths to poison them, with reptiles and insects to torture them, and every covert enemy of man to persecute them. Mr. President, this is no easy undertaking confronting our countrymen. We do violence to what should be the reflection of us if we indulge either for ourselves or for those for whom we are guardians the hope that the task will be easily entered upon and quickly disposed of.

Sir, let it be understood that when we are in we will remain for the full length of time essential to accomplish the purpose for which we are sent. This means in the nature of things, if we recall circumstances undertaken in Cuba by Spain and our own conflicts in the Philippine Islands. Then, sirs, we are in for a contest and conflict of longer duration than we now calculate, and of greater hardship than the mind of the ordinary American is pleased to contemplate in behalf of his children.

Then, Mr. President, shall we here at this time, diverted in a mere division upon methods, fail to recognize that anything that can be brought about which will most completely equip the Army with sufficient reinforcements should be the thing that should be adopted?

Mr. President, what is the reason, sir, that we are in the condition we find ourselves this day? I mean no reflection against my fellow mankind in America, but there are some strange truths that must not be lost sight of. One is an injustice that has been paraded around this Republic, indicting both Houses of Congress and both great political parties as lacking in devotion to their country, and holding these bodies up as being only proper subject for the condemnation of their Republic because they have not "prepared." Who are these gentlemen who find us in this condition of unpreparedness to meet a conflict on the American southern border by a well-organized and regularly constituted Army, where we are forced to call from the workshops, from the farms, from the factories the toilers, from the desks of the commercial houses the young Americans engaged in these undertakings, the boy from the side of his mother, the father from his children and his home? Why is the emergency?

Sir, I read in the public press of that eminent official and officious gentleman of America, indicting the public representatives in Cabinet and Congress as no longer fit for their public places in that they have failed to create an Army to meet the dangers which each says are upon the Republic. My mention of these accusers is called forth to accentuate the fact that if there be any gentlemen responsible for the failure of this country to be prepared it is these gentlemen who are circulating throughout the country in platform and banquet speech denunciation. I refer to one of my distinguished friends, the Hon. Joseph H. Choate, member of an international peace society, and member of an arbitration council. These have been for years advising these bodies that war was over, that there would never be another conflict, and denouncing every appropriation that went out from these Houses looking to the surrounding of America with a method of defense, charging that we were of a bloodthirsty temperament, bringing on conflicts, because we were meeting in some way that which we believed to be an emergency. Prof. Schurman—an eminent educator—how well we recall how in a great conference he attracted attention by his announcement that the Japanese-Russian war was the "last war of earth"; that every tendency thereafter in the form of preparation looking to public national defense was an offense against the Treasury, on the one hand, or on the other, converting the youth to the policy of slaughtering their fellow men.

The distinguished educator to whom I referred sent forth a brochure to demonstrate that sitting in the council of the Nation looking to prepare their country for military defense in an anticipated hour was a violation of enlightened duty to their country. Both Ambassador Choate, Prof. Starr Jordan, of the West, and Minister Schurman proclaimed that there was no danger to us; that all nations were at peace; that all people were friendly; that every surrounding was in harmony with the Christian creed "Love one another."

Now, let us pause and ask the question, What has been the effect of all this teaching on the part of these eminent educators? If the American constituency of Senators and our colleagues in the House were educated to where they condemn the Member of the House who voted for an appropriation for the Army, it was because they were educated by the eminent gentlemen who had been going around this country now condemning Congress to the belief that there was never any need of any preparation, and that any effort in that direction was simply for the purpose of political preferment to the official and financial profit to munition makers.

If the citizenship of this country has discouraged the United States Senate from time to time in making preparations for the Navy, it was not because they lacked patriotism and would not expend money when justly necessary, but because through many of these eminent speakers who are now condemning us, who had constituted themselves executioners as well as judges of the public officials of this country, these, our constituency, were educated that the world was at peace; that war was a slaughter of mankind; that every effort on the part of these legislative bodies to prepare their Nation for war was an indication of their service being dedicated to selfish interests against the welfare of their countrymen.

This teaching went direct home. It has had its effect through all the days in the year, and through magazines and newspapers our public became converted to the theory of these distinguished teachers. Yet, sir, it is they who, indifferent to the effect of their teachings, are now indicting our administration, making unnecessary reflections upon its predecessor, holding up the Members of this body and of the other House as having failed in their duty before their countrymen, for not having anticipated as sure of existence results these masters of wisdom denounced as impossible of ever arising in the American country, or, indeed, as ever existing in the now civilized world.

Now, sir, we are confronted with a situation in Mexico because we have been compelled to obey the constituencies, our masters, our principals, who have not encouraged us or even indorsed us in making such preparations heretofore, that which might have avoided the contingency which is now upon us, demanding the National Guard and the citizen soldiery unwarned being summoned without preparation—"to do or die."

Mr. President, what is now sought? It is sought to provide a method by which these soldiers shall at once be available for the uses of the National Government. In what way can we make such available to meet our present great demand?

Mr. President, both of these measures, or, rather, I may say, each of these amendments has merit. It is not necessary to denounce one to justify the other, nor impugn the patriotism of any man or of any committee where we find he or it have sustained the one and rejected the other.

Mr. President, if it were in my power, I would amalgamate them both. I would provide not only that a National Guard should be called out and that the soldier be paid, but that those who felt that there were such necessities at home that he could not leave home to go to war without irreparable loss might upon their representation be permitted exemption from service. The amalgamation of both of these amendments will serve a purpose that I regard most humane and in this hour very necessary.

Mr. President, I therefore come to the Senate amendment. I lay down the doctrine, sir, that if ever we establish in this body or in Congress that merely because a man is married and carrying the responsibility of a family he may be excused from fighting for his country beyond the border, then you establish that, being married, he can likewise be excused to fight for his State within the border, for his being married is of itself an exemption of his duty as a soldier because of carrying the burdens of a family. If this shall be sufficient to exempt him from bearing the natural consequences of his citizenship as against a foreign foe, who shall say it shall not apply to a local foe? The risk—I will say the consequences—to his family will be the same, loss of position or loss of opportunity to maintain them.

Therefore, Mr. President, it will be clear that in time of strife, civil disorder, riots, he will be the same privileged individual to avail himself of the exemption under the local situation at his home in a State as under this amendment he would have against a foreign foe, once the policy were established.

Then the moment you establish it by which he can avail himself as against a foreign foe and then against home disorder, the next step would be, why allow a married man to enlist at all, if at the time of need for the execution of the very purposes for which he is constituted he could obtain an exemption because he was married? Then why have him in the service at all? It would seem at once a useless undertaking. Then we would be remitted to where no man would in any wise with family obligations assume the obligation of a soldier to his country.

Then we would be remitted to the young man who has not married at all, and if not married, notwithstanding the valor and the zeal within him, he beholds his neighbor, because married, taking no chances of his life, enjoying the ease of exemption. Then the single man has a natural temptation to recall that he may have a sister dependent upon him, that he may have a mother dependent upon him, that he may have a relative to provide for, as many of us have, and he therefore likewise manifests the same anxiety, discloses the same disability, and he becomes exempt from the service.

Then, sir, you have left only that young man who must have neither father nor mother, who must have neither sister nor brother, who must have no form of dependents upon him, in order to have an enlistment of those in whom you may be sure there will be no exemption, whatever may be the hour of need of them for their country's defense. How could you, under such circumstances, then have sufficient men in number to achieve any form of defense whatever? Clearly the committee must see that the direct, logical deduction of this amendment is to destroy the guard and the Army—to defeat all enlistments.

Now, Mr. President, it is noticed that there is an effort on the part of the public press—in the execution of its patriotism—to infuse into the minds of the employers, corporations and individuals, the duty of continuing the pay of the men while the men are at the front. If these institutions shall do so, it is because they desire to maintain the families of those men who have been left dependent. Sir, there may be some institutions that will comply with this justice. There are others we know who will not. Others who can not. Do you remember, Senators, that in the Spanish-American War how many thousand young men, how many thousand men of families left their work and enlisted under the colors, who undertook the hazards of that encounter, and returned to find their places filled, no opportunity for work, weary with disease, sick and prostrate and in want. Let me say to the able chairman of the committee that no illustration before this country has been so effective to paralyze its enlistment as the very memory of the manner in which these men were treated in that war in this Republic. It was in their mind as they came home in want that they were abandoned in the hour of disease. Many of them died; they were left without attendance. They left their families in hunger. The men of the present day have beheld this form of treatment at the time of the Spanish-American War. This paralyzed the very sentiment of patriotism. This is one reason why now the enlistments in all forms of service has been so small and of so little advantage to our country. It is the real cause of that exhibition our citizens of the Republic are giving Europe of either a want of patriotism on the one hand or a want of appreciation of our dangers on the other.

Then, sir, if this money is to be paid by those who employ these men, the sum must come out of the pockets of the people in some form. Then, sir, it must come from taxpayers. Then, why not a better system, a uniform one, that pays all who serve something rather than only that some get all, others nothing?

Now, Mr. President, I must get out of the mind of my eminent and distinguished friend from Missouri [Mr. STONE], the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, the thought that was expressed by him, that this money was to go to the Guard, and, as he well says, no guardsman would tender such a bid for his patriotism. Let me say to my learned friend the distinguished Senator and to others he must not lose sight that this money is not paid to the soldiers. It is not paid to the serving man. It is paid to that source which is defenseless—his children, his wife; the family who are left homeless and hopeless—and it is because of our wrong to these that we are providing that they shall not suffer this penalty. Let me offer you a thought which is itself in my mind.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Will the Senator allow me before he passes to that?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the chairman of the Military Committee.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. What will the Senator do with the Regular Army? Does not the Senator believe if we pay the National Guard at a rate higher than those in the Regular Army that as enlistments in the Regular Army expire they are bound to go out of the service? Does not the Senator believe that the result must inevitably be that the National Guard will be in Mexico recruiting itself up from time to time and be doing all the fighting without any Regular Army to assist it?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, the chairman of the committee seems to address his observations not to what is just to the Guard, but what he feels should be a benefaction to the Regular Army.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No, Mr. President; let me interrupt the Senator there for just a moment. It is not a benefaction to the National Guard that I am looking after. It is the duty of the citizen to the country. It seems to me we are absolutely without an army if the measure he now proposes passes.

Mr. LEWIS. My reply to the able chairman must be this: If we have reached the point, as reached it we have, where we can not get men to enlist in the Army, and as is shown only in the Guard, because the condition of our country invites them to compensation in other directions, how does the able chairman expect we will ever get an army, be it a regular army of the Nation or a State army of the Guard, without a compensation sufficient to justify either in leaving that which compensates him now, in order to engage for his country with loss to him? I am unable, I say to the Senator, to see why we should not pay the Guard or their families rather for the losses they will be compelled to endure, merely because you might also be called upon to pay the family of the others of the Regular Army for similar loss. Where is the crime in justly paying every man's family for what the head of it necessarily risks in loss to them. Where is the offense that we do justice to all if the hour of emergency upon the country is sufficient in its exigency to justify it?

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. STONE. It seems to me that the eloquent argument the distinguished Senator is making leads to this: If we do not make provision like or similar to that contained in the bill, where will we get an army? The question is to stigmatize the men of this generation as the degenerate sons of noble sires. We did get them in every other generation. Have we fallen so low that to-day subsidy must now be offered to inspire patriotism?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Missouri again harks back to the expression that seems to persist. There is no effort being made here to give to any soldier any money that converts him into a "degenerate son of a noble sire." There is no provision in this bill paying him for his services. The provision in the bill is to pay his family for the time that is lost by him to them and to provide for them because their provider has been taken from them. Now, the able Senator says we have had armies before. I answer yes; but I deplore to reply that the manner of our treatment of them has been that this valor of the American to which he alludes has been rewarded by abuse and ingratitude.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I submit to my friend that no nation in all the world's history has taken such kindly care of the men who fought its battles as this Nation of ours.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Afterwards.

Mr. LEWIS. I concede that there is a large pension list. I concede to the Senator from Missouri that the pension has been the bounty of the soldier after the war, and continued for a long time; but the Spanish-American War is the war that is in his mind, that was fought upon foreign soil, and not the one which made for the Union, where men gave their lives, their children, their homes, all for the Union, for to them a life in a land without union was no life worth living; but these soldiers fighting on a foreign soil came back and beheld the treatment of this country to them, and as seen in this body and in the other, the frequent and constant defeat of every measure that sought to put the Spanish-American soldier upon the level of those of the Union soldier. These Spanish-American men suffered much, left the home of their lives and loves content to serve their country, and returned to find their wives and children in want.

Therefore, I say to my able friend, it is not as we would love to have it. We may pay tribute to the splendid patriotism and we may delight to pass eulogium in the presence of the world, but we must reckon with the plain facts. We have not been able to have the recruits. It is not the want of patriotism, not the want of valor. If war shall be declared between ourselves and some antagonist, rest assured, my able friend from Missouri, every citizen will be found following the colors gladly.

But in instances like this, we being a powerful and rich country, bountiful and opulent, with the Treasury of the citizens swelling in money—richer is our Nation than the dreams of avarice ever revealed to the imagination of mankind—Mr. President, shall it now be said that, when able to defend and protect them, we declined to do so? Shall we say to them this is the sentiment which you might dream might possess us, but which you know, as a practical fact, we delude you in the hope and blast you in the disappointment?

Senators, the thought in my mind is this: I went through something of this. My career in the Spanish American War was nothing to bring to me reflection of glory or even of memory of comrades; but I can not overlook that which I learned by my eyes and which since then I have had occasion to see in experience. I command you to mark my illustration: Senators, I choose your boy or your brother, and he works for a living; he is a clerk in a store, depending upon his salary to educate his boy or to send his little girl to school, struggling to pay his rent and maintain his family; or he works in the factory or in the mill; he is a toiler living week by week, and without that week's allowance can not maintain his family. He joins the Guard, sir, out of that splendid patriotism which the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] would lay upon him as the palladium of glory. He is called to the colors, he enlists, and he is off to the halls of the Montezumas, knowing that life may be gone and that death may be his, but in this he is not moved; he is willing to give his own life. But in his heart, eating, is the consciousness that behind him is one who carries his soul—his wife, who may hunger, who may be evicted from her home for want of money to pay the rent. He thinks upon his child, who must be taken from school and ground on the factory wheels or to have its life smothered out in consumption in the sweatshops.

With these thoughts agonizing his life—that these dear ones are to be penalized with poverty, hunger, and want—how can the most gallant soldier march beneath his colors, crying, with his soul of patriotism and love of his land, "My country; right or wrong, my country." Sir, he feels in his soul that unspeakable agony that is to befall to those he loves. In such an hour the American soldier becomes abject. He is the creature of the pity of those who know the suffering within him. He is the victim of his own regret as he suffers the tears that bleed from his heart within and silent. Why allow this? Why insist upon it? Why force such suffering to save so little a sum as is provided here?

Now, my able friend from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] has made a study of what he feels will be the burden of taxation of this measure, and his views must not have hissed upon them contempt as being wanting in patriotism equal to my own. He, together with other Senators, including the able Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], to whose excellent speeches it is always a pride whenever opportunity affords to advert—the Senator from Colorado has spoken of a million dollars, then of $17,000,000, and then of many million dollars. Let the truth of the measure be understood. There is no measure here paying every man $50 absolute. The measure provides that those, and only those, who feel themselves dependent, unable to maintain their families by any method at their hands, shall have this right of appeal, and then the amount shall be only such amount as, under the circumstances, the discretion of the Secretary of War, or those who shall administer the measure, shall find to be just, not exceeding the sum of $50 in each case.

Mr. REED rose.

Mr. LEWIS. The junior Senator from Missouri desires to interrupt me, and I yield.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, is this not the question, and the only question, not whether we shall offer a premium to men in order to get them to enlist, not whether we shall buy their patriotism, but whether, when a man has been gallant enough to go to the front, we will let his widow and children starve at home? Is not that the whole question?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, the able junior Senator from Missouri has epitomized what I thought I had been presenting and which I gladly accept as the definition of what I meant. The question is exactly that. We provide for the soldier's family, not for the soldier.

Mr. President, I have called attention to my viewpoint. Now, I call the attention of the able chairman of the committee [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] to one thought which, I am sure, must have passed the attention of the committee altogether, and I ask the attention of my friend from Colorado, the able Senator, Mr. THOMAS. Do you realize how the amendment of the committee exempting married men or men of families will operate now upon the soldiers summoned? Senators, if this amendment of the committee had been presented before there was any call for troops there might have been practical execution of it without serious embarrassment. But now, sirs, since these men have been called, are reconnoitering in the field, ready to march, thousands upon thousands of them, the State guard of every State in the Union, I now ask my learned colleagues how now can they avail themselves of the amendment? The soldier is in his company. He is literally in the field. He is moving to the front. His knapsack is on shoulder, gun on shoulder. He is on march or is pitching tents on mustering fields. Is he now to beseech his captain to let him write a letter to the Secretary of War, pointing out that he left behind him his beloved ones who are dependent? How, then, will his communication receive attention? In what way will he get opportunity? He has already been taken from his home; he has already gone to the field. He has no method that can at all be sure by which he can avail himself of this amendment tendered by the committee.

Then, sir, apart from the fact that he is so situated now that he can not avail himself of it, these thousands upon thousands would have to first get their commanding officer's consent, then address the communication, and then suppose the order came to march. Pending the consideration of his communication in the War Department, he is gone, and what would avail him then? He has lost his place at work; it has been filled with another; he has already been subjected to the hazard. Wherein, then, does it benefit him now? His family are already at the hazard of want, the necessity for assistance.

The amendment, therefore, however much merit we may concede to it, must apparently, sir, be too late to provide for the largest number mostly in need of immediate consideration. Then I come to that other thought.

Mr. THOMAS and Mr. GORE addressed the Chair.

Mr. LEWIS. I yield, first, to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], he having first risen. Then I will yield to my friend from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE].

Mr. THOMAS. This joint resolution is one which is so drawn as to authorize the President to draft into the military service the National Guard. It is executory in its character. It presupposes that there has been no drafting into the Federal service up to this time. Inasmuch as the whole joint resolution is executory in its nature and empowers the President to do something which presumably but for the joint resolution he could not do the distinguished Senator must perceive that there is a fallacy in his last argument.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, if conditions were as the able Senator seems to believe, there would be much force in his interpolation, but the able Senator forgets that in the military bill there was a provision that called for the National Guard to take the oath of allegiance before muster, and when that oath of allegiance was taken they came at once into the Federal service, and when the call came they were mustered and are now upon different fields of activity, biding the time to move forward to foreign fields. Therefore I invite the able Senator's attention to the fact that they are so situated by virtue of the provisions of the other bill that if circumstances justified it they could not avail themselves of that as yet unexecuted contract or order to which the Senator properly alludes.

Mr. President, I come, then, to the other thought. I know, Senators, this will be called a sentiment. We are speaking upon the greatest sentiment of humanity—the feeling which men bear to their wives and children, and that which they hold to their country. I ask you, sirs, if you believe that you can get those men who are now marching side by side with their colleagues, who are already in the field, with their uniforms on, with their accouterments strapped about them, with their tents pitched—do you think you can get one of those now to let his fellow soldiers know that he is seeking to skulk away from the service? Will he now ask to be released, will he write, will he demand to desert because he can give justification for doing it in his wife's name? Do you not know he will feel that he would be charged with cowardice, with a lack of patriotism, and, however much his little letter through his captain might eventually meet the eye of the Secretary and eventually receive some examination, and after that some relief be granted, do we not know that under no circumstances would he endure what he would feel to be a humiliation of the scoff and scorn that he feels would follow from his colleagues if he now attempted to avail himself of the provision? Does he not feel that he will be treated as deserting his comrades, and a shirker from duty to his country? For that reason, therefore, again, this provision is too late to avail the largest number of those who are most involved. Therefore, Mr. President, I say both should be amalgamated.

Now, keep in view, Senators, the last but most important reason why the amendment will not avail the soldier. It is that a man will not ask to be exempted even though he knows his wife and children may need him. Why? Senators, the sentiment that has made the soldiers glorious of all lands since civilization wrote her history upon the records of time has been that of woman. Justice compels the confession.

The consciousness of the man that the woman of the house for whom he fights, the daughter of his heart for whom he struggles, or the woman he loves, whose face is framed in his heart, the woman whose praise he dreams of, has ever been the animating cause and inspiration to him to do deeds of valor and to earn the praise of men. Sirs, such woman of the land will not let that man claim his exemption from a service to his country merely because the woman must suffer while he serves. This woman may hunger, but she will not ask that he desert his country to earn bread for her. The mother's children may be in want, a baby cry for food, but that mother will not consent that their father be disgraced by the charge of desertion in order to rescue his children. The cry of the country to the mother of that boy and to the wife of that husband has been so strong in the soul of woman since generations began that all the suffering of the man or children can not smother it, nor all the legislation of the world drown it. No woman will consent to a man forsaking his country in the hour of its danger to come to her rescue, though in the hour of her need.

You accomplish nothing by this relief. The woman will not suffer the dishonor to her husband; she will not let her children wear the contempt in after days that the father was a "deserter," merely because he could put his excuse off on her, the mother of his children. In this crisis every American woman is a Roman Cornelia, crying out to husband, brother, and lover, "Go with your shield, and come back with it or upon it."

Make no mistakes, Senators. We are dealing with humanity in its sublimest and noblest altitude this day. For that reason the amendment, as I see it, will fail in its effects. It will not accomplish the very relief which you would claim for it, and which I know in great sincerity was your object when you presented it.

Ye are crying unto country for power to the strong. Humanity prays for justice to the weak.

Therefore, Mr. President, I tender a substitute in which I embody them both, reading to this effect: That the wives and children and families of these who make the sacrifice in such instances as that they shall be left wholly in want, and where there are no means to provide for them, may be subjects of this Nation's care in the manner provided in the first amendment, according to the equities of the situation, not exceeding the sum provided, and also that there may also be provided that in instances where that soldier by reason of the circumstances, perchance of disease and sickness, feels—he should be exempt—that he should have the exemption, we meet the needs of all, and all are justly provided for.

Now, sir, I think I have made clear my reasons for supporting this amalgamation, my reasons for opposing the Senate amendment in its entirety, and I tender my substitute.

I know, sir, we will be criticized; I know there are those who measure their patriotism by their purse. Such as these have ever been an ignominy to this Republic. They prate patriotism; they cry out "preparedness," but when such are called upon to pay the taxes to meet it and then they cry treason to justice—robbery of the rich—and indulge in every form of indictment of the public officials who put the tax upon them; but, sir, in this hour, as I see it, I turn to my country to warn her that she prepare and beware and ignore every protest of selfishness and every terror of power. The dangerous hour is upon this Republic, and any slackness or hesitancy of action at this time in the undertaking we have entered upon may mean more than we can measure and more than a prudent public official here dares prophesy. So, Mr. President, in order that we now may surround the Government with sufficient force, and remove the burden and prevent the agony that may paralyze the splendid initiative of patriotism of these sacrificing volunteers, I move, sir, that the amalgamation to which I refer shall be accepted as a substitute, embodying the virtues of both amendments, that it may give opportunity to obtain the great service of the truly patriotic soldiers of sublime America.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will send up the amendment to the desk.

Mr. LEWIS. I will a little later, when it will not disturb the debate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, eloquence and rhetoric are very beautiful things. Under certain circumstances, when men have time, they are very sacred things. They add to the æsthetics of life; they add much to its enjoyment; but eloquence and rhetoric, whether they come in monotones of thunder imitation or in tremolo voice, do not destroy facts, and unless they are in strict accord with the facts they may uncertainly add to the beauty and festivity of life but not at all to sound and truthful conclusions. That sort of eloquence and rhetoric, whether coming in the one way, designated and illustrated, or the other, which sound in real terms of compensation, while touching the strings of the harp in apparent words of patriotism, do not very strongly appeal to me; it never has in all my life; and that sort of patriotism that wants permission to be patriotic without sacrifice never appealed to me. A man can not be patriotic and receive compensation for his patriotism any more than a boy can eat his cake and keep his cake both at the same time.

The United States Government and the people of the United States are now probably faced with war. The question is, How shall the national legislative body meet it with the greatest economy to the people and without injustice to those who serve the country during the war; how shall we meet it economically, without injustice, and with the least hardship?

Mr. President, if a country can never meet an enemy without first making full compensation to those who bear muskets while meeting the enemy, then no country could ever defend itself at all. The patriotism that sounds in terms of compensation is not patriotism at all; it is only some sort of superficiality that renders itself vociferous, or else some sort of vociferousness that sounds in superficiality.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Does the Senator believe, therefore, that all wars must be rich men's quarrels and poor men's fights?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Ah, Mr. President, if they were, then they would sound in compensation sure enough—compensation to come after; compensation to come then; but I say, Mr. President, that when you talk about compensation for patriotic service on land or on sea when your country is involved, compensation for the time lost, compensation for youth gone, compensation for the suffering of the soldier or the sailor, compensation for the suffering of his widow and his children, compensation for the retardation of the education of his children, compensation for the lack of the money that he might have made in private life, you are merely vociferating about patriotism; you are merely undertaking to eat your cake and keep your cake both; and no people can do that any more than any boy can do it; and I say that no country could ever have defended itself under such circumstances.

Had that idea been in the mind of southern men and southern women, there would have been no war for southern independence; had that idea been in the minds of northern men and northern women, there would have been no war for the preservation of the Union; had that idea been in the minds of the American colonists, they would have measured up the cost of the stamp tax and the tea tax and would all have gone home, and, meeting the next day, would have said, "We have found that if we should fight for American independence there would be no great probability of our being duly compensated." The man who goes out and exclaims, "My country, right or wrong, but still my country," and then in the next breath says, "But my country must give me compensation," is a one-legged patriot. He will fall down, because he has nothing but one leg to walk on when he is called upon to do that which patriotism really demands; that is, render self-sacrifice, offer self-immolation, say, "Here I am, my country; take me without price." That is what the noblest soldiers in all the world—Confederate soldiers, French Revolutionary soldiers, American Revolutionary soldiers, Boer soldiers, Netherland soldiers fighting against Spain—said.

One of the Senators said to-day that "a man would be charged with cowardice" if he made the excuse at the War Department that he could not go at that time or ought not to be sent because he had a wife and children dependent upon him, and his first duty under the circumstances was to them. Mr. President, every physical coward is not a moral coward, but every moral coward in this world when he is by himself and nobody else is looking at him is a physical coward. A man who had a family dependent upon him, and the law provided the conditions under which that fact might be established, who would hesitate about making the statement or the claim because he is afraid somebody else would call him a coward would be a moral coward. I care not who thinks I am a coward; you care not who thinks you are, except that I do not want to think myself one and you do not want to think yourself one.

Speaking for myself, were my condition such and I were a member of the National Guard and the truth was that I would have to leave a dependent family—and remember that this provision of honorable discharge is only applicable in the case of a dependent family—in order to go out and serve the country, I would have no hesitation in the world about claiming the exemption, and I would have a right to claim it, because in this country we could to-morrow raise an army of 3,000,000 men without family between 18 and 30 years of age, without families and without dependents. Great Britain did not call out her married men, or did not draft them until she had been at war for the very life of the people some 18 months; and she acted wisely in not doing so. You do not go out and destroy the full forest trees if you are a forester, you merely thin out the saplings. I do not mean by that that war should be carried on by boys, but I do mean that the men who should go to the service of their country first are the men who have nobody dependent upon them except themselves. I do mean that the rule of enlistment in the Regular Army is a wise one, because we have concluded that we could get all the soldiers in the Regular Army that we really needed without having married men in the Regular Army. There is another reason that justifies the rule, and that is that if unfortunately the soldier dies in the service or is killed, there shall not come upon the Treasury the burden of pensions for his widow and his dependent children.

So far as I am concerned, I would rather see the provision made that no man should enlist in the National Guard as a private except upon the terms under which he enlists in the Regular Army, but the National Legislature can not control that; that is a matter for the States, and we have got to meet the question as we find it right now.

Now, how are you going to meet it? Are you going to meet it with a rule of legislation manufactured in order to satisfy the man who is afraid that somebody will think he is a coward, who is afraid of the "scoffs" and "scorns," as some Senator has said, that may surround him? What does a brave, patient, patriotic man care about "the scoffs and scorns" of foes? Or are you going to meet it with an eye single to the welfare of the Republic and the defense of the Republic? I say, we must meet it with an eye single to the welfare of the Republic and the defense of the Republic, and, as a part of the defense of the Republic, the defense of the Treasury.

I do not know how others may feel; I never thought myself born to be a soldier, and never had any great ambition to go soldiering; but if I wanted to couple with a pretense of soldiering in defense of my country an ulterior purpose of being "compensated," I would have more contempt for myself than I have ever had in all my life; and sometimes my self-contempt has been exceedingly severe.

"Oh," some one says, "the women would not let the men make this excuse." There are very few women who are moral cowards, and, so far as their making an excuse for the husband or father or brother is concerned, I never heard of their being lacking at the proper time. With more fortitude than men, with more patience than men, possessing their peculiar sex virtues, standing more suffering than men without complaint, women as a rule are not moral cowards.

Now, Mr. President, as to whether married men should be called into the service or not, depends, in my opinion, upon the gravity of the situation. During the War between the States married men were called into the service and were drafted upon both sides when the situation had reached that crisis that made it necessary. As some Senator said this morning, the Confederacy "robbed the cradle and the grave" and the North took everything it could, whether by draft or by bounty; but the man who served in the North because of bounty—there was none of that in the South, because the Confederacy had nothing to "bounty" with—but a man who served in the North because of a bounty never enjoyed quite the respect of his fellow soldiers.

The man who went into the Army after he had first found that he was going to be "compensated" never stood very high with the other men who served with him; and the fellows who came into Castle Garden and were enlisted the morning after for $13 and rations never stood very high with the other men who served with them.

One Senator said this morning that if we allowed the Senate provision to stand we would lose 15 per cent, and another said we would lose 25 per cent, of the personnel of the National Guard. Mr. President, even upon the supposition that every man entitled to claim exemption would make such a claim, even upon the supposition that there is not a man with dependent wife and children whose wife and children are not willing to stand their part of the common sacrifice, I challenge those percentages. But whether they be true or not, I will undertake to say that not 2 per cent of the personnel of the National Guard will ever apply for exemption under this clause—not because they are moral cowards and afraid to claim it if entitled to it or afraid of "the scoffs and scorn" of the unthinking, but because they do not want to claim it, because they want to go, and because their wives do not want to claim it, but because they want their men to go. They have the temperament that constitutes men who do want to go.

If they had not had it, as a rule, they never would have volunteered originally in the National Guard; and all this talk about their being drafted is "prunes and prunella." They volunteered merely in the National Guard. The only difference between the ordinary volunteer in the ordinary volunteer army and the National Guard is that one volunteered individually and the other volunteered for the Federal service by organization. But each originally volunteered individually, and when the man volunteered in the National Guard he knew that one of the consequences was that he might be called into the Federal service, and he knew that under the Constitution of his country certain conditions might arise to call him into Federal service—the condition of invasion or insurrection or inability of the Executive otherwise to execute the laws. The constitutional language I do not recall verbally just at this moment, but you all know it. He volunteered. He is proud of the fact that he did volunteer. He will undertake somehow to see that his wife and children will be taken care of; or, if he finds he can not do that, he will go bravely up with moral courage and will say, "I am as sorry as I can be, but I can not do it."

"The wife and children have the first claim upon me. I must take care of them. I regret it more than the Government can regret it."

How about the other man? Suppose he comes to me or you and says: "I want $50 a month for my wife and my children, if I go." He goes, if a patriot, to do what? Not to please himself, not to take a pleasure trip, not for a jaunt, not for any private benefit, but to defend the honor of his country and his own honor as a part of it. Suppose he comes to us and says: "But if you don't give me $50 a month for my wife and children I can not and will not enlist." These National Guardsmen are of two classes. One class of them does not want you to give $50 a month to his wife and children—that is, to himself—and the other class is composed of the fellows who do. This attempt to make a distinction between the soldier and his wife and children is superficial. I will agree with any man to-morrow to live on $50 a month if you will agree to take care of my wife and children properly, and I can and will do it very well, dress as well as I do now, eat as much as I do now, and smoke as good cigars as I do now, and that is not saying much. The man who attempts to make a distinction between a man and his family is "dividing those whom God hath joined together." Of course the compensation accrues to him, because it accrues to those who otherwise must procure their subsistence from him.

They are divided, I say, into two classes. In one class is the man who says, "I do not want your $50; I want my patriotism to be as pure and as unsuspected as the icicles that hang from Diana's Temple. I want no son or grandson of mine ever to suspect that I fought for money"—the man who would stand as my old grandmother did when they came to her and told her that she was entitled to a pension because her deceased husband had been an officer in the Mexican War. She turned around with indignation and said, "I will have you to know, Maj. Pickett, that Capt. Sharp did not fight for money."

That is one class; but suppose the other fellow comes and says, "I want it." What is your answer to him, as national legislators? I will tell you what mine is. I will say to him, "We will have no great trouble in getting soldiers enough for this particular war. If you feel that way about it, it is better for you and it is better for the Government and the people of the United States both that you should go home and stay there and take care of your family. It is better for you, because you might miss certain opportunities to improve your present wage while you are gone."

"It is better for the United States Government, because we can get about four soldiers for the price that you want to charge the Treasury—certainly three and a half soldiers, anyhow—and we think we can get those three or four men just as good as you are, and perhaps better; just as useful as you are, and perhaps more so; just as brave as you are, and perhaps braver. Your going home and staying at home will be a good thing for both of us. We not only can get three equally good or better soldiers in your place at the price you want to levy upon the Treasury, but if you should happen to be killed in the service, we would have to pension your wife and children; and if the other three soldiers who are perfectly willing to take your place and do the fighting should happen to die in battle we will not have to pension their wives and their children, because they will have none, whatever other pensions we may have to pay."

There might be a mother in both cases.

What is the plain, common sense of it? Not efflorescent and sophomoric eloquence, not an appeal to the sentimentalism of patriotism, but an appeal to the common sense of patriotism. It is this: We have a task to meet, a war to fight. We want to do it at the least expense to the people, with the most efficient instruments that we can get, and without injustice to those who do the fighting. Now, how can we manage it?

Why, the Senate provision does it. It says to each man with a family dependent upon him: "By merely coming up and stating that fact, and establishing it to be true, you can go on home. We agree with you that that is where your first duty leads you; that in a war of this slight gravity you are not needed; that in a war of this gravity you probably never will be called upon. If you have a wife and children, or a wife and child even, or a wife alone, and she or they are dependent upon you, your country has not reached that crisis which calls upon your country to make that wife or those children suffer. We can carry this war on without it, and without you and without the charge that you threaten to make on the Treasury."

Oh, but somebody says, "Then why not just provide in the bill that men with families shall not be mustered in?" I will tell you why not. Suppose I were in that fix and had a right to be discharged, but did not want to be discharged and my wife did not want me to be discharged—and you can wager your existence that if the circumstances were such that I did not want it she would be braver and more patriotic than I, or equally so, at any rate, and she would not want it, either. Speaking for the southern women, at any rate, there never was one of them that held son or brother or father back from risking his life when the crisis was grave enough, when the situation demanded it, and when the father, husband, brother, or son ought to have met it. In fact, I heard an old Confederate soldier once illustrate it very well. I said to him, "I see how you boys kept fighting after Gettysburg; I see how you kept it up after Vicksburg; but after Nashville and the retreat of Hood's army did you not know you were whipped?" He said, "Yes; everyone that had any sense knew it." I said, "Well, why did you keep on?" He said, "Well, we were afraid to quit." I said, "Afraid of what?" He said, "Afraid of the women, unless we were able to go home and convince them that we had fought the fight to a frazzle"; because the southern cause from the standpoint at that time, in the South's contemplation of it, was a woman's cause. It was the fear that the conditions that had prevailed in San Domingo and Haiti after negro emancipation might possibly prevail in the South.

So I have no fear of that. The women will be true. One of the Senators said this morning that we had provided in this bill that we would mark opposite the name of any man "honorably discharged because he wanted to quit." The answer to that is that the Senate provision does nothing of the sort. The provision says that if a man's condition is a given condition, and if he claims exemption because of it, the rule is laid down that he is to be discharged, not whenever he wants to, not if he wants to, not because he wants to, but because certain conditions exist; and those conditions are sufficiently detailed in the Senate resolution itself.

Somebody says, "Oh, well, the European nations have passed bills to take care of the dependent families there." Why, my friends, what must be the self-torturing incapacity of the intellect of a man who would compare these two things! Fighting in Europe for their very existence, all of them—not their existence perhaps in every case as separate nationalities, but for the existence of their respective cultures, of their respective predominances, their especial civilizations, every one of them; and what are the armies over there? What are we fighting for here? Self-existence? No. National hegemony? No; simply for peace on the border. What are the armies over there? Conscripts, every man. What is the Army that we want to use in a Mexican War if we have it? Volunteers, every man, whether in the Regular Army where we receive nobody but volunteers, or in the Volunteer Army where nobody needs to come who does not wish to go, or in the National Guard where the volunteering is done by organizations called into the Federal service and individually originally, when enlisted in the State service.

When you make a man go, when you make every able-bodied man go, as Germany and France do, then it rests upon your shoulders to see to it, not that the man is "compensated," but that his wife and his children shall not starve while he is gone. But there is not a European nation to-day that would not be paralyzed in its energies by the contemplation of the stupendous idea of paying $50 a month to each soldier's family. All that even France, the most democratic country in the world, is trying to do, is to give the women and children food, clothing, and shelter.

I feel apologetic about taking up the time of the Senate. I feel like all of us have done it, but I am going to go just one little bit further.

A good deal of fun has been made of the men who thought that the world had become too civilized to go to war without arbitration and without attempting, at any rate, to bring about a peaceable settlement by some judicial means. The President of the United States has been criticized because he once entertained those views and now has been disabused of them. I want to take my full share of it. I frankly thought that this world was at least 150 years more nearly civilized than I have found that it is to-day. It was a mistake of fact upon the part of many of us. I could not have been persuaded until they actually occurred that the things which have taken place could take place in the beginning of the twentieth century, upon the idle pretext of the assassination by a half maniac of an Austrian archduke. But that was the pretext. I would not have believed that if the Servian Government had offered to leave the question at issue to arbitration or to The Hague court any country would have dared, no matter how strong a navy and army it had, in the face of what I thought was the civilized public opinion of the world, to cast the proposition aside contemptuously.

I could not have been persuaded that when the Czar of Russia later on offered to have the European powers mediatize in conference, or have the matter go to The Hague, or have it settled by arbitrators appointed by the neutral powers, that that proposition would have been overlooked and no attention paid to it. As far as I am individually concerned, the effect upon my entire mental, intellectual machinery of what has happened in Europe has made me doubt my own sanity. I did not believe that it could have occurred; and sometimes it seems to me as if I were an inmate of an insane asylum, and had been persuaded that it occurred, when really and surely it could not have occurred and had not occurred.

The demand on Servia and the invasion of Belgium—helpless and unoffending—"made a Christian" of me as far as the necessity of preparedness goes. I know that if Germany and Austria and Turkey and Bulgaria—all militaristic powers—succeed in this war that within two to five years we must defend the Monroe doctrine in Brazil and perhaps even, though not certainly, in Mexico.

I want to take my full share of all the inconsistency there may be about it. I have helped to teach, because I believed it, that the great world wars were over; and I do not understand now how this one came about, nor do you, nor does anybody else. But, my friends, we need not think that for that reason all that we dream and all that we preached was idle and useless. The "parliament of man," the "federation of the world," and all that, and the time when "swords will be beaten into plowshares" is coming. Prophets and seers have prophesied it; poets have sung it; and just because you and I are not as far along on the pathway from a crude civilization to a high point of enlightenment as we thought we were is no reason to suppose that that goal can never be reached.

We have witnessed one thing that we ought to remember, that the highest possible degree of general intellectual culture sometimes carries with it no moral culture at all. That is one of the mistakes that a lot of us have made that will in due time be corrected; but all of that is something irrelevant to what is going on now. What is the issue? Mexican border; troops of American soldiers fired upon in ambush; two American border towns invaded; troops upon Mexican soil by permission of the de facto Mexican government with a view to putting an end to the brigandage of enemies of both countries and of capturing the chief brigand; then a total change of front; no assistance by the Mexican de facto government in doing what we were permitted by it to enter Mexico in order to do; every obstruction cast in our way; and, finally, the insolent order sent that "If you move east or west or south, or in any direction except north, you shall receive punishment." Our Government has sent back word that we can not quite agree not to move east or west or south if we find it important for our welfare and protection to do so, and we have demanded a plain diplomatic statement of the position which the Mexican government is going to take.

All Europe seems to be insane, and it is therefore very little wonder that Carranza seems to be insane, too; but he seems to be insanely inviting upon the head of the helpless, defenseless, ignorant people of his own country a punishment the gravity of which he does not seem to understand. He seems to think that these United States, with their 100,000,000 of people, are afraid of him. We must go to Mexico in the situation I have described. Now, how are you going, as man of common sense in real patriotism, not the mere sentimentalism of patriotism? Why, go with the best machine you can extemporize, which costs the least now and which will cost the least hereafter, without injustice to the man who bears the musket or wears the shoulder straps, the man on the quarter-deck or the man at the gun. That is what patriotism demands. That is its highest task. That is its only task. If a man comes to me and says: "I can not serve without $50 a month for my wife and children," my reply is: "I can get three soldiers just as good as you are who will, all together, not cost $50 a month, and it is better for you and better for the Government, too, if that is what you charge for your service, for you to stay at home. We do not need you particularly, anyhow."

Mr. REED. Mr. President, this debate has taken a strange form and wandered far afield. I want to state the question as I understand it. In part I shall be obliged to repeat what I said this morning.

This is the situation: The National Guard was organized at a time of profound peace, when the world was listening to the preachment, to which the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] so eloquently referred, that war would be no more; when the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] was mistaken and a good many other wise men were mistaken. Some of the young men of our country held a different view. They believed that war might come. They believed that some preparation was necessary. The stern logic of events has demonstrated that they were wiser in their day and generation than some of the great men of the land. They enlisted to prepare themselves to serve their country if the hour of need should come. Some of them were married when they enlisted. Some of them have married since they enlisted. The hour has come when their services are needed. They are going to the front to a man. A telegram that I received three or four days ago from the commander of the National Guard of my State said that without exception his men were enlisting and taking the new form of oath. A little later a telegram advised me that the men had, within a few hours' time, mobilized in their armories, and that in a few hours more they would be ready to meet at the general mobilization camp of the State.

These men did not enlist for money in the first place, and they are not asking for money now. To impute such a motive to them is to challenge their patriotism, and, from a position of absolute safety, to make a cowardly assault upon brave men who are preparing for a great sacrifice.

The question that is presented to this Congress is: "These men having been willing to make the sacrifice, these men being now prepared, these men being now in actual march to the front, shall the Congress of the United States permit their wives and children at home to suffer? That is the whole question.

The Senator from Mississippi referred ironically to the eloquent Senator from Illinois, and said that eloquence might adorn, but that if it did not accord with the facts it was of no value. If I were inclined to reply in similar vein I might say that common scolding that is not in accord with the facts or logic does not even serve the purpose of adornment. The whole question here is, Shall we permit the dependent wives and children of men who are doing more than we are doing to suffer? That is all. State it a hundred times and in a hundred ways, and you come back to that one question: "Shall this great, rich Government permit the wife or the child of a brave man who has marched to the front to go hungry while the soldier husband and father interposes his breast between the bullets of the enemy and the people at home? That is the question we are considering, and no amount of words, no volume of sneers will obscure the fact.

The insinuation that any man went into the guard or will go into it for money can not change the question. But I remark in passing that such a sentiment is unworthy to be listened to on this floor.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I want to ask the Senator a question in regard to section 1, because the necessity of section 1 will have much to do with the casting of my vote regardless of what amendments may go in. What is the occasion, as a legal proposition, of the passage of section 1? What is sought to be accomplished by it? Is there an emergency? Is there a hiatus in the law which must be covered by this section so that the President may do what it seems desirable to do at this time?

Mr. REED. In my judgment it is quite probable that the President possesses the authority now, but of course all doubt should be removed. I did not draw this measure. I am not on the committee. I have not given that particular legal question any special study. My opinion would be what the Senator and I have often referred to as a horseback opinion, which is generally not very valuable.

But, Mr. President, I repeat, the only question is this: Shall the Government permit the wife and the child or children of a soldier who is willing to risk his life for his country to starve while he fights? We need not go to other countries for a precedent. We need not speak of the horrors of the late Civil War, when the South yielded the last dollar of her money, and almost the last drop of her blood, and when the North felt in every home the suffering and sacrifice that had to be made. We are presented with the question of probably 100,000 out of 100,000,000 going into the Mexican country, or at least to our borders, sacrificing their positions, sacrificing their time, sacrificing their health, sacrificing their lives or their good right arms or their legs or their eyes or their health. We stand by and see that done, and we say, "Brave boys! Brave boys all! We will let your wives and children starve while you fight for us."

That is the argument of a man who thinks more of a dollar than he does of patriotism. That is the argument of one who would rather appeal to the taxpayer of the country and be known as an economist than the argument of a man who loves his country and is willing to take his share of its burdens.

I said this morning, and I repeat, we all owe the same duty. It is as much our duty to go into the war as it is the duty of those who are going. Some of us are too old, some of us are too inefficient, some of us may lack the courage, although I hope that is not true of a Member of Congress. Some of us may be of more use where we are. But should we not be willing in response to that same patriotism which is being manifested by the soldier who has gone to the front, should we not in response to that same call of duty be willing to pay a few miserable dirty dollars into the Treasury in order that the soldier's wife and children should not suffer? That is all.

Does anybody here balance the dollars of the Government against the starvation of a soldier's wife or baby? If he does, let him have the glory. I am not afraid of pension rolls. I am afraid of my country teaching its young men that there are only a few who are to suffer, that there is a great selfish body of the people who will not look after those who fight the battles for the country's preservation. I am afraid of teaching the young men of the country such a lesson as that. Of course, it is highly creditable to a soldier to go to the front. It is perhaps even more creditable if he goes to the front in response to his country's call, though wife and children may suffer. It may be a manifestation of a higher order of patriotism; but what of the patriot who stays at home, who risks neither life nor limb nor blood, and whose patriotic zeal does not rise to the point of contributing a few dollars to the wife or the child of the man who is at the front? That is the question we have to settle.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Question!

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not know what the question is. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] stated that he had an amalgamation to present, but it was not sent to the desk. The Chair is not inclined to take advantage of the Senator from Illinois, if he can get the proposition at the desk.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think the pending amendment is the amendment of the committee to section 2.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is not mistaken, surely, in the statement of the Senator from Illinois that he proposed to present what is called an amalgamation, containing section 2 of the original joint resolution and the amendment of the committee and to propose it as a substitute for the committee amendment.

Mr. LEWIS. The Vice President correctly apprehends my purpose. I tender it now in rather a ragged form, a substitute, in order to save trouble. I will state that it restores the section stricken out by the committee and yet leaves the other section the committee has put in. The Senator from Maryland now may have a division.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The amendment as sent up proposes to include the words proposed to be stricken out by the committee in the amendment and also the following:

That the sum of $2,000,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe——

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I ask that the Secretary strike out the words "Secretary of War" and let it read "Secretary of the Interior." I think the matter should be remitted to the Pension Department.

The SECRETARY (reading)—

To be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, for the purpose of maintaining at a cost of not more than $50 per month, the family of each enlisted man of the National Guard called or drafted into the service of the United States until his discharge therefrom, which family, during the term of service of said enlisted man, has no other income, except his pay, adequate for the support of said family; and the word "family" shall include wife, dependent mothers, fathers, and sisters, as well as brothers under the age of 14 years. That this section shall also apply to all the members of the Regular Army in like circumstances as provided for members of the National Guard during the period only of actual hostilities.

Mr. LEWIS. The remaining section, it is understood, is the one tendered by the committee.

The SECRETARY. It also includes the words proposed to be inserted by the committee, with a slight amendment after the words "National Guard," at the end of line 3, insert "or member of the Regular Army," so as to read:

That when any member of the National Guard or member of the Regular Army or the Organized Militia of any of the States, Territories, or the District of Columbia—

And so forth.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, it seems to me that the parliamentary way to get at this situation would be this. The Military Committee reports the House joint resolution to the Senate with the proposal to strike out section 2. That is the first proposition before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. To strike out and insert; they are together.

Mr. STONE. With all due deference to the Chair, the proposition is entirely different. The motion made by the committee is to strike out section 2. It is not stated to strike out and insert, but to strike out. Then the committee proposes an amendment to the joint resolution on its own account of an entirely different character. It would seem to me that section 2 itself might be perfected before the Senate votes upon striking it out; in other words, that the proper motion would be to add to section 2 what the Senate committee proposes, or whatever the Senator from Illinois or any other Senator may propose as an amendment to section 2 of the joint resolution as it came from the House.

The vote then would be, of course, upon the amendment to section 2 as it came from the House, and if amendments are made to it, then we vote whether we will adopt that amendment or not; and if no amendments are made to it by the Senate, then the question recurs on the proposition to strike it out.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is the first time that a contention of that kind has been made since the present occupant of the chair has been here. There never has been a doubt before when a section was stricken out and the same section followed afterwards that that was a committee amendment which involved the striking out and inserting. It is not material to the Chair how this question may go, but it has always been treated as a motion to strike out and insert.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think that is the purpose of the committee amendment; it is proposed to strike out section 2 and insert section 2.

Mr. WARREN. Exactly, under the same number.

Mr. FLETCHER. Under the same number, and that question is not divisible.

Mr. WARREN. It is proposed to strike out section 2 and insert another section 2.

Mr. FLETCHER. That question, I say, under the rule is not divisible.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Just let the Chair rule. The Chair rules that it is a motion to strike out and to insert. The Chair also rules that the Senator from Illinois has presented an amendment to the part proposed to be stricken out which is first in order, and also has proposed an amendment to the part proposed to be inserted which will be secondly in order. The first amendment is to the part that is proposed to be stricken out. That will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out "$1,000,000" in line 14 and to insert in lieu "$2,000,000." It is proposed to strike out the words "Secretary of War" where it appears in lines 12 and 13 in the House print and in lines 16 and 17 of the Senate print and to insert in lieu "the Secretary of the Interior." It is proposed, after the words "14 years," at the end of line 2 on page 3, to insert:

And this section shall also apply to all members of the Regular Army in like circumstances as provided for members of the National Guard during the period only of actual hostilities.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, what is the exact point at issue in the pending controversy? That issue ought to be stripped of all obscurity and of all confusion. I wish that I could make that point, that issue, as luminous as the sun at noontide.

I do not agree with the definition of this issue which has just been presented by the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. I shall not vie with that Senator in the description of those pathetic scenes which characterize the parting of the soldier with his family, when the hero sent to the front is torn from the arms of his loving wife and his weeping children. No man in the Senate is equal to that Senator in the delineation of the feelings of the human heart, whether they be the fiery passions that impel to war or the tender sentiments of family affection. No man upon this floor and no one within the galleries can listen to those descriptions without experiencing emotions of sympathy and of sorrow.

While I can not compete with the Senator in the description of these touching scenes, I will join with him and with others in the prevention of such tragic scenes.

The Senator states this to be the issue: If a soldier is at the front imperiling his life in defense of his Nation's honor, shall we suffer his family to starve? Mr. President, that is not the issue as I conceive it to be. I know of no alchemy by which you can convert into cash the tears of a wife or widow. I do not know how to translate the orphan's tears into the coin of the realm. I do not know the market price of a sigh or a sob. All the skill of modern accounting has not yet learned how to value "the voice of lamentation" that was heard of old in Roma. There seems to be those who are the masters of this occult art. There are those who have made this translation, who have made this measurement, and seemed to find that the tears of a wife and of the children are worth $50 a month—$1.66⅔ per diem. That is the estimate placed by some Senators on the tenderest emotions of the human heart.

Sir, I think that an unfit and unfair appraisement of these sentiments and of these attachments. Those who support the House joint resolution say to the wife and the children: "Send the husband and the father to the front, and we will compensate your sorrow at the rate of $50 per month." Is that a fit appraisement? Those who support the Senate substitute say to the wife, and say to the children: "Instead of tearing from your bosom your husband and your father, we will permit him to remain at home. Your supporter and your defender by nature and by the law shall remain in his home; shall discharge his obligations to his family; and we will not make the vain effort to compensate your tears and your sorrows at the rate of one dollar and sixty-six and two-thirds cents a day."

Mr. President, if the Senate substitute prevails, these touching and pathetic scenes will not be enacted in this land; will not be—need not be enacted. We will obviate these tragedies. If the House joint resolution prevails, if the father and the husband go to the front and fall in battle, the curse of the widow and the orphan will be upon the supporters of the House joint resolution, and they will bless the names of those who sought to exempt their fathers and their husbands from a tragic death upon the field of battle. That is the point in this controversy—if you ask whether the family of the soldier at the front shall be permitted to starve. Everybody answers that question in the negative. The supporters of the House resolution answer it by saying: "No; instead of starving you we fling open the doors of the Treasury and give you the generous largess of $50 a month to reimburse you for your privations and for your sorrows." The supporters of the Senate proposition say: "No; the family of the soldier shall not starve; he shall not under existing circumstances be required to make the sacrifice; he shall be permitted to remain at home in the discharge of his civic and domestic obligations, and others who have no such obligations, and who are willing and anxious to die for their country; who would seek for glory upon the field of battle, as the bridegroom seeks his bride, shall be permitted to go, and if, by evil chance, they should fall upon the field of battle, they have no widows and orphans to bewail their untimely taking off.

We do not propose to manufacture widows; we do not propose to manufacture orphans by requiring fathers and husbands to go to the front in this emergency. We will permit them to remain at home and allow others to achieve the glories that may be incident to the threatened war. That is the point at issue in the controversy; and that is the only point.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] defended the House provision on the ground that these soldiers were being drafted, were being torn from their homes by the strong and irresistible arm of the Government; that they were not volunteers; that they were not tendering their lives in their country's service out of the inspiration of patriotism, but that they were being dragged, were being drafted into the service. For the first time, at least in the history of American warfare, the conscript has been dignified, has been exalted above the volunteer.

The valor of the American volunteer has been celebrated in story and in song. Every battle field of this Republic has been baptized with his sacred blood. I use the Senator's language; but I do not accept the Senator's language as my own. His argument was answered; it was demolished by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. LEE], who felt the sting implied in the word "draft," and characterized these young men as volunteers willing to go, willing to die, and as not waiting for conscription.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], in the earlier part of his most eloquent address, declared that the House provision was necessary to induce men to enlist in the Army in the Nation's defense on account of the neglect and the treatment which they had experienced in former wars. During the last part of his address he declared that the major number to be affected by this resolution as it passed the other House had already been mustered in; that it was too late for them to plead a dependent family. I leave the Senator's arguments to answer themselves.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. LEE] and one other Senator—I have forgotten whom—has exemplified a most refined species of sensibility, a sensibility that would be shocked to say with common frankness and with common honesty, "I have a family dependent upon my services and upon my earnings and therefore seek to be excused from the service." They say that would be shocking, would be embarrassing, would be a stultification, would deserve to be characterized as cowardice or treason; and yet, with refined sensibility, these Senators would permit these sensitive soldiers to make the same declaration, that their families were dependent, and should therefore become a charge upon the Public Treasury; that they should become pensioners upon the public bounty; parasites, if you please, upon the Nation's generosity.

You can not standardize human sensibilities, and I do not know what sort of sensitiveness it is that would be willing to accept a pension from the public purse and yet would blush to own lack of fortune—which is not yet a disgrace in this Republic—who would blush to own that upon them and upon their labors depended a family, a wife and a number of helpless children. I do not know what sort of heroism a man who has not the courage to say that would exhibit upon the embattled field.

Mr. President, I shall not argue the question of economy, the question of expenditure, further than to remind the Senate that this precedent will return to plague us all. There are no tracks leading out of the Pension Office. I trust the Senate substitute will prevail. I do not doubt the generosity of the American people. They have dealt with lavish generosity with their defenders in the past; they will not falter in their gratitude in the years that are to come.

This question may well be remitted to the future, and I do not know of a greater service that one of these soldiers charged with a dependent family could render his country than, instead of consenting for his family to receive $50 a month, to retire from the service and permit the Government, with the same money, to enlist and compensate three or four soldiers to fight in his stead.

I have the highest admiration for the man who is willing, notwithstanding family ties, to defend the Nation in foreign fields; yet it would be an infinitely greater service to the country if he would withdraw from the Army, if he would refrain from the liability of imposing upon the public a dependent widow and children, and would permit the money to be expended in the payment of three or four soldiers fighting in his place. This might, indeed, foreclose the paths of martial glory, yet it would be better for the soldier, better for his family, better for his wife and children, better for his possible widow and orphans, better for the Public Treasury, better for the national defense, better for this Republic, which shall never want defenders so long as valor is esteemed a virtue and so long as heroism is honored among the sons of men.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Illinois to the part proposed by the committee to be stricken out.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, let the amendment to the amendment be stated in full.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the entire amendment.

The SECRETARY. In the part proposed to be stricken out, on page 2, line 14, it is proposed to strike out "$1,000,000" and in lieu thereof to insert "$2,000,000"; in lines 16 and 17, to strike out the words "Secretary of War" and insert the words "Secretary of the Interior"; and, after the word "years," in line 2, on page 3, to insert "and this section shall also apply to all members of the Regular Army in like circumstances, as provided for members of the National Guard during the period only of actual hostilities."

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I should like to have the section read as proposed to be amended. It is not understood by Senators about me that I also include a provision that the committee has reported.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has tried to make the parliamentary situation understood. There is a motion to strike out and to insert. The Senator from Illinois can not amend both at the same time. The first question is on the amendment to the part to be stricken out, and that amendment has been stated.

Mr. STONE. I desire to ask a question. It is proposed to strike out "$1,000,000" in the first line of section 2 of the House bill and insert "$2,000,000" and, in lines 16 and 17, to strike out "Secretary of War" and insert "Secretary of the Interior." At least one other amendment to that section is also proposed. My inquiry is whether it is all one amendment or whether it is divisible?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri has a right to vote on each amendment if he so desires.

Mr. STONE. Well, I desire to ask for a separate vote on the first proposition.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The first proposition will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 14 of the part stricken out it is proposed to strike out "$1,000,000" and insert "$2,000,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. STONE. I ask for no further division.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The second amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In lines 16 and 17 of the part proposed to be stricken out it is proposed to strike out "Secretary of War" and to insert in lieu thereof "Secretary of the Interior."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the next amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 2, after the words "fourteen years," it is proposed to insert:

And this section shall also apply to all members of the Regular Army in like circumstances as provided for members of the National Guard during the period only of actual hostilities.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Now the Senator from Illinois proposes an amendment to the part which the committee proposes to insert. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. After the words "National Guard," at the end of line 3, page 3, it is proposed to insert "or member of the Regular Army."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it——

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The noes have it, and the amendment to the amendment is rejected.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now recurs——

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not think the Senate understood the proposition; at least, I could not catch it in the confusion of the questions which were asked, and I should like to have it stated before the vote is announced.

The VICE PRESIDENT. All the amendments offered by the Senator from Illinois have been rejected. The question now recurs on the Senate committee amendment, which is to strike out section 2 of the House joint resolution and insert a new section 2.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I move to amend the committee amendment by adding the words "Provided further," and following them with section 2 of the House bill.

Mr. President, what that would do would be simply this: We would take the Senate committee amendment, which provides that any member of the National Guard who has a family dependent upon him and finds it necessary to stay at home may be relieved of service and stay at home, and then add the House provision as an amendment to the Senate committee amendment, so as to provide that if, instead of staying at home, he went to the front and his family were dependent and needy we would give them not more than $50 a month to take care of them.

My proposed amendment is to the committee amendment, so that it would leave the situation simply this, that those in the National Guard who have families dependent upon them, if they do not desire to go, would not be compelled to go. That is the Senate committee amendment. To that would be added the provision that those who have families dependent upon them and who did go could receive $50 a month for the support of their families.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. A parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I desire to make an inquiry. I desire to ask whether this question is divisible, whether we can in a proper parliamentary way first vote upon the amendment of the committee to strike out the House provision?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has already ruled that it is not divisible. It is a question of striking out and inserting, and there can be no separate vote on it under Rule XVIII.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I should like to say one word more about my proposed amendment, so that everybody can understand it, and then I am not going to detain the Senate for a speech.

There have been a number of suggestions that we ought not to compel these men to go to the front if their families are dependent upon them. There have been a number of suggestions that if they do go and leave families not able to care for themselves, they ought to have something from the Government for their support. The amendment which I propose at the close of the Senate committee substitute is simply to add to it the provision that if they do actually go and leave their families at home dependent and needy they can have $50 a month, or such part of it as is necessary.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. In what respect does the Senator's proposition differ from the proposition of the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It differs in this respect: The Senator from Illinois proposed to amend both section 2 as passed by the House and section 2 as reported by the Senate committee. He did not offer the House provision as an amendment to the Senate provision. The difficulty about that situation was that it left us where we should finally vote for the Senate committee amendment or substitute, with the House provision killed. We strike out the House provision and accept the Senate amendment. I have simply undertaken to tie the House provision to the Senate substitute.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat, it seems to me he merely reverses the order. As I understood, the Senator from Illinois proposed to add the amendment proposed by the Senate committee to section 2 as reported by the House, after amending the section as the House put it in. Now the Senator from Georgia simply reverses it, and proposes to add section 2 of the House bill to the amendment proposed by the Senate committee. In other words, instead of putting, as the Senator from Illinois proposed, the proposal reported by the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate as an amendment to the House proposition, the Senator would take the House proposition and attach it to that proposed by the Military Affairs Committee.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. As I understood the Chair, the Chair held that the amendments offered by the Senator from Illinois had been rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. They were.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Chair did not put an amendment by the Senator from Illinois, tying these two sections together. I understood that that was the purpose of the Senator from Illinois; and I want to say that in the amendment I offer I am simply proposing to carry out what I understood was the purpose of the Senator from Illinois; and it was because the Chair put what he said were all of the amendments offered by the Senator from Illinois, and did not put the one suggested by the Senator from Missouri, that I proposed this additional amendment. So far as I am concerned, I would just as lief it should start with the House bill, and that we should amend that by saying "And provided further," and add the Senate amendment.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think that would be a better form, Mr. President.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Just one word further. The only reason why I thought it would be better to take the Senate amendment was that it provides for releasing them, and then the House amendment takes care of them if they go. I take them in the chronological order in which they would act. For practical purposes it would be exactly the same thing; and if the Chair recognizes the fact that there is still an amendment pending from the Senator from Illinois to add "And provided further," section 2, embodying the Senator's amendment, to the section which was the House bill, then I do not offer any amendment, and desire to support the amendment of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois will state it.

Mr. LEWIS. My parliamentary inquiry is this—I seek information, and do not assume to criticize: I did not at any time hear the proposition submitted to the Senate, as was my intention, of substituting section 2 of the House for the one of the Senate and adding that to the one of the Senate touching the question of exemption on the part of the soldier. The only thing I heard was that the Vice President submitted the question of those amendments where I changed "one million" to "two million," and then gave the National Guard the benefit of this provision, which applies to the Army. But I did not hear at any time that there was submitted the proposition which it was my object to propose, namely, having the provision of the House substituted and added as an amendment to the present resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has been of the opinion that where a proposition comes before the Senate to strike out and to insert, the rules of the Senate require that the portion to be stricken out shall be first amended, and then the portion to be inserted shall be amended, and then the vote shall be had upon the question. There is not the slightest trouble about the parliamentary situation if the Senate really knows what it wants to do. That is, if the Senate wants both of these amendments in this bill, it should vote down the motion to strike out and insert, which leaves the original section in the bill, and then it is competent for any Senator to offer the amendment to the bill. There is not the least trouble in the world about it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if I understood the amendment of the Senator from Georgia it amounts to this: That if the man in the National Guard finds it to his financial interest to go on and serve, he shall go on and serve, and collect $50 a month for his family; and if he finds it not to his financial interest to go on and serve, he shall not go on and serve.

Mr. GORE. It is a pure matter of mathematics.

Mr. WILLIAMS. As suggested by the Senator from Oklahoma, it seems to be purely a matter of mathematics, at the expense of the United States Treasury and in favor of the man who is taking his choice. It seems to me that some little element of public service ought to enter into this proposition, and that providing, in the first place, that the man could retire if he wanted to upon his own application, as the Senate amendment provides, and then providing, that if he did not retire on his own application, his negative volition being as free as his affirmative volition, he should collect from the United States Treasury $50 a month, is a good deal like the old story of the Indian who told the white man that he found that the white man got turkey both ways and the Indian did not get turkey any way you put it. It seems to me that it ought to be one way or the other.

Mr. GORE. That is it—not load the dice.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If you think you want to vote to the men who have dependent families $50 a month, then the men who are not willing to make the application ought to have the $50 a month as well as the men who are willing to make it. If you are going to leave the volition not a joint volition, and not a volition in the Government, but a volition in the men, and the man is to determine it by simply consulting his commercial prospects, it seems to me that is worse than either proposition that has been presented by either side from either standpoint.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts will state it.

Mr. LODGE. It may have been covered by what the Chair just said, but I did not hear it distinctly.

The motion is to strike out and insert. The Senator from Georgia now proposes to take the portion proposed to be stricken out and add it as an amendment to the insertion. I should like to ask whether, under general parliamentary procedure and our rules, it is not necessary to decide first whether the Senate will strike out a particular paragraph containing particular language and insert another paragraph. The amendment of the Senator from Georgia can be offered in the Senate after this has been decided by the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is what the Chair intended to rule. It does not preclude the Senator from Georgia from accomplishing his purpose.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But, Mr. President, have I not the right now to offer anything I see fit as an amendment to the Senate substitute? Have we not now the right to consider, before we vote between the Senate substitute and the House provision, what we desire to add to the Senate substitute? If we desire to add to the Senate substitute all that the Senate substitute wishes to strike out, combining both, adopting both, I know of no technical parliamentary rule that should keep us from freely exercising our judgment.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, it seems to me perfectly clear that you can not, under one motion, move to strike out a paragraph and then move to insert the same paragraph. This is a motion to strike out one paragraph and insert the same paragraph. I am not speaking of the insertion moved by the committee, of course; but this is a motion to insert what the motion is to strike out. I do not think it can be done, and it produces endless confusion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The suggestion of the Senator from Georgia is not a suggestion by which he proposes to amend the part to be stricken out at all.

Mr. LODGE. No.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is not seeking to amend the part to be stricken out. He is seeking to add to the part to be stricken out that which the committee has reported shall be inserted. The rights of the Senator from Georgia are not foreclosed. If the part to be inserted is voted down, then the part to be stricken out remains in the bill, and the Senator from Georgia can then offer his amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But, Mr. President, there might be some of us who would prefer to vote for the Senate substitute unless we can retain both. If we are to have but one, we prefer the Senate substitute; but we really prefer the Senate substitute and the House provision both combined.

Now, then, I suggest another mode by which we can reach it, which I thought the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] presented before but which the Chair did not submit—to amend section 2, which it is proposed to strike out by adding "And provided further," and then adding the proposed substitute of the committee. That gives us the same thing. We certainly can amend the part proposed to be stricken out, before we vote as to whether or not we will strike it out, by adding anything we see fit.

Therefore I change my motion, and I make my motion to meet what I understand to be the ruling of the Chair. It is to add, at the close of section 2 of the House provision, "And provided further," embracing in the "Provided further" all of the Senate committee substitute.

Mr. REED. On that proposal I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, I want to see if I understand the parliamentary situation, namely, that it is proposed to strike out the House provision——

SEVERAL SENATORS. No, no!

Mr. LEE of Maryland. And to insert in lieu of that which is stricken out the Senate substitute?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Not at all.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I withdraw the inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The request for the yeas and nays has been made. Is the request seconded?

Mr. ASHURST. I call for the yeas and nays. Let us vote.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, what is the question we are voting upon?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not know.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the part proposed to be stricken out by inserting at the end thereof the following words:

And provided further, That when any member of the National Guard—

And then follows the words printed in italics on page 3, as suggested to be inserted by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. The net effect of what has been stated is that section 2 of the House joint resolution remains intact and the proposal of the committee printed on page 3 is added to it as a proviso, is it not?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is correct.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. As I understand the situation, the proposition to maintain the dependents will stand; but the most vicious portion of the Senate committee's proposition also is to stand, namely, to demoralize the National Guard army on its way to the front by giving leave to 25 per cent, if necessary, of its personnel to be honorably discharged and 50 per cent of its noncommissioned officers to be honorably discharged.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let us have a vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. LODGE. What is the question? Is this roll call on the motion of the Senator from Georgia to add?

The VICE PRESIDENT. This is on the motion of the Senator from Georgia to add to the House text section 2.

Mr. LODGE. Then we will be allowed to vote on the motion to strike out?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That will come later. Let us get through with this.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the roll be called.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BECKHAM (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT], but I understand that if he were here and at liberty to vote he would vote as I do. I vote "nay."

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey (when Mr. CHILTON's name was called). I desire to announce that the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] is paired with the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL].

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. For that reason I withhold my vote. If he were present and I had the right to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. HARDING (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. I am advised that if he were present he would vote as I would, and I therefore take the liberty of voting. I vote "nay."

Mr. HOLLIS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

I am not able to make a transfer and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. JAMES (when his name was called). I transfer the general pair I have with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] to the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH]. I have been unable to obtain a transfer and therefore can not vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] to the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Michigan was called). As stated, the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] is absent but is paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] to the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to my colleague [Mr. SMITH of South Carolina] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. BANKHEAD (when Mr. UNDERWOOD'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is absent on account of the death of his brother. I wish this announcement to stand until he returns.

Mr. LODGE (when Mr. WEEKS'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. WEEKS] is unavoidably absent. He is paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES], as has already been announced.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. I am informed by his colleague that if he were present he would vote as I am about to vote. I therefore vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] and vote "nay."

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. I was requested to announce that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] is absent and is paired with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON].

Mr. CURTIS. I was requested to announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON].

The result was announced—yeas 17, nays 58, as follows:

YEAS—17.

Ashurst	Johnson, S. Dak.	Myers	Thompson
Culberson	Kern	Pittman	Tillman

So the amendment of Mr. SMITH of Georgia to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the motion to strike out and insert.

Mr. REED. As I understand the parliamentary situation is this, and I want if I am correct to have it verified at the desk. If we now defeat the motion to strike out and substitute, the House provision will then stand, so that a vote now on the motion to strike out and substitute is in fact a vote in favor of the House proposition.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A vote "nay" is in favor of keeping the House provision in and a vote "yea" to strike it out.

Mr. LANE. Is it in order to offer an amendment to the amendment at this time?

The VICE PRESIDENT. An amendment to the amendment is in order.

Mr. LANE. Then I offer it. It will relieve these volunteers, these National Guardsmen, from any suspicion of cowardice or any reflection on them by merely striking out the words at the end of line 10, "upon his application," on page 3; and then again on line 12 there is a like application. That leaves it entirely in the hands of the Secretary of War to excuse them if they are meritorious cases, and have families dependent on them, as they do in the Regular Army.

I am perfectly willing, and I think we ought, to provide for the families in some way, or allow the soldier to stay at home and take care of his family. I know of one instance where a man is earning $75 a month, and he has a wife and two children. He goes on this excursion down into Mexico and receives $15 a month, which will not be sufficient to pay house rent for his family. That should not be the case. If he does go and puts his life at stake, his family should be taken care of at least to the extent that is necessary so that they do not suffer.

I do not know how many gentlemen here ever heard Winchester bullets whizzing around their heads. I have been out in the woods with very enthusiastic hunters, and moving in the brush, and they thought it was a catamount, a wolf, or a deer, and they sent the Winchester bullets after what they thought was the catamount, the wolf, or the deer, but it was my head. I did not like it; and I would not take a price of $500,000 for the chance if it is put on the ground of the worth of the money. The man who is shot at we ought to give consideration to.

I offer that as an amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the part proposed to be inserted by the committee, on page 3, lines 10 and 11, strike out the words "upon his own application," and, in line 12, strike out the words "upon a like application."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. As far as I may be able to do so, I am willing to accept that amendment.

Mr. OLIVER. That forces the married man out of the Army whether he wants to go or not.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It is to be under the rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of War.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I can not understand why the Senator from Pennsylvania should object to that amendment. At least the reason he gave, as I understand it, it seems to me would not apply. If those words are stricken out the application must be made by the wife or the mother or the father or other party interested, and under rules and regulations of the Secretary of War the soldiers can be discharged without application having been made by the soldier. That is the only effect of it.

Mr. LIPPITT. I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska if it would not be possible under his theory of the paragraph, as it would then stand, for the wife or the daughter to force him out of the Army without the soldier himself wanting to go?

Mr. NORRIS. No; not by any means. The Secretary of War passes on it practically under the application made.

Mr. LIPPITT. It is probable that the soldier, in case such application is made, will himself not want to go out.

Mr. NORRIS. No; the Secretary of War can take into consideration the evidence of the case. It might be that the soldier would have——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. NORRIS. Not now, until I can be heard. The Senator himself has not heard me. The soldier might be glad to get out, and yet it might be embarrassing for him to make the application himself. He may not want to do it. It seems to me that striking out this language will still permit the Secretary of War to make the rules and regulations he sees fit, and it will be still up to the Secretary of War to pass upon it. He might discharge a man where the man himself did not want to be discharged, if under all the circumstances he thought the man ought to be at home supporting his family instead of in the Army.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I have listened with a good deal of attention to the suggestions made by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] and by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], and since then I have talked with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN]. I think the entire difficulty can be obviated by changing the language of the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE], so that it shall read:

Under such application as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War.

The Senator from Oregon tells me that he is willing to change the language of the amendment so that it will read, instead of striking out the words about application:

Under such application as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War.

That will prevent a man from being discharged by an overanxious wife or an overanxious mother or an overanxious sister against his own will.

Mr. NORRIS. There might be a case where that ought to be done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment as modified.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I am quite in sympathy with the House provision. It has been debated here, and I think very properly, from a consideration of the obligation due from the Nation to the wife and the children of the enlisted man. No one has arisen to say one word in favor of the last clause of section 2, namely:

And the word "family" shall include wife, dependent mothers, fathers, and sisters, as well as brothers under the age of 14 years.

I apprehend that under that clause not 15 per cent of the guard will be embraced, but 60 per cent and 75 per cent may easily fall under its provision. I move that that language be stricken out.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Where does it begin?

Mr. WALSH. Commencing with the word "and" in line 24.

The SECRETARY. Strike out the words beginning in line 13—

And the word "family" shall include wife, dependent mothers, fathers, and sisters, as well as brothers under the age of 14 years.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Montana. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it.

Mr. REED. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. WALSH. I will state that a misapprehension arises. The Secretary read my amendment as an amendment to the Senate committee's substitute for the House provision. My amendment was addressed to the House provision commencing with the word "and" in line 24.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be again stated.

The SECRETARY. In the part proposed to be stricken out, on page 2, line 24, strike out the words:

And the word "family" shall include wife, dependent mothers, fathers, and sisters, as well as brothers under the age of 14 years.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the motion to strike out and insert.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BECKHAM (when his name was called). With the same announcement that I made on the last vote, I vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] and withhold my vote.

Mr. HARDING (when his name was called). Repeating the previous announcement of my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. HOLLIS (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. JAMES (when his name was called). I transfer my pair as upon the last roll call. I vote "nay."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH]. I have undertaken to ascertain what his vote would be if he were present, but I have not been able to do so. I therefore feel bound by my pair. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay"; but, under the circumstances, I can not vote.

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). Making the same announcement of the transfer of my pair as previously, I vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a standing pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. Understanding that if he were present he would vote "yea," I therefore vote "yea," considering myself released from the pair.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. I was requested to announce the pair of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON].

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] and vote "yea."

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I desire again to announce the pair existing between the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL].

Mr. REED. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and vote "nay."

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I have been requested to announce the pair existing between the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF].

The result was announced—yeas 45, nays 30, as follows:

YEAS—45.

So the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The next amendment proposed by the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 3, page 3, line 24, it is proposed, after the words "pursuant to," to strike out "section 1" and to insert "the provisions," so as to read: "Pursuant to the provisions of this joint resolution."

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The next amendment proposed by the Committee on Military Affairs will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 4, page 4, line 15, after the word "Senate," it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That vacancies incident to the appointment of officers of the Regular Army to the positions in the drafted forces may be filled under the provisions of section 8 of the act of April 25, 1914.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, in section 5, page 5, line 16, after the word "this" to strike out "article," and insert "resolution," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That whenever in time of war or public danger or during the emergency declared in section 1 of this resolution, two or more officers of the same grade are on duty in the same field, department, or command, or organizations thereof, the President may assign the command of the forces of such field, department, or command, or of any organization thereof, without regard to seniority of rank in the same grade. In the absence of such assignment by the President, officers of the same grade shall rank and have precedence in the following order without regard to date of rank or commission as between officers of different classes, namely: First, officers of the Regular Army and officers of the Marine Corps detached for service with the Army by order of the President; second, officers of forces drafted into the military service of the United States: Provided, That officers of the Regular Army holding commissions in forces drafted into the service of the United States shall rank and have precedence under said commissions as if they were commissioned in the Regular Army; but the rank of officers of the Regular Army under their commissions in the forces drafted into the service of the United States shall not for the purpose of this resolution be held to antedate muster or draft into the service of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution is still before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and is open to further amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I hesitate to offer amendments at this hour in the evening, but I feel impelled to offer two or three amendments to section 1 of the joint resolution. I do this because the section as written seems to be based on section 111 of the act approved June 3, 1916. I wish to move an amendment, because section 1, as written in this joint resolution, is not only inconsistent with the section of the act of June 3, 1916, but is absolutely antagonistic to it. That will be seen at a glance. The period of enlistment, for instance, is definitely defined in the act of June 3, 1916, and is different from that prescribed in section 1 of this joint resolution. I therefore propose an amendment that will leave the President full authority to call out these troops, but does not base that authority in words upon section 111 of the act of June 3. Therefore, as the first amendment, I move to strike out all after the word "That," in line 3, on page 1, down to and including the word "that," in line 6, page 1.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, page 1, line 3, after the word "That," it is proposed to strike out the following words:

In the opinion of the Congress of the United States an emergency now exists which demands the use of troops in addition to the Regular Army of the United States, and that.

So that it will read:

That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to draft into the military service of the United States—

And so forth.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. So far as I am concerned, I can see no objection to the amendment. The Senator from Wyoming showed the amendment to me this morning before submitting it. The other amendments he intends to propose are along the same line. They leave the President with authority just the same.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Now, Mr. President, on page 2, after the word "States," in line 1, I move to strike out the remainder of line 1 and all of lines 2, 3, and 4.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, on page 2, line 1, after the word "States," it is proposed to strike out the following words:

Under the provisions of section 111 of the national defense act approved June 3, 1916, so far as the provisions of said section may be applicable and not inconsistent with the terms hereof.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have the same statement to make with reference to that amendment that I made concerning the one last offered by the Senator from Wyoming.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Then, on page 2, line 9, I move to strike out the words "the period of emergency," so that it will read "to serve for not exceeding three years, unless sooner discharged."

The words "not exceeding three years," which were proposed to be stricken out by the committee, have, as I understand, been restored.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, am I to understand that the chairman of the committee accepts that amendment?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes; it is part of the same proposition.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if that amendment is accepted, these men will be mustered into the service and be held in the service for three years.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. For not exceeding three years.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Not exceeding three years.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Not exceeding three years.

Mr. REED. If they are not to be released, they can be held whether there is war or peace; whether there is an emergency or no emergency. We propose simply to force the members of the National Guard into the Army, to remain there for a term of three years.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think the Senator from Missouri is mistaken about that. The members of the National Guard are already enlisted for a period of three years under the provisions of State laws generally.

Mr. REED. Yes; but they have not been drafted into the Regular Army, as is proposed to be done here in this joint resolution.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Let me say a word to the Senator from Missouri in answer to that suggestion. So far as I was personally concerned I was perfectly willing to leave in the joint resolution the language, "the period of the emergency," but some think that the trouble down in Mexico may last very much longer than three years. Then, if the period of enlistment is left uncertain, those troops may remain down there for five or six or seven years.

Mr. REED. But, Mr. President, we can limit the period of enlistment to three years, and yet we can relieve these men before the expiration of the three years if the emergency ceases to exist. If the emergency does exist for three years they will have to serve for three years, but if it is all over——

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. REED. When I have finished the sentence I shall do so. If the emergency is all over within six months, I do not want these men to be forced to stay in the Army of the United States, and if you undertake to do that you will have some serious trouble on hand.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. If the Senator will pardon me for just a moment, if he is fearful that any administration or any President of the United States would continue the militia in the regular service after the time their services were required—if the Senator holds that view I am perfectly willing to withdraw the amendment which I have proposed, and I do withdraw it.

Mr. REED. I have the view that that is possible. Therefore I object to the amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, before the Senator from Wyoming takes his seat I desire to say that this matter is disposed of by section 111 of the military reorganization law. We are not proposing, as I understand, to repeal that section or to modify it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Not at all.

Mr. CUMMINS. Well, section 111 provides that they shall be drafted during the period of the war.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Exactly so.

Mr. CUMMINS. And not during a period of emergency——

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is exactly so.

Mr. CUMMINS. But during the period of the war.

Mr. REED. Well, "war" and "emergency" must certainly be understood to be synonymous under the terms of the joint resolution.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not know; I will not attempt to determine whether we have a war with Mexico or not, but, at any rate, the power to draft is limited to the period of the war.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, on page 1, line 7, I move to strike out the word "draft" and insert in lieu thereof the word "call."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think we have followed the language of the act of June 3, 1916, and I hope the Senator will not seek to change the language here.

Mr. CURTIS. These men have volunteered. There is no use of employing the word "draft." I think we ought to change it and substitute the word "call," so that the President may "call" the National Guard if necessary.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Question!

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 7, after the words "authorized to," it is proposed to strike out "draft" and to insert the word "call."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, as I understand, the words in line 9, on page 2, "not exceeding three years," which are stricken out in the printed bill, have been restored.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Now, I move to insert, after the word "years," the following:

And in any event not longer than during the period of actual hostilities.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Wisconsin if the expression "actual hostilities" means while the fighting is going on? The Senator will recall that in 1899 the troops were kept in Cuba for some time after actual fighting had ceased pending the consideration of the treaty of peace. Troops would be needed under circumstances of that character, it seems to me.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Well, Mr. President, I should like to see their service terminated when hostilities actually cease.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I should like to see that myself.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think the term is one that will have a very plain meaning, and there will be no difficulty in its interpretation. When peace is concluded, if there should be war, then hostilities will certainly have terminated.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The conclusion of peace, I presume, will be upon the signing of a treaty. I think the question is of such importance that it would be well to be sure that no mistake is made.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, "for the period of the war" I think would be an accurate term, but I agree with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] in thinking that the words suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] "during the period of actual hostilities," would not be a definite term at all to prescribe how long a man who had been drafted was bound to serve. It seems to me that if it means anything different than for the period of the war, its meaning should be made very certain. I can well imagine that should there be a declaration of war before a formal peace should be concluded, there might be quite an extended period of time when actual fighting was not going on, and if our armed forces should prevail I can easily see that they might be required to remain as garrisons and as pacifying forces, although not engaged in actual hostilities. While I would have no objection to any other term, if it could be made accurate, that would effectuate the purpose desired, it seems to me that it is wisest not to put that in, but to leave it "during the period of the war," as the joint resolution already prescribes, "unless sooner discharged," and I assume that no administration would want to keep the militia in the service of the United States any longer than they were actually needed for the purposes of war. Therefore, I hope that the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin will not prevail.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Question!

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to offer an amendment, on page 1, line 6, by prefacing before the words "the President," the following:

In the opinion of the Congress of the United States a state of war now exists between the United States of America and the de facto government of Mexico.

Mr. President, we mortals are fond of deluding ourselves with phrases. I am weary, Mr. President, of listening longer to mere words. I shall express myself without reservation on the conditions as they now exist. The word "emergency" is more euphonious than the word "war." I can understand why the word "emergency" should frequently be used, but it does not fit present conditions.

In the press reports given out this morning, which I take to be authentic, the representative of the de facto government of Mexico in this Capital delivered to the proper diplomatic authority of our Government the following communication:

I am directed by my government to inform your excellency, with reference to the Carrizal incident, that the chief executive, through the Mexican war department, gave orders to Gen. Jacinto B. Trevino not to permit American forces from Gen. Pershing's column to advance farther south, nor to move either east or west from the points where they are located, and to oppose new incursions of American soldiers into Mexican territory. These orders were brought by Gen. Trevino to the attention of Gen. Pershing, who acknowledged the receipt of the communication relative thereto. On the 22d instant, as your excellency knows, an American force moved eastward quite far from its base, notwithstanding the above orders, and was engaged by Mexican troops at Carrizal, State of Chihuahua. As a result of the encounter, several men on both sides were killed and wounded and 17 American soldiers were made prisoners.

The Government of the United States, in response to this note, uses the following language:

I am instructed, therefore, by my Government to demand the immediate release of the prisoners taken in the encounter at Carrizal, together with any property of the United States taken with them, and to inform you that the Government of the United States expects an early statement from your government as to the course of action it wishes the Government of the United States to understand it has determined upon, and that it also expects that this statement be made through the usual diplomatic channels and not through subordinate military commanders.

After our men are shot, after we are forbidden to proceed to any point of the compass except due north, we have from our Chief Executive authority of this Government a request to the de facto government of Mexico to declare its intention. After I am slapped in the face, after my neighbors are shot, I cease to inquire from the assailant what his intentions are. I begin to entertain convictions he is engaged in hostilities. It is the height of diplomatic folly, the very acme of idiocy, as I look at it, from a governmental point of view, to go longer upon the idea that a mere emergency exists. If what has occurred in Mexico is an emergency merely, actual hostilities are become impossible.

Mr. President, what is a state of war? What can be done to make war? I suppose in diplomatic parlance, based upon the events of the last three years, it is simply the act of some individual against another individual. The de facto government of Mexico is engaged in making war upon some individual Americans who do not move to the point of the compass desired by the de facto government.

I am tired of this inane folly. Does Congress know what it is here for? Does the Senate understand what its powers are in this alleged emergency? The eighth section of Article I of the Constitution of the United States says that Congress has the power to declare war. We are declaring everything except what it is our sovereign duty now to declare. We are ambling placidly along, talking about everything except what actually exists.

For three and a half years, Mr. President, we have trusted the Executive to manage the Mexican imbroglio. What it has produced is known without my recital. It has produced a policy of "watchful waiting." It has produced missions to Mexico by unknown and uncredited diplomatic agents. It has produced a messenger to the border to deal with Villa, who was once a trusted friend of the administration, another to deal with Carranza, another to communicate the displeasure of this Government to Huerta at an earlier time, and to inform him that he was persona non grata in his own country. We were told that his title as either a legal or a de facto ruler was open to question; that he had been guilty of bloodshed; that he connived at the assassination of Madero. The President upon one occasion said that he had procured his information from members of the Ananias Club. I forbear to use the harsh phrase used by him in a public address. I can only diplomatically and in a parliamentary sense say that it seems from his conduct that he must have obtained it from some such source, if we are to measure the course of affairs by the ordinary diplomatic or war powers of any sovereign government.

I wish to remind the Senate, Mr. President, that on the 22d day of last March I introduced a resolution authorizing the President to call for 50,000 troops for use in this exact condition that has now presented itself to our country.

The senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] took occasion to make merry upon my lack of military knowledge and to inquire if I set myself up as an authority against the distinguished gentlemen who were in charge of the War Department or immediately connected with the Chief Executive. I did not pretend to do so, but I did pretend to have some of the ordinary instincts of prudence that belong to a sane and reasonable man. I am still laboring under that belief, possibly, Mr. President; but that resolution lies untouched upon the table of the Senate. For three months it has slumbered; and now Gen. Pershing is more than 400 miles from the border, surrounded by a hostile foe, with a country in arms, with his base of supplies liable to be cut off, and with an insufficient force to guard his rear or keep his communications open with this country. I was ridiculed at the time. I have a right to remind those who speak for and control the majority in this Chamber what I then said. It is in no spirit of exaltation for myself that I recur to it, Mr. President; but I expressed my fears at that time, and they are found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of that date.

Three months! What are they worth? A good deal. State militia of many States are now in camp. Are they drilled? No. Are they supplied with arms? No. Is there ammunition? No. Have the Cavalry regiments horses? No. Have they even horseshoers? No. With 7,000 men available in my own State, with a Cavalry regiment of 900 somewhat seasoned men, more than the average, they can not to-day get a horseshoer. A horseshoer is just as important to Cavalry as a well-shod foot is to the Infantry. Three months! How long did Kitchener say it took to drill an army? One year. Six months is the minimum period in which a raw recruit can be converted into a soldier fit to go on the field of battle.

What has happened? Three months of inaction; three months of "watchful waiting"; three months of lost time. To-day we have the Pershing expedition across the Mexican border, and there is not a soldier outside of the Regular Army fit for that service. They are not acclimated. They have not been inured to actual service. To obtain those soldiers we are withdrawing our men from coast defenses, from the fixed lines of communication, exposing our flank to an enemy seeking advantage, from all the places where the forces ought to remain. The world is in arms. We alone preserve a fictitious peace. We have sold to the world our war supplies, we have stripped our markets to create an export trade to bolster up a vicious economic policy, and to-day the men in my State who go down into their pockets to raise the money to equip our men with machine guns can not find a machine gun on the market that is purchasable for money. Either that, or the manufacturers tell them they can sell to no branch of the military service without the Government's imperative order. There is not a machine gun after three months of warning,

Mr. President. There is not an Aviation Corps after three months of warning. The machine gun is the outpost of quick defense for an army, and the flying squadron in the air is the eyes of an advanced army; and yet not one of them do we have more than we had three months ago. This is preparedness! We have wallowed in rhetoric, and waved the flag, and promptly gone to sleep on the picket line. We want less parade and more shoes, and horse sense.

This is "watchful waiting." This is American preparedness. This is the way we always muddle through, and every time we have muddled through it has been at the cost of my neighbors' boys' lives, in my lifetime. It has been at the expense of quick, efficient action. Here we are again—the same old story—and I charge deliberately the blunder that is worse than a crime charged against those in the conduct of this affair that have slumbered upon their duties for three long months, neglecting or refusing to be ready to push an expedition across the line and into the interior to clean northern Mexico as it has deserved and needed for more than three long years.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do.

Mr. ASHURST. I am called out on a very important matter, and I want to vote this evening.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I hope we may.

Mr. SHERMAN. I prefer to conclude.

Mr. ASHURST. I want to vote.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I shall read the following:

The lack of machine guns means the death of American soldiers. To send our men into the field without them is nothing less than a Government crime.

A group of Chicago's public-spirited citizens have determined that this crime shall not be perpetrated if they can help it. As a result of the prompt and generous action of a committee consisting of Charles Gates Dawes, J. Ogden Armour, Julius Rosenwald, James A. Patten, Samuel Insull, and A. J. Earling, the first steps to prevent it have been taken. The first step, in the absence of action by the Government, is to provide money. These men have subscribed enough money for 20 machine guns.

The next thing is to get them. The manufacturers are willing to provide them, but their entire output for months ahead is contracted for use in the European war.

This constitutes an emergency. It can be met only by the Government. It is up to the President and Congress to meet it. The national need is paramount. An agreement for immediate delivery can be arranged through diplomatic channels.

There is one way in which they can be had. If this be a declaration of war, and not a mere declaration of an emergency, then the Government possesses the sovereign power to commandeer the manufacturers and take the required number of machine guns to equip our troops.

This is a problem that can not be shirked. Machine guns mean American lives. Every life lost in Mexico because of the Government's culpable failure to make provision for this emergency will be chargeable directly to the administration and to Congress.

I have read an editorial from the Chicago Tribune of recent date. I should be derelict in the performance of a duty did I not call attention, in closing, to the fact that the resolution has slumbered on the table for three months while we have walked in the imprudent man's paradise, hoping and thinking that the usual luck of our country would extricate us from the trouble.

Only the lateness of the hour prevents me from an extended review of the situation. I will reserve that for some opportune time, and then incorporate in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the details of the steps that I think mark the most disgraceful era in the diplomatic history of our Republic.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon moves to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I thought I had been recognized.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri was recognized, but a motion to lay on the table is always in order.

Mr. STONE. I did not know that a Senator could take me off the floor by any means.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator can not be taken off the floor without his consent.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If I have seemed to try to take the Senator off his feet, I most humbly beg his pardon. I did not intend to do that, and did not see that the Senator had risen.

Mr. STONE. I know the Senator did not.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri has the floor.

Mr. STONE. I just want to say a word. I rose to make the same motion, but I desire to preface it with a single observation.

The Senator from Illinois stated that on a former occasion I had twitted him because of his lack of military knowledge. With equally good reason I might now twit him with a lack of parliamentary knowledge, or a sense of parliamentary propriety, when he offers what is, in effect, a declaration of war as an amendment to a joint resolution pending before the Senate. I do the Senator the justice of supposing that he really knows better than that, but that he was merely seeking an opportunity to make a political harangue. It is only a few days ago that his ears were delighted with the huzzas of an employed gallery in Chicago, when his name was feebly mentioned as a possible candidate for the Presidency.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire will state it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the rules forbid the criticism of a Senator in the language the Senator from Missouri is using.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objections to it. If I can not take care of myself, I will never complain.

Mr. STONE. Well, Mr. President, I do not care to pursue the subject, except I was about to say that this is, of course, but an echo of those influences here to-day.

Mr. President, I renew the motion of the Senator from Oregon to lay this amendment on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri moves to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from Illinois.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President, I desire to offer, without discussion, the following amendment to the joint resolution:

On page 3, at the bottom of section 2, on line 19, after the word "discharge," I move to insert the following:

That the sum of $1,000,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under direction of the Secretary of War and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, for the purpose of maintaining, at a cost of not more than $35 per month, the family of each enlisted man of the National Guard called or drafted into the service of the United States until his discharge therefrom, which family during the term of service of said enlisted man has no other income, except his pay, adequate for the support of said family; and the word "family" shall include wife, dependent mothers, fathers, and sisters, as well as brothers under the age of 14 years.

Mr. FLETCHER. I make the point of order that that amendment has been voted on.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained. The amendment is not in order in Committee of the Whole. The bill is in Committee of the Whole and open to further amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I ask if the point of order was sustained.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order was sustained because the amendment has been agreed to as in Committee of the Whole and is not subject to further amendment as in Committee of the Whole. The Senator from South Dakota has the right to offer it again in the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I shall offer it at a later date.

Mr. GRONNA. I presume the Senator from South Dakota merely intended to give notice that he would offer this amendment in the Senate.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Dakota presents an amendment, and the question is on agreeing to it. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it. The noes have it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was rejected.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time and passed.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 15836, the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I understand the Senator from Alabama is willing to temporarily lay aside the Post Office appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. THOMAS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. May I ask the Senator from Colorado to withdraw that motion until I submit a conference report?

Mr. THOMAS. Very well.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14484) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 8, 15, 16, 24, 27, 30, 32, 35, 36, and 37.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, 11, 12, 13, 14, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 25, 26, 28, 29, 31, 33, 34, 38, and 39, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 12, line 2, strike out "$20," and insert "$12"; and the Senate agree to the same.

CHARLES F. JOHNSON,
MILES POINDEXTER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
JOE J. RUSSELL,
WILLIAM A. ASHBROOK,
CHARLES E. FULLER,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13486) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3, 4, 5, 18, 19, 20, 21, and 23.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 22, 24, 26, and 27, and agreed to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 1, line 8, strike out "$36" and insert "$30"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 26, line 22, strike out "$50" and insert "$40"; and the Senate agree to the same.

CHARLES F. JOHNSON,
MILES POINDEXTER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
JOE J. RUSSELL,
WILLIAM A. ASHBROOK,
CHARLES E. FULLER,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 15836) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will state for the information of the Senate that I have no idea of proceeding at any length with the bill to-night, but the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] will be absent from the city to-morrow, and there are some amendments which he wishes to present. That was my chief object in asking that the Senate remain for a short time to hear his amendments and act upon them.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Virginia that they will lead to no discussion. The Senator is fully aware of the amendments I intend to offer.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will say further that, when that is over, I will ask the Senate to take a recess until 10.30 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is a very inopportune hour. The Committee on the District of Columbia is considering that important appropriation bill. The committee meets at 10.30 to-morrow morning. Of course I am just as anxious as is the Senator from Virginia to have the bill considered. I want to help him all I can.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The situation is just this: When the Government purchased the Alaska Railroad they paid $650,000 on account of it and stipulated that they would pay another $650,000 the 1st day of July, 1916. The contract contains a provision forfeiting the $650,000 already paid unless the payment is made by the 1st day of July.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will not make any objection. I am fully satisfied that the District of Columbia appropriation bill will inevitably go over, that we shall not be able to pass it before the fiscal year ends. This bill is, of course, more important in view of what the Senator has stated.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The consequences from the nonpassage of the bill would be so serious that I hope as many Senators as possible will be here to-morrow morning at 10.30 to enable the Senate to dispose of the bill.

I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read for action on the committee amendments, with the exception that the amendments which the Senator from Utah desires to offer may be considered before the committee amendments are taken up, as he will not be here to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SMOOT. On page 33, line 24, I move to strike out "$3,000,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$3,025,000, of which sum $25,000 shall be available for the above-named purposes for the fiscal year 1916."

I wish to state briefly the object of the amendment. The custodian forces of the Treasury Department can not be paid longer than day after to-morrow out of the money that is appropriated for them, so the $25,000 is provided for in this amendment. The Assistant Secretary came to the Senate Chamber a short time ago and stated that it would cost within a very few dollars of $25,000, and I have an estimate here that will be printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. On page 58, after the words "present session," in line 11, I move to insert the following proviso:

Provided further, That the plot of ground west of Ashmead Place and between it and Rock Creek, and the plot of ground west of Twentieth Street NW., and between it and Rock Creek, which were included in the first official map and excluded by the commission from the second map, be, and are hereby, reincluded as a part of the connecting parkway between Potomac Park, the Zoological Park, and Rock Creek Park.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I have no objection to that amendment. I think it is a proper one.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. On page 123, under the heading, "National parks," after line 13, I move to insert under the "Department of the Interior, national monuments":

For a proportionate share of the amount required to construct an interstate wagon road or highway through the Mukuntuweap National Monument, Utah, approximately 15 miles, the sum of $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. On page 138, after line 16, I move to insert:

Supreme Court of the United States: For nine law clerks, one for the Chief Justice and one for each Associate Justice, at not exceeding $3,600 each per annum, $32,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. That is all.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move that the Senate take a recess until 10.30 to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 7 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Tuesday, June 27, 1916, at 10.30 a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, June 26, 1916.

The House met at 10.30 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art the author of all good, the dispenser of every gift, the inspiration of every great thought and deed, Thy spirit be in us that we may not only exist, but think and act in accordance with the highest conceptions of truth, that we may meet all the exigencies of life and acquit ourselves like men in every crisis, as individuals and as a Nation, to the honor and glory of Thy holy name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, June 24, 1916, was read and approved.

MEXICO.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a copy of the note of the Secretary of State to the secretary of foreign relations of the de facto government of Mexico. Some days ago I made that request, and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] stated that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] had incorporated it in his remarks; but I find from reading his remarks that it was not this note, but the note which the Secretary of State had sent to certain foreign Governments other than Mexico.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] asks unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the note of Secretary Lansing, Secretary of State, to the secretary of foreign affairs of the de facto government of Mexico. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

APPLICATION OF THE HOMESTEAD LAW TO ALASKA.
